The challenge of this second election was immediate. It was made in this action brought in the Court of Appeal on the 5th July, 1928, by the respondents, Mr. Agius and Mr. Grima, on behalf of the Trade Union Council as a whole, and Dr. Mizzi as President and delegate of the Societa dei Piloti, and by a unanimous judgment of that Court, delivered on the 14th August, 1928, it was held, as it had been held on the occasion of the previous election, that the only body competent to elect members for the two seats in the Senate, now in question, was the Trade Union Council recognised by the Governor by Government Notices Nos. 93 and 303 of 1927: and that the election of the appellants, Messrs. Mifsud and Borg, by the constituency named only in Government Notice No. 93 was null and void. As to the claim of the appellant, Mr. Mifsud, that under Article 16 of the Regulations of the 30th September, 1926, he was entitled to remain a member of the Trade Union Council up to the 31st December, 1928, the Court of Appeal held that he had thereunder no vested right to remain an elector or an eligible candidate, as these regulations were merely a ministerial measure and, as such, subordinate to the absolute right of the Governor to recognise from time to time the persons who should form the Trade Union Council for the purposes of the Letters Patent. These persons, for the election in question, and as representatives of the Unione, were those named in Government Notice No. 303 of 1927.

Special leave to appeal from this judgment, as has been already stated, was granted by His Majesty in Council on the 5th November, 1928.

Now their Lordships in the above recital have refrained from referring to the many topics, both of law and of constitutional practice, which were discussed before them by learned counsel on both sides. They have referred only to those matters which seem in some sense relevant to the preliminary question to the consideration of which they now proceed, viz., whether His Majesty can be advised by them further to entertain this appeal.

The clause of the Letters Patent which deals with this matter is Art. 33, and is in the following terms:—

“All questions which may arise as to the right of any person to be or remain a member of the Senate or the Legislative Assembly shall be referred to and decided by Our Court of Appeal in Malta.”

To their Lordships, these words appear to be clear and distinct. They direct that all questions touching the membership either of the Senate or Legislative Assembly created by the Letters Patent themselves shall “be referred to and decided” not by the First Hall of the Civil Court, or any Court of first instance, but by the Court of Appeal of Malta, the highest judicial tribunal of the Island. Even if their Lordships had in this matter been without authority to guide them, they would have been led by the words themselves to the clear conclusion that His Majesty had advisedly designated His Court of Appeal in Malta finally to determine all these questions. It appears to their Lordships that the section being found in Letters Patent, in which His Majesty's own words are used, gains in this respect an added significance, the force of which ought to have full effect given to it.

But this view is, their Lordships find, fully confirmed by the authorities, of which *Theberge v. Laundry*¹ is the most notable.

In that case, which dealt, as this does, with questions relating to the membership of legislative bodies, it is pointed out that decisions upon such matters are not decisions of mere ordinary civil rights; that such an enactment as this Art. 33 creates an entirely novel jurisdiction; the history of which, in cases where the legislative assembly is not itself then created for the first time, has been that the assembly has, by its own consent, concurred in vesting in the Court the jurisdiction hitherto inherent in itself of determining the status of those who claim to be its members. The jurisdiction is extremely special: it is of a character that ought, as soon as possible, to become conclusive, in order that the constitution of the assembly may be distinctly and speedily known. There is another reason for finality in such a jurisdiction. It concerns what, according to British ideas, are normally the rights and privileges of the Assembly itself, always jealously maintained and guarded in complete independence of the Crown so far as they properly exist, and as Lord Cairns adds in delivering the judgment of the Board in Theberge v. Laundry:

"It would be a result somewhat surprising, and hardly in consonance with the general scheme of the legislation, if, with regard to rights and privileges of this kind, it were to be found that in the last resort the determination of them no longer belonged to the Legislative Assembly, no longer belonged to the Superior Court which the Legislative Assembly had put in its place, but belonged to the Crown in Council, with the advice of the advisers of the Crown at home, to be determined without reference either to the judgment of the Legislative Assembly, or of that Court which the Legislative Assembly had substituted in its place. . . . their Lordships have to consider, not whether there are express words here taking away prerogative, but whether there ever was the intention of creating this tribunal with the ordinary incident of an appeal to the Crown."

It is true that these words were spoken in a case where the special tribunal had been created with the consent of the Legislative Assembly; and not as, in this instance, where the Assembly is itself brought into existence by the Letters Patent, which also confer this jurisdiction on the Court of Appeal. But, as it appears to their Lordships, His Majesty, in these Letters Patent is merely adopting principles, to which all Lord Cairns's reasoning applies. He assumes that any enlightened legislative body would itself choose just such a tribunal as he himself prescribes for the determination of all such questions: accordingly, he creates a jurisdiction in terms of finality which leave no room for any review by himself.

And the history of this case, as their Lordships have detailed it, serves to demonstrate the convenience of the course in this instance taken. The action impugning the election here was commenced on the 5th July, 1928: the decision of the Court of Appeal was given in little more than a month—on the 14th August, 1928. It is more than a year later that this appeal comes before the Board.

Their Lordships would also permit themselves this further observation. While not intimating any opinion on the merits or otherwise of the appeal—although these were fully argued before them—they cannot refrain from expressing their satisfaction that the Court of Appeal was able to uphold, in principle, an election at which the Unione would have been fully represented by delegates whose views, it seems, would have adequately reflected the then opinions of their constituents, the members of the Unione. The position of the Unione in either of the two impugned elections was very different, as their Lordships have pointed out. It cannot be too clearly understood that the first duty of the Governor in recognising any Trade Union Council is to see that it represents, so far as is possible, the views of the ultimate constituents who are represented by its members. The views, as such, of any political party in the State—whether those of the Government or of the Opposition, or of any other group, should not be allowed to enter into the question of recognition at all.

Upon the whole matter, and for the reasons given, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be not further entertained. The appellants must pay to the respondents the costs they have incurred in resisting it.

The Court delivered the following

Ramesam, J.

JUDGMENTS. Ramesam, J.—This appeal raises an important question of procedure. The facts out of which the matter arises may be stated. One Perumal Naidu died in Madras in 1924 leaving his sister Ammani Ammal. A brother of his named Ramaswami Naidu predeceased him. One M. Narayanawami Naidu, who is a brother of Govindammal, widow of Ramaswami Naidu, applied for letters of administration to the estate of Perumal Naidu. That application was O. P. No. 106 of 1924. Letters of administration were granted to him on the 5th February, 1925, after notice to Ammani Ammal and to Govindammal.

The present application was filed on the 17th of August, 1929, praying that the letters of administration granted to Narayanaswami Naidu should be recalled. The grounds disclosed in the affidavit accompanying this application are that Narayanaswami Naidu in his application of 1924 claimed to be the adopted son of Ammani Ammal but as a matter of fact he was not the adopted son, that Ammani Ammal was made to appear to consent to the former order by being induced to put her mark to certain papers the contents of which she was not able to understand clearly and that, in short, her consent was procured fraudulently. This application was filed under S. 263 of the Indian Succession Act and O. 34, R. 54 of the Original Side Rules by means of a Judge's Summons and a Citation. Narayanaswami Naidu appeared on the Judge's Summons and filed an application with an affidavit on the 27th of August, 1929, and opposed the application on the merits and also contended that the application by way of Judge's Summons and Citation under R. 54 does not lie. The matter came on before our brother Krishnan Pandalai, J., on the 6th of September, and he passed an order to this effect: "Issue Citation under O. 34, R. 62. Number as a T.O.S." And on the defendant's application, he passed the following order: "The applicant has now taken out a Citation under O. 34, R. 62, and does not press this Judge's Summons. Costs to be provided for in costs in the T.O.S. in Citation." The matter again came on before our brother Eddy, J., on the 27th of September, when he passed the following order: "Leave to amend and reserve Citation. Adjourned until October 3rd." On the 3rd of October further orders were passed as follows: "Citation having been amended by consent, no order except that the applicant do have the costs of this application." It is against this last order that the present appeal is filed.

The learned advocate for the respondent takes a preliminary objection that this appeal does not lie. As the order of the learned Judge finally disposes of the application of Narayanaswami Naidu and awards costs, we think that this is a final order and an appeal lies. We overrule the preliminary objection.

The amendment ordered by Eddy, J., and made pursuant to his Order amends the Citation into a form similar to No. 99 at page 923 of the 16th Edition of Tristram and Coote's Probate Practice. This order was passed apparently on the ground that there is no form in the Original Side Rules expressly providing for a matter of this kind and that therefore O. 34, R. 62 applies. This brings in the practice and procedure of the Probate Division of the High Court of Justice in England. That is why Form No. 99 already mentioned has been adopted. It is now contended before us that there is no need for bringing in the English practice and for relying on R. 62. Rule 54 applies to a case where a person to whom the grant of probate or letters of administration has been made desires to have the same revoked. The case where a person other than the grantee of the probate or letters of administration desires that the grant may be revoked has got to be provided for, and as I will presently show, R. 57 was intended to provide for such a case. Reading the opening words of the rule, "If, subsequent to the grant of probate or letters of administration with the will annexed any person interested in the property of the testator, other than the grantee," etc., one would think that R. 57 was intended to apply only to cases where probate or letters of administration with the will annexed has been granted and a person other than the grantee desires revocation of the grant. But continuing to read the rule we find it contains a provision that the Registrar shall issue a Citation in Form No. 123 or 124. Form No. 123 refers to a case where probate was granted and where it is desired that the grant should be revoked. Form No. 124 refers to a case where letters of administration were granted but a will had been discovered afterwards or some other reason existed why the letters of administration should not be granted and it was desired that the grant should be revoked. It does not refer to a case where letters of administration without a will were granted. Thus it appears to directly conflict with the rule referring to it. Reading R. 57 with Form No. 124 we have only two alternatives before us so far as letters of administration are concerned: (1) the rule and the form contradict each other which is meaningless, or (2) the rule was intended to apply to cases of all letters of administration either with the will annexed or without will and the form illustrates one of the cases where letters of administration were granted without any will. The latter mode of construction commends itself to us. The omission of the case of grant of mere letters of administration without a will in R. 57 seems to be a slip. Rule 54 provides for the grant of probate or letters of administration but where the grantee desires revocation of the grant. Rule 57 was obviously intended to apply to cases of grant of probate or letters of administration but where a person other than the grantee desires revocation of the grant. That this was the general object of Rule 57 is shown by Form No. 124 and we ought to construe the rule in the light thrown by the form. So read, we think that R. 57 of O. 34 taken with Form No. 124 applies to this case and there is no need to bring in O. 34, R. 62. We invite the attention of the Registrar to this fact so that proper steps might be taken to make the language of R. 57 clear.

The learned advocate for the respondent does not object to the citation. His anxiety seems to be that if the Citation is issued under R. 57 the burden of proof would be on him but if the Citation is issued under the English Form the burden of proof will be upon the appellant, and he wants to avoid the onus on himself. I do not think that the burden of proof necessarily changes with the form adopted. On this matter, I agree with the observations of my learned brother and the respondent's burden may be lightened by the conduct of the appellant in the former proceedings and other considerations, and may be even shifted and I do not propose to say anything further on this matter. At present we hold that the Citation ought to be issued under O. 34, R. 57. The Order of Eddy, J., is set aside and a Citation in Form No. 124 with the necessary changes will now issue.

Having regard to the considerable doubt resting in the matter and the way in which the rules are drafted, we do not think this is a matter in which Narayanaswami Naidu ought to have costs of the application. Costs of the parties including court-fee will abide the result of the enquiry.

Cornish, J.

Cornish, J.—I do not think that there was any need to have had recourse to R. 62, O. 34. Form No. 124, which is the form of Citation directed to be used by R. 57, specifically applies to the calling in of a grant of letters of administration, which has been made upon the footing of an intestacy. Reading the rule with the Form, therefore, it appears that the rule was intended to embrace proceedings to revoke grants of letters of administration, although in terms the rule mentions probate and letters of administration with will annexed only. There is no reason why a different procedure should be followed in the case of revoking a grant of letters of administration to that which is prescribed by the rule for the revocation of a grant of probate. In the one case the object is to compel the party who has obtained the probate to propound the will, and in the result the suit becomes one for proving the will in solemn form of law. And in the other case, the object is to compel the party who has obtained the grant of administration to establish such a degree of relationship with the deceased as will entitle him to the grant, and in the result it becomes an interest suit. (See Tristram and Coote's Probate Practice, 16th Edition, page 427.)

As there was some discussion by the learned counsel upon the question of onus of proof in the testamentary suit which follows upon the issue of a Citation under the rule, it may be pointed out that where a will has to be proved in solemn form "the onus probandi lies upon the party propounding a will, who must satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument propounded is the last will of a free and capable testator": Barry v. Butlin.¹ But when, as here, the deceased died intestate and was a Hindu, the party whose grant of administration has been called in must satisfy the Court that a grant can be made to him under section 218 (1), Indian Succession Act, that he is, in the words of the section, "a person who, according to the rules for the distribution of the estate applicable in the case of such deceased, would be entitled to the estate or any part of such deceased's estate."

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 147—Scope of—Order in the nature of mandatory injunction—Legality.

The Magistrate has power, under S. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to pass an order directing the removal of obstruction to pathways, even though such an order may be in the nature of a mandatory injunction. The Amendment Act of 1923 (XVIII of 1923) has not altered the law in this respect.

Hari Mati Dasi v. Hari Dasi, (1925) 30 C.W.N. 238, not followed.

Petition under sections 435, 437 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Peddapur, dated 4th June, 1929, and made in M.P. No. 1 of 1929:

V. Ramadoss and K. Subba Rao for petitioner.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is a petition by the first counter-petitioner in the Lower Court to revise an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Peddapur passed under section 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code “prohibiting the respondents from putting up any bunds across the channel in their field and from interfering with the petitioner’s removing the obstructions already put up,” namely, “the four small cross-bunds and that part of the bund higher up which is across the channel and no further.”

Venkanna
v.
Venkata
Surya
Neeladri
Rao.

Three objections are raised to this order: (1) that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace on which such an order could be justified; (2) that the Magistrate had not found, as he ought to have done, that the petitioner was entitled to the use of the water flowing down the channel in question; and (3) that the terms of the order passed by the Magistrate are in violation of section 147 according to which an order in the nature of a mandatory injunction ought not to be passed.

As to the likelihood of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate has in my opinion given good reasons for thinking that there was such likelihood. Proceedings were started on the 27th December, 1928, by an application by the petitioner in the Magistrate’s Court for action under section 144. The counter-petitioners sought to defeat that petition by the plea that the apprehended obstruction to the water-course was already completed, but the petitioner represented that such was not the case. Thereupon, on the 19th February, 1929, a preliminary order under section 147 was passed, the previous order under section 144 being vacated. In these circumstances the Magistrate was justified in thinking that the danger of a breach of the peace was not over.

As to the right of the petitioner to the flow of water down this channel, it was not necessary for the Magistrate to find that a right of easement strictly so-called was established. Section 147 says “Whether such right be claimed as an easement or otherwise”. All that he had to find and which he has in fact found, is that the petitioner had been for a long time using the water flowing down this channel and had in fact used it during the last monsoon.

The last is perhaps the most important objection and arises upon the form of words, used by the Magistrate in framing the

v.
Venkata
Surya
Neeladri

order, which I have already set forth at the beginning of this judgment. To the first portion no objection can be taken because it merely prohibits the counter-petitioners from putting up any bunds across the channel in their field. But objection is taken that the latter half of the order, where it prohibits interference with the petitioner's removing the obstructions already put up, amounts really to an order requiring the counter-petitioners to remove the bund which they have already put up and this, it is contended, the Magistrate has no power to do. This portion of the order as it stands indicates that the Magistrate thought that the petitioner might lawfully remove any portion of the bund which was obstructing the flow of the water and that he intended to prevent the counter-petitioners from interfering with the petitioner in exercising such right of removing the obstruction. The order does not really require the counter-petitioners to do anything. All that it says is that if the petitioner removes the obstruction, the counter-petitioners are to do nothing. I think this form of order is unsuitable, if not objectionable, if for no other reason than that it is likely to produce a recurrence of breach of the peace which such orders are intended to prevent. It contemplates the petitioner going upon the counter-petitioners' land and removing the bund and it requires the counter-petitioners to let him do so without hindrance. Such a situation is easily capable of producing a breach of the peace. That portion of the order therefore requires amendment.

But I will first deal with the objection of the learned advocate for the petitioner here (counter-petitioner below) that an order in the nature of a mandatory injunction must not be passed under section 147. For this reliance was placed upon a decision of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Hari Mati Dasi v. Hari Dasi Dasi.¹ In that case the first party complained that the second party raised a wall on her own land blocking the windows of the house of the first party thereby shutting out light and air from the rooms of the house. The Magistrate having found that light and air was obstructed as alleged made an order upon the second party that she should demolish the new wall within a period of one month. The learned Judges said that sub-section 2 of section 147 does not give the Magistrate any power directing one of the parties to do a positive act by way of a mandatory injunction directing him to demolish the wall built by her, and they further said that the power given under section 147 (2) is analogous to the power of a Civil Court to grant a temporary injunction. Against that decision of the Calcutta High Court there is the decision of a Bench of this Court in Karuppanna Goundan v. Kandaswami Goundan.² In that case a pathway had been obstructed and the Magistrate had ordered that the obstruction, which was a fence, should be removed by the party who had put it up. The point being raised that that order was incorrect on the same ground as that now urged for the petitioner here, this Court held after referring to two earlier decisions of this Court that such an argument was not maintainable. Their Lordships said that they were not prepared to follow those decisions if it was intended to decide therein that the fact that section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code expressly provides for an order by the Magistrate directing the removal of obstruction to pathways necessarily implies that a similar order cannot be passed in proceedings taken under section 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This decision of a Bench of this Court is binding upon me. But it is said that that decision was given under the old Criminal Procedure Code and that section 147 as amended in 1923 makes such an order illegal though it may have been possible under the old Code. With that argument I cannot agree. Section 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, before it was amended in 1923, dealt, like the present section, with disputes concerning the right of use of any land or water and it enabled the Magistrate, if such right was found to exist, to make an order "permitting such a thing to be done or directing that such a thing should not be done." The corresponding provision of the section as it now stands is that if the dispute exists "regarding any alleged right of user of any land or water" the Magistrate is empowered on his being satisfied about the existence of such a right, whether it be claimed as an easement or otherwise, to "make an order prohibiting any interference with the exercise of such rights." The order under the old section was directed to the person alleging that he was entitled to the right. The order under the new section is where the right exists directed to the person who is interfering with the right. Such an order is valid so long as it merely prohibits the interference with the exercise of the rights. I do not see how from this difference any inference is to be derived as to the propriety or otherwise of what may be generally called mandatory injunctions. Indeed Form No. 24 in

v.
Venkata
Surya
Neeladri
Rao.

Venkanna
v.
Venkata
Surya
Neeladri
Rao.

Schedule V of the Criminal Procedure Code seems rather to favour the argument that what might in effect amount to a mandatory injunction is permissible. In that form, in the second paragraph, the words of the order that the Magistrate may pass are "I do order . . . shall not take (or retain) possession of the said land (or water) to the exclusion of the enjoyment of the right of use aforesaid." That form is applicable to the use of land or water and it contemplates an order against a person who has interfered with another man's use of land or water that he shall not retain possession of that land or water in violation of that user. In one sense it may be said that that is a mandatory injunction because it requires the person enjoined to give up possession to the other party. I do not see what objection can be raised to using the same form as against a person who has put up an obstruction to the flow of water to which another man is entitled, modified in the following way: "I order that . . . shall not retain any obstruction to the flow of water along the said channel to the exclusion of the enjoyment of the right of user of" or words to that effect; or alternatively "I order that . . . shall not retain possession of the said water to the exclusion of the enjoyment of the right of user of" Either form would amount to the same thing in effect and involve upon the person enjoined the removal of any obstruction which he had put up. I am, therefore, unable to say that the amendment of section 147 has had any effect in so far as making the decision in *Karuppanna Goundan v. Kandaswami Goundan*² inapplicable.

As, however, the form of order used by the Magistrate is not suitable, that order will be amended by omitting the words "from interfering with the petitioner's removing the obstructions already put up" and substituting therefor the words "from retaining any obstruction to the petitioner's use of the water flowing along the channel in their field." With this amendment the petition is dismissed.

PRESENT:—LORD THANKERTON, SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON AND SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.

The Firm of Senaji Kapurchand and others .. *Appellants
v.

The Firm of Pannaji Devichand .. Respondents.

Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913), S. 4—Unregistered firms carrying on business and consisting of more than 20 persons—Illegal partnership.

Where the total number of persons constituting four unregistered firms, carrying on business, consisted of 22 persons, such a partnership would be illegal, having regard to the provisions of S. 4, Sub-S. (2) of the Indian Companies Act, 1913.

Judgment of the High Court, Madras, affirmed.

Appeal No. 109 of 1929 by special leave against a decree of the High Court, Madras, dated the 11th August, 1926, reported in *Firm of Pannaji Devichand v. Kapurchand*¹; which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bellary, dated the 1st December, 1921, and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

The plaintiffs instituted their suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court, Bellary, on the 24th October, 1918. They were three firms, one consisting of four and two consisting each of five partners. They alleged that on the 13th October, 1918, they and the defendants, another firm consisting of eight partners, entered into a partnership agreement regarding the sale of some 2,000 bales of yarn belonging to the firm of the defendants who resided and carried on business at Gadag.

For the purpose of the present report it is only necessary to state that the plaintiff alleged that the partnership had become dissolved by expiry of time and the plaintiffs were entitled to claim the winding up of the joint business and call on the defendants for true and accurate accounts of the partnership and to pay the plaintiffs what was due to them. They valued their claim for the purpose of jurisdiction at Rs. 22,500 and prayed that the defendants be called upon to produce their accounts regarding the disposal of the 2,000 bales above referred to, and that after providing for payment of liabilities incurred, the surplus of the partnership business be distributed according to the shares set out in the agreement.

The defendant firm filed a written statement, in which the allegations set out in the plaint were traversed.

The Subordinate Judge, after hearing evidence, decreed the plaintiffs' claim to recover from the defendant firm Rs. 8,343-12-0, but in other respects dismissed the suit. A decree was passed accordingly.

From the said decree both the plaintiffs and the defendants appealed to the High Court.

The two appeals were heard together by Kumaraswami Sastri, Offg. C.J., and Curgenvén, J., who delivered judgment on the 11th August, 1926. Their judgment is reported in *Firm of Pannaji Devichand v. Kapurchand*¹. They stated that when the appeal came on for hearing it was found that the number of persons constituting the four firms which were said to have entered into the alleged partnership to deal with the goods therein set out consisted of 22 persons; that according to section 4, sub-section (2) of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, no company, association or partnership, consisting of more than 20 persons, shall be formed for the purpose of carrying on any business (other than banking) that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association or partnership, or individual members thereof, unless it is registered as a company under the Act or formed in pursuance of some other Act or Letters Patent. In the learned Judges' opinion, on the face of the plaint there were more than 20 persons combined to carry on the business mentioned in the plaint and share in the profits. Contentions on behalf of the plaintiffs that there was no business carried on within the meaning of section 4 of the Act, and that though each of the four firms which joined together to carry on business might consist of a number of persons, yet for the purpose of section 4 only the number of the firms and not the number of the persons should be counted, were negatived by the Court. The learned Judges were of opinion (relying on the decision reported in *Akola Gin Combination v. Northcote Ginning Factory*²) that having regard to the plaint itself the alleged partnership was illegal, having regard to section 4 of the Companies Act. They held that the suit failed and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any decree. They, therefore, allowed the defendants' appeal and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs, and dismissed the plaintiffs' appeal without costs. The other questions arising in the memoranda of appeal were not discussed.

From the said decree of the High Court the plaintiffs appealed by special leave to His Majesty in Council.

Hindu Law—Will—Construction—Devise to wife—"Heir"—Absolute estate.

There is no rule of Hindu Law that in the case of immoveable property given or devised by a husband to his wife, the wife has no power to alienate unless the power of alienation is conferred upon her in express terms. If words are used conferring absolute ownership upon the wife, she enjoys the rights of ownership without their being conferred by express and additional terms, unless the circumstances or the context are sufficient to show that such absolute ownership was not intended.

A Hindu testator by his will gave the residue of his property to his two widows and his son's widow, in the following terms: "The three persons are the heirs (waris) to whatever is left from the property".

Held, that on its true construction, and on consideration of all the terms of the will, the intention of the testator was to confer upon each of his two widows and his widowed daughter-in-law full proprietary rights in a one-third share of the residue of his estate, and that there was nothing in the circumstances or in the context to indicate that it was the intention of the testator to limit the estate of any of the three devisees to a life-estate or to a limited estate similar to a "widow's estate" under the law of inheritance.

Judgment of the Judicial Commissioner, N.-W.F. Province, reversed.

Appeal No. 3 of 1929 from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, North-West Frontier Province, Peshawar, dated the 25th July, 1927, which modified a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Peshawar, dated the 1st July, 1926.

The main question for determination on the present appeal was the right of the original plaintiffs to succeed to the property of one Mul Chand on the death of his last surviving widow, Musamat Sahib Devi, and this question turned upon the true construction of the will, dated 26th July, 1891, of the said Mul Chand. The material passages from the will are set out in their Lordships' judgment. The important clause of the will (by which the testator nominated the ladies as his waris or heirs), is as follows, in the vernacular:—

"Werwa Patyan hunda barabar Patyan tin rahyan."

"Mata Wadi—Chhoti—Bawa Sundar di wohoti—Is jaedad se faltu kharch kad kar jo rah jawe tin shakhs waris hain—Jo muafi di paidawari karne Narsingh Das Shalig Ram riha."

The English translation of this clause is given at page 442 beginning "As regards the details of shares."

Sir Lancelot
 Sanderson.

SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON.—This is an appeal by the defendants in the suit against a decree of the Judicial Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province, dated the 25th of July, 1927, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Peshawar, dated the 1st of July, 1926, and decreed the major portion of the plaintiffs' claim.

The suit was brought by Hukam Chand and Charanjit Lal, alleging that they were the reversionary heirs of one Mul Chand and that on the death of his last surviving widow, Musammatt Sahib Devi, they were entitled to recover possession of the properties specified in the plaint, which they alleged were in the possession of the defendants, and which were originally the ancestral property of the said Mul Chand. Hukam Chand died pendente lite and is now represented by Musammat Sitan Devi, the second respondent.

The defendants claim title to the said properties by transfer either "inter vivos" or by will from the said Musammat Sahib Devi.

Mul Chand was a Baba or Hindu priest, who lived in Peshawar city, and the properties in suit consist chiefly of houses in Peshawar city and some revenue-free land near Peshawar, the revenue of which had been assigned by Government to a shrine known as Devi Dawara.

The Subordinate Judge who tried the case in the first instance dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, who allowed the appeal and remanded the suit to the Subordinate Judge for the decision of certain issues which the Subordinate Judge had left undecided.

On the further hearing on remand the Subordinate Judge made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for possession of one-third of the properties numbered 3 and 11, and for redemption of the mortgaged property numbered 8, on payment of the mortgage money and costs and the amount spent in reconstruction of the property after a fire, namely, Rs. 5,749. The suit with respect to the remaining property was dismissed.

The plaintiffs again appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, who made a decree in their favour for possession of the properties numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 10 and 13 with Jagir—and for redemption of the property numbered 8 on payment of Rs. 3,695. The said sum of Rs. 3,695 was sufficient, in the opinion of the Judicial Commissioner, to cover the mortgage money, the interest thereon and the enhanced value caused by the reconstruction of the property after the fire. The remainder of the plaintiffs' claim was dismissed, and the Judicial Commissioner directed that the plaintiffs should recover costs on the properties which they had won and pay costs on those which they had lost from and to the defendants, who were in possession.

At the hearing of the appeal before the Board the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs did not rely on the contention "judicata" which was raised in the Court of the Judicial sioner. Their Lordships, for reasons which need not be set out, are of opinion that the learned Counsel was right in adopting that course.

The questions in the appeal relate to the wills of Mul Chand, and before dealing with the points relating thereto it will be convenient to set out the following pedigree, which shows the relationship existing between the parties:—

Mul Chand died on the 30th of July, 1891. There is no doubt that Mul Chand on the 19th of July, 1891, made a will, which was duly registered on the 20th of July, 1891.

It was alleged by the defendants that he made a second will on the 26th of July, 1891. This will was not registered.

It was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that there was no proper proof of the second will, dated the 26th July, 1891, and it will be convenient to deal with this contention at once.

A document which purported to be a copy of that will was produced at the trial.

Both the Courts in India came to the conclusion that the aforesaid document represented the will of Mul Chand.

The original will was alleged to have been lost, and their Lordships are of opinion that there was evidence which would entitle the Courts in India to arrive at the above-mentioned conclusion, and they see no reason for interfering with their finding in this respect.

This appeal, therefore, must be considered on the assumption that both the wills were duly executed by the testator, Mul Chand, and that the terms thereof are contained in the two documents on the record.

The main question relates to the construction of the will of the 26th July, 1891.

The defendants' case, stated briefly, was that Mul Chand, on the true construction of the will, conferred full proprietary rights on his three devisees, viz., his two widows, Hukam Devi and Sahib Devi, and his son's widow Lachhmi, in the shares devised to them. On the other hand, the contention of the plaintiffs was to the effect that on the true construction of the will each of the three above-mentioned ladies was given an estate for life merely and not an absolute estate.

The determination of this question depends upon the true construction of the will of the 26th July, 1891. The earlier will, viz., that of the 19th July, 1891, was relied upon for certain purposes, e.g., for the purpose of showing that the testator, when so minded, knew how to confer an absolute and a limited interest in his property. For the present, however, it is not necessary to set out in detail the terms of the earlier will.

The translation of the material parts of the will of the 26th July, 1891, is as follows:—

"To-day, 12th Sawan, 1948, Sant Baba Mool Chand being in full possession of his senses, has recorded as follows:—

"I (Narinjan Das) have written down from his dictation the method of disposal of his estate, his belongings, his ornaments and his property to whomsoever it is to be given.

"Land Revenue recoverable from the Zemindars in respect of Muafi for the last three years (vide the detail given below)."

The will then sets out a detailed description of the various properties, both movable and immovable. This is followed by a paragraph relating to the testator's younger daughter Durgi and her mother Sahib, which is as follows:—

"Rs. 500 to be kept in deposit for the younger daughter. One house known as Bawa Sunderwala to be given to younger Mata Sahib Devi, who shall realize the rent thereof, as also the interest on Rs. 500. She is the owner during the lifetime of the girl. Otherwise no concern. If she lives in the house, whether at Peshawar or Lahore, she will get food expenses. She should maintain herself on presents. If she goes to her parents' house for good, she shall receive rent of the house only. Rs. 500 shall be kept (in deposit) if it is found to be surplus amount after meeting our expenses."

 Ram
 v.
 Bawa Charanjit Lal.
 Sir Lancelot
 Sanderson.

P. C.
 Pandit Shalig
 Ram
 v.
 Bawa Charan Lal.
 Sir Lancelot
 Sanderson.

The will then recites that a small house has been gifted by the elder Bawa to one Bibi Lali, and that another house occupied by Narsingh Das and Shalig Ram Chhiber has been given to them.

Details of the muafi are set out, and then comes the important clause, which is as follows:—

"As regards the detail of shares there shall be three equal shares. Elder Mata, younger Mata, and the wife of Sundar Bawa, the three persons are the heirs to whatever is left from the property after meeting the expenses. The produce of the muafi shall be realised by Narsingh Das, Shalig Ram."

The elder Mata was Hukam Devi, the younger was Sahib Devi, and the wife of Sundar Bawa was Lachhmi.

The Subordinate Judge held that Mul Chand by his will had bestowed absolute ownership in the residue of his estate on his widows and daughter-in-law Lachhmi.

The Judicial Commissioner held that under the will of the 26th July, 1891, the widows and Lachhmi took a limited interest only. Hence this appeal by the defendants.

The intention of the testator must be gathered from the terms of the will, reading it as a whole, and not much assistance is to be gathered from the numerous cases which were cited to the Board, and in which the terms of the wills under consideration differed from the terms of the will in the present appeal.

It is, however, desirable to observe that at one time it was held by some of the Courts in India that, under the Hindu Law, in the case of immovable property given or devised by a husband to his wife, the wife had no power to alienate unless the power of alienation was conferred upon her in express terms.

It has been held by decisions of this Board that that proposition was not sound, and that—

"If words were used conferring absolute ownership upon the wife, the wife enjoyed the rights of ownership without their being conferred by express and additional terms, unless the circumstances or the context were sufficient to show that such absolute ownership was not intended."

See *Bhaidas Shivdās v. Bai Gulab*¹ See also *Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao*², where the decision in *Mussamat Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha*³ is referred to and explained.

In their Lordships' opinion, the intention of the testator in this case was to confer upon each of his two widows and his daughter-in-law Lachhmi full proprietary rights in a one-third share of the residue of the estate comprised in his will of the 26th July, 1891.

Their Lordships have arrived at this conclusion on consideration of all the terms of the will.

It is material to notice that the testator nominated as his heirs not only his two widows, but also his daughter-in-law Lachhmi; that all three were put in the same category as "heirs," and that the words used in conferring the gift are sufficient to confer full rights of ownership.

The will contained no provision for dealing with the properties after the deaths of the three devisees, and in their Lordships' opinion there is nothing in the circumstances or in the context to indicate that it was the testator's intention to limit the estate of any of the three persons to a life-estate or to a limited estate similar to a "widow's estate" under the law of inheritance.

Their Lordships therefore are unable to adopt the construction placed on the will by the learned Judicial Commissioner.

This decision is sufficient to dispose of the appeal and it is not necessary for their Lordships to deal with the further question whether there was valid necessity for some of the transfers by Sahib Devi as alleged by the defendants.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed and the decrees of the Judicial Commissioner must be set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 17th October, 1922, by which the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed, must be restored.

The plaintiffs must pay the costs of the defendants in this appeal and in the Courts in India.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 110—"Value of subject-matter of suit in Court of first instance"—Mesne profits subsequent to date of suit—Special leave to appeal granted ex parte—Objection to competence of appeal raised at the hearing.

In computing, for purposes of S. 110, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, mesne profits accruing subsequent to the institution of the suit cannot be taken into consideration.

Gudivada Mangamma v. (Maddi) Mahalakshamma, (1929) L.R. 57 I.A. 56: I.L.R. 53 M. 167: 58 M.L.J. 184 (P.C.), followed.

Where special leave to appeal is granted by the Board ex parte, that does not preclude the Board, when the true facts are brought before it, from going into the question of whether the appeal is competent or not, and accordingly it is open to the respondent, at the hearing, to object to the competence of the appeal.

Shah Zahid Husain v. Mahomed Ismail, (1930) L.R. 57 I.A. 186: 59 M.L.J. 10 (P.C.), followed.

Appeal No. 162 of 1927, by special leave, from a decree of the High Court, Patna, dated the 8th December, 1925, which reversed a decree, dated the 26th January, 1922, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah.

A Hindu widow governed by the Mitakshara Law transferred some landed property. She purported to do so as heir of her husband, alleging that he had separated from his joint family before his death. The surviving members of the joint family (the plaintiffs-appellants) contended that the deceased never separated from them, so that by right of survivorship they were entitled to the property. The Subordinate Judge found that the alleged separation was not proved, and decided the case in favour of the plaintiffs. The High Court, on appeal, disagreed with the finding of the Trial Court, reversed its decree and dismissed the suit.

For purposes of the present report (the appeal to the Privy Council being dismissed on a preliminary objection) only the following further facts are material:—

Patna Appeal No. 5 of 1927.

The plaintiffs' suit for declaration of title, or, in the alternative, for possession, was instituted on the 8th October, 1920 and valued at Rs. 6,500, Court-fees being paid on that amount. No mesne profits were claimed in the plaint, but after the decision of the Trial Court (on 26th January, 1922) in their favour, decreeing the suit, and during the pendency of the defendant's appeal to the High Court, Patna, against the said decree, the plaintiffs instituted a suit claiming Rs. 3,890 as mesne profits for the period they were, as they alleged, wrongfully kept out of possession, viz., from the 9th December, 1920 to 22nd May, 1922. While the suit for mesne profits was pending, the High Court, on the 8th December, 1925, allowed the defendant's appeal and dismissed the main suit, and as a consequence the suit for mesne profits was likewise dismissed.

The plaintiffs then applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree, dated the 8th December, 1925, dismissing their main suit, and they contended that the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was Rs. 10,390, i.e., Rs. 6,500, value of the property in dispute, plus Rs. 3,890, mesne profits. The High Court having rejected the petition on the ground that the value of the subject-matter was only Rs. 6,500, the plaintiffs obtained special leave to appeal from His Majesty in Council.

Dunne, K.C. and Hyam for appellants.

Wallach for respondents.

At the hearing of the appeal, Wallach for respondents objected that the appeal did not lie, the provisions of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, not having been fulfilled. The sum of Rs. 10,000 was exceeded only if the mesne profits from the date of the institution of the suit were added. It has now been authoritatively decided that they cannot be so added; *Gudi-authoritatively decided that they cannot be so added: Gudi-Aiyar v. Sellammal*².

The objection to the competence of the appeal can be raised at the hearing, and it is not necessary for the respondents to apply by petition that the order in Council giving the special leave should be rescinded: *Zahid Husain v. Mahomed Ismail*³ and *Lord Strickland v. Grima*⁴ per Lord Blanesburgh.

Dunne, K.C., replied, conceding that the decision of the Board in *Gudivada Mangamma v. Mahalakshamma*¹ was against him.

VISCOUNT DUNEDIN.—In this case the question has been raised as to whether the appeal is competent. Special leave to appeal was granted on an ex parte application; but it has been settled in a judgment of this Board that that does not preclude the Board, when the true facts are brought before it, from going into the question of whether the appeal is competent or not. Hindu Law—Gift of immoveable property by husband to wife—Words conferring absolute ownership upon wife—Donee's power of alienation—"From generation to generation."

In the case of a gift of immoveable property by a Hindu husband to his wife, although the donor does not confer upon the donee express power of alienation, such power may nevertheless be deduced from the terms of the gift if the words used are sufficient to confer upon her absolute ownership, unless the circumstances or the context show that such absolute ownership was not intended. No particular words are necessary for this purpose, and if, reading the document as a whole, the conclusion is inevitable that it confers the estate out and out with no reservation, the right of alienation will be included just as much as any of the other incidents of ownership, and just as much where the gift is to a female as where it is to a male.

Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th ed., para. 397 referred to.

Counsel for the respondents were not called upon.

22nd July, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.—In this appeal the Board have again to consider a question which has been discussed under different guises in a number of cases within the last few years, viz., whether, under Hindu Law, a woman taking immovable property by gift from her husband has power to alienate it.

The most recent decision on the subject is in *Pandit Shalig Ram v. Bawa Charanjit Lal*¹ which cited and followed the judgment of Lord Buckmaster in Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab.² Reference was also made to *Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao*³ in which Lord Buckmaster made certain remarks explanatory of the decision in *Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha*⁴, another case in which a widow's power of alienation had been called in question, but their Lordships have no doubt that these remarks were not intended to qualify in any way the pronouncement in Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab.² There is also an exhaustive judgment of Sir John Edge in *Sasiman Chowdhurain v. Shib. Narayan Chowdhury*⁵ to which Lord Buckmaster was a party and which was heard a few days only after Bhaidas Shivdas' case.

Under these circumstances their Lordships feel that the doctrine upon which the decision of the present appeal depends is so well established that no further discussion of the authorities is required.

If, as in the present case, the donor does not confer upon the lady express power of alienation, such power may nevertheless be deduced from the terms of the gift if the words used are sufficient to confer upon her absolute ownership, unless the circumstances or the context show that such absolute ownership was not intended. There is, their Lordships think, no magic in the use of any particular word or form of words; the document must be construed as a whole, and its fair import deduced in the ordinary way, and if the conclusion come to is that it confers the estate out and out with no reservation, the right of alienation will be included just as much as any of the other incidents of ownership, and just as much where the gift is to a female as where it is to a male.

In the present case, one Gainsd Singh executed a deed of gift, dated the 7th May, 1877, in favour of his wife Musammatt Agind Kuar. The subject-matter of the gift was part of an estate in Oudh known as Bhiti Risalpur, of which Gainsd Singh was the proprietor. He had no son and had already made over other considerable portions of his estate to his two daughters. After her husband's death, Musammatt Agind Kuar by a sale-deed of the 8th September, 1881, transferred a portion of the property to one Chedi Ram Misr, whose interest is now represented by the respondents. The sole question raised for determination by their Lordships is whether she had power so to do. The appellants claim as the ultimate reversioners to whom the property would pass if the alienation was invalid.

The deed of gift is in the following terms:—

I am Gainsd Singh, son of Nokhe Singh, caste Chhatti Bais, resident of Mauza Mareman, pargana Pachhamrath, and Seerdar and Taluqdar of Bhatti, pargana Tanda, district Fyzabad.

Whereas the entire village Fatehpur and half of village Nau Sanda constitute my Zamindari Haqiat without any co-parcenership which are in my exclusive possession, having been granted by the Government as reward for my loyalty, and I am in proprietary possession and enjoyment thereof up to the time of the execution of this deed; whereas I am now old and no reliance can be placed on this borrowed life; whereas I am afraid that this estate might be destroyed after me as I have no male issue and whereas Musammatt Agind Kuar is my lawfully wedded wife besides whom I have no other co-sharer and co-parcener, so, with a view to safeguard the aforesaid property, I, while in the enjoyment of sound health and unimpaired intellect, without reluctance and coercion, have specifically gifted the Zamindari in the aforesaid villages with all the original and accreted rights, cultivated and uncultivated lands, Seer, Saer, jalkar, bankar and all the rights held by me, to my wife Musammatt Agind Kuar, and I do hereby covenant and reduce to writing that the said lady shall, generation after generation*, remain in possession and enjoyment of Zamindari Haqiat in the said villages on payment of the Government revenue. Now, after the execution hereof, if I or any one of my heirs and co-sharers lays any sort of claim to the aforesaid property against the donee, the same shall be deemed false and untenable by the powers that be. With the exception of the lady-donee, no one else shall have any power of interference and meddling with regard to the gifted property.

Wherefore these few presents have been reduced to writing by way of a specific deed of gift, so that it may serve as an authority and be of use when required.

Their Lordships have no doubt that reading this deed as a whole it must be construed as conferring upon Musammatt Agind Kuar an absolute estate in the property. Both the Courts in India by whom the case was heard came to the same conclusion, and their Lordships think it unnecessary, therefore, to discuss the document in detail. They would, however, remark that not only does the donor transfer to her all his rights in the property, but he says that she is to remain in possession and enjoyment of it "from generation to generation," words which have come to have almost a technical meaning in many parts of India as conveying a heritable and alienable estate: *Ram Lal Mookerjee v. would be considered a good marriage. Of course, these results may be altered by positive, i.e., statute law.

Under the law of France, there must be a civil ceremony of marriage, and if that has not taken place any religious ceremony is an idle performance so far as that law is concerned.

The doctrine of putative marriage was well known to the canon law, and has been adopted by many systems which have founded their law on the canon law. The proposition that a putative marriage cannot be a marriage which is null is not correct. It is just when a marriage is declared null that the doctrine of putative marriage becomes necessary.

All civil rights appendant to real marriage are not produced by a putative marriage. But the criterion is obvious, those only subsist which are consistent with a real marriage not existing. Alimony is such a right. The duty of a husband to support his wife is quite apart from his duty to cohabit with her. The continuance of alimony to the wife is one of the civil effects of a marriage held null but allowed to be putative.

Where the construction of a statute is in question the results of construction must be looked at.

*E. Lafleur, K.C., Geoffrey Lawrence, K.C. and Leon Fari-

16th July, 1929. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by VISCOUNT DUNEDIN.—In 1913 the respondent, a French Canadian of the Roman Catholic faith, being then a girl 19 years of age who had just graduated from a convent in a small town in Montreal, went on a trip to Europe with her father. She there met the appellant, a member of a Quebec family and also of the Roman Catholic faith, who had been living in Paris for several years. He proposed marriage to her, and she accepted. The appellant asked the respondent to make the necessary arrangements, and she called on the cure of the parish where her fiancé had been residing and where she was then temporarily residing. The cure informed her that there were certain civil formalities to be gone through and that he would celebrate the marriage. She asked her fiancé to attend to the civil formalities and he took her to the British Consulate where certain papers were signed and a certificate issued which was given to her fiancé. After that the parties proceeded to the church, the certificate was handed to the cure who then proceeded to celebrate the marriage according to the form of the Roman Catholic church. The parties lived together as husband and wife until the year 1926, when on returning from an absence from home the respondent discovered that the appellant had been guilty of infidelity and had introduced a mistress into their home. The respondent then applied to the Court in Paris for a divorce. That Court before proceeding further demanded the exhibition of a civil certificate of marriage. This the respondent was unable to produce. She discovered that the certificate which her fiancé had procured at the British Consulate was only a notice of intended marriage, and that the officiating cure had carelessly omitted to notice that it was not a certificate of marriage. As a matter of fact he had exposed himself to severe penalty by celebrating the religious ceremony without the production of a certificate. As no certificate of marriage could be produced—none such ever having been in existence—the Court declined to proceed with the case for divorce. The respondent then raised another action in the French Courts, craving a judgment “pour faire statuer le mariage,” and craving alternatively that if the marriage was declared void it should be held that she had contracted it in good faith and was entitled to a declaration of civil effects in her favour. The appellant appeared and denied the jurisdiction, he having still retained his Canadian domicil. This plea was sustained and the action dismissed. The respondent then raised the present action in the Superior Court of the Montreal district. The action sought a declaration of marriage, decree of separation, a dissolution of the communaute des biens—the marriage having been without a marriage contract, communaute des biens would ensue—and a judgment for alimony. Damages were also claimed but that claim was departed from. Alternatively a declaration was sought that as the respondent had been in good faith, the marriage was a putative marriage and in terms of Art. 164 of the Civil Code produced civil effects. The case depended before Loranger, J., who held the marriage valid, pronounced a decree of separation, dissolved the community of goods and granted a decree against the appellant for an alimentary allowance of $1,500 a month. On appeal the Court of King’s Bench by a majority upheld the judgment. Bernier, J., dissented and held that the marriage was null and that a null marriage could not be a putative marriage. The present appeal is from that judgment.

Their Lordships are unable to agree with the judgment under appeal. If there is one question better settled than any other in international law, it is that as regards marriage—putting aside the question of capacity—locus regit actum. If a marriage is good by the laws of the country where it is effected, it is good all the world over, no matter whether the proceeding or ceremony which constituted marriage according to the law of the place would not constitute marriage in the country of the domicile of one or other of the spouses. If the so-called marriage is no marriage in the place where it is celebrated, there is no marriage anywhere, although the ceremony or proceeding if conducted in the place of the parties' domicil would be considered a good marriage. These propositions are too well fixed to need much quotation. They were laid down long ago in England in the well-known case of *Dalrymple v. Dalrymple*¹ and in *Scrimshire v. Scrimshire*² approved by Lord Stowell in Ruding v. Smith.³ A question precisely the same as the present had been decided in Scotland in the case of *Johnstone v. Godet*⁴ mentioned by Lord Fraser in his work on Husband and Wife, Vol. II, p. 1310, where the parties had undergone a ceremony of marriage in Martinique, where the Code Napoleon prevailed. This marriage, if it had taken place in Scotland, would have been good. But there was no civil ceremony and the marriage was bad under the Code; and it was held no marriage in Scotland.

Of course, these results may be altered by positive, i.e., statute law. A good illustration may be given in the legislation which was passed in order to cure what was thought to be abuse of Gretna Green marriages. Marriage in Scotland can be constituted by mere words of consent de presenti in the presence of witnesses, and English couples used to cross the border by Gretna to be married by interchange of consent in the presence of the blacksmith and his assistant. A statute was passed declaring a marriage constituted by consent de presenti null where the parties had not previously resided in Scotland for at least three weeks.

Now in face of the facts set forth in the narrative above given, and these facts were found by all the Judges of the Courts below and are amply borne out by the evidence, it is clear that under international law there was no marriage in this case. The law of France is peremptory. There must be a civil ceremony of marriage and if that has not taken place any religious ceremony is an idle performance so far as the law is concerned. Learned counsel for the respondent could not controvert this statement of international law, and, therefore, he sought to show that the validity of the marriage was established upon positive law contained in the Civil Code of Quebec. The articles he relied on were the following:—

"7. Acts and deeds, made and passed out of Lower Canada, are valid, if made according to the forms required by the law of the country where they were passed or made.

* * * * *

"51. On proof that, in any parish or religious community no registers have been kept, or that they are lost, the births, marriages and deaths may be proved either by family registers and papers, or other writings, or by witnesses.

* * * * *

"128. Marriage must be solemnised openly, by a competent officer recognised by law.

"129. All priests, rectors, ministers and other officers authorised by law to keep registers of acts of civil status, are competent to solemnise marriage. . . .

* * * * *

"135. A marriage solemnised out of Lower Canada between two persons, either or both of whom are subject to its laws, is valid, if solemnised according to the formalities of the place where it is performed, provided that the parties did not go there with the intention of evading the law.

* * * * *

"156. Every marriage which has not been contracted openly, nor solemnised before a competent officer, may be contested by the parties themselves and by all those who have an existing and actual interest, saving the right of the Court to decide according to the circumstances.

* * * * *

"159. No one can claim the title of husband or wife and the civil effects of marriage, unless he produces a certificate of the marriage, as inscribed in the registers of civil status, except in the cases provided for by Article 51.

"160. Possession of the status does not dispense those who pretend to be husband and wife, from producing the certificate of their marriage.

"161. When the parties are in possession of the status and the certificate of their marriage is produced, they cannot demand the nullity of such act."

The last seven Articles appear in Chapter II of the Code, the heading of which is "Of the formalities relating to the solemnising of marriages." It is out of the question to suppose that the legislature is dealing with anything except the formalities to be observed in the Province of Quebec. It would be idle to provide formalities to be observed in all the parts of the world. This is clear enough from the heading, but it is made more clear by the phraseology implied in the articles. Take for instance Art. 129. Who can "keep registers of acts of civil status" except the persons that can be so authorised in the Province of Quebec? The term is inapplicable to anyone elsewhere. Art. 130 with its reference to the early articles as to the publication of bans is also utterly inappropriate to a marriage except in the Province of Quebec.

The article, however, on which the respondent laid greater stress and on which the judgment of the Court below mainly proceeded is Art. 156. This is in a fasciculus of articles headed "Of actions for annulling marriage." It is not in such a division that one would expect the power of dealing with the constitution of marriage said to be contracted abroad. The Article runs:—

"Every marriage which has not been contracted openly, nor solemnised before a competent officer, may be contested by the parties themselves and by all those who have an existing and actual interest, saving the right of the Court to decide according to the circumstances."

The first sentence gives the right of challenge and doubtless every foreign marriage could come within its words for no foreign marriage could have been solemnised by a competent officer, which obviously refers to such a person in Quebec. The words which are appealed to are the last words, and it is supposed to add to their weight the fact that in the Code Napoleon on which the Quebec Code is obviously modelled the first sentence appears, but the words at the end do not. Let it be observed what the argument comes to. International law being as set forth, it is to be held that this saving clause gives a power to the Court to override that law as upheld in every other country of the civilised world, but it also if so interpreted would do more. It would enable the Court to declare marriage to arise from a proceeding which under the law of no country was ever supposed to be marriage. Naturally the good sense of the Quebec Judges would prevent them from doing any such thing; but when construction is in question the results of construction must be looked at. The truth is, that their Lordships can only look on this as a most preposterous suggestion and they agree with the view that Bernier, J., took on this matter.

The case of a foreign marriage is dealt with in terms by Art. 135, and that expresses the doctrine of international law. As this is in the section dealing with the constitution of marriage, it would have been quite out of place to express the converse of the doctrine, so that the brocard expressio unius est exclusio alterius cannot apply. Their Lordships have, therefore, no hesitation in declaring that the so-called marriage in this case was ab initio null.

There remains, however, the question arising in sections 163 and 164. They are:

"163. A marriage although declared null, produces civil effects, as well with regard to the husband and wife as with regard to the children, if contracted in good faith.

"164. If good faith exist on the part of one of the parties only, the marriage produces civil effects in favour of such party alone and in favour of the children issue of the marriage."

Now as regards good faith, all the Judges held, and their Lordships agree with them, that there was perfect good faith on the respondent's part. She was a very young girl, quite ignorant of law, and from her antecedents and religion probably quite incapable of considering marriage as anything but a religious ceremony and ordinance. It is true that she was told that some civil formalities were necessary, but she had no exact knowledge of what that meant, and she would be amply satisfied with the assurance that they had been gone through at the British Consulate, all the more that the certificate produced was accepted as good by the officiating priest. Art. 163 is only necessary for grammatical reasons; the real article touching this case is Art. 164. It applies to this case in terms and deals with civil rights. Holding the views they did as to there being a real marriage, the majority of the learned Judges found it unnecessary to deal with Art. 164, a case of what is generally known as putative marriage. The doctrine of putative marriage was well known to the canon law, and has been adopted by many systems which have founded their law on the canon law. In England the canon law on this subject has been abandoned. In Scotland it is in viridi observantia. Scotland so far deserted canon law at the Reformation as to make divorce a vinculo competent, but otherwise its matrimonial system is founded on the canon law. Bernier, J., who disagreed with the other learned Judges as to the question of marriage, dismisses this point with the curt observation that a putative marriage cannot be a marriage which is null. This is indeed an extraordinary proposition. It is just when a marriage is declared null that the doctrine of putative marriage becomes necessary. Cases of the insistence of the so-called wife on her rights are more rare, but cases of the assertion of legitimacy of children born of a marriage subsequently declared null are numerous in every system which accepts the doctrine of putative marriage.

Two arguments were then put forward by the learned counsel for the appellant directed as to the lady's right to alimony. First, he said that the civil rights referred to were only those which existed up to the date when the marriage was declared null. The simple answer is that the word is "produces," not "has produced," and the absurdity of such a doctrine when applied to the legitimacy of children, who in the article are linked with the wife, is manifest. Secondly, he said that obviously all the civil rights of a wife which flow from marriage could not continue to exist, e.g., the right to cohabit, and therefore the right of alimony could not exist. It is, however, impossible to suggest on this view that any civil right still exists. It is quite true, as said, that all civil rights appendant to real marriage are not produced by a putative marriage. But the criterion is obvious, those only subsist which are consistent with a real marriage not existing. Alimony is such a right. The duty of a husband to support his wife is quite apart from his duty to cohabit with her. This is correctly shown in the form of a decree of separation which deals with the mensa as separate from the torus.

Their Lordships are therefore of the opinion that the respondent is entitled to alimony. The argument of learned Counsel turned so specially on the question of alimony, that scant mention was made as to the communauté de biens. Their Lordships would have felt inclined to hold that inasmuch as nullity of marriage was declared, it was equivalent to saying that no communauté de biens ever really existed; to declare the dissolution of what never existed would be a pleonastic proceeding. But the learned Judges of the Court below who decided that the marriage was valid have had no opportunity of saying what are exactly the civil rights of a putative marriage, and since the case was first heard their Lordships have had their attention directed to several cases which seemed to point to a settled practice as to this, which their Lordships in such a matter would not willingly disturb. They are, therefore, of opinion that the case should be remitted to the Superior Court of Quebec to deal with the civil effects of a marriage held null but allowed to be putative; it being distinctly understood that their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the continuance of alimony to the wife is one of the civil effects, the amount of which it will be for the Court of Quebec to determine, the amount decreed for in the judgments recalled being continued in the meantime.

The costs of the appeal will be borne as between solicitor and client by the appellant, who will also fulfil the other articles of the conditions on which special leave to appeal was granted.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 428—Appellate Court framing different charges—Conviction—Procedure—Propriety of.

The appellants were tried by a Magistrate for offences under Ss. 347 and 384 of the Indian Penal Code and convicted. On appeal to the Sessions Judge he found the evidence for the conviction was not sufficient and framed fresh charges under S. 423 of the Indian Penal Code, after going through additional evidence which was directed by him to be let in by the Trial Court. He convicted the accused under the fresh charge and ordered them to pay fine, in default of which they were to undergo imprisonment. On the question whether the procedure adopted by the Sessions Judge was proper, Held, that it did not enable an appellate Court to adopt the procedure adopted in this case by the learned Sessions Judge.

S. 428 of the Criminal Procedure Code merely enables an appellate Court, if it thinks it necessary, to call for additional evidence which will explain or clear up or perhaps supplement within limitations the evidence for the prosecution in support of a charge which has resulted in a conviction and which conviction is the subject of an appeal.

The Sessions Judge might have indicated that a charge under S. 423 might be framed and sent the case back for retrial.

The Court made the following

ORDER. Chief Justice.—Four persons including the appellants in Criminal Revision Case No. 968 of 1929 (Accused 2 and 3) and the appellant in Criminal Revision Case No. 969 of 1929 (Accused 5) were convicted by the Joint Magistrate of Penukonda for offences under sections 347 and 384, Indian Penal Code, for wrongful confinement to extort property and extortion.

Beasley, C. J.

The facts can be dealt with quite shortly and they are that on the 3rd December, 1927, a document was registered by the District Registrar at Anantapur, the material portions of which ran as follows:—

“Deed of sale caused to be written and given to Nethi Narayanappa of Pandurthi. To discharge debts due to others for the purchase of mango trees, I have received from you in cash this day Rs. 300. The land sold to you for this sum is S. No. 882, extent 0·71 acres with the various fruit trees standing therein. I have put you in possession this day. Henceforward you will have all my rights. My heirs and I will have nothing to do with it.”

Then there is the mark of Mangala Babanna who admittedly was an illiterate person and the two witnesses are accused 2 and 3. Upon this document were founded the two charges against the accused, the prosecution case being that Mangala Babanna was by confinement and extortionate methods made to execute that document, that he as a matter of fact was not the owner of the property at all and that it was a spurious document got for the purpose of defrauding others. In support of the prosecution case some evidence was given to show that whereas in the body of the document Rs. 300 was stated to have been paid by way of consideration, none in fact was paid. Though the question of consideration was quite an irrelevant one to the two charges then before the Court, because both the charges could be supported equally well, whether there had been consideration passing or not, the Joint Magistrate considered it as of some importance as supporting the case for the prosecution and dealt with it. This resulted, as before stated, in the conviction of four of the accused, three of whom are the appellants here. The case then came up before the learned Sessions Judge of Anantapur and he, after going very carefully into the facts in a very

Reddi
v.
Mangala
Babanna
Beasley, C. J.

lengthy and elaborate judgment, came to the conclusion, to put it quite shortly, that the evidence certainly did not support the conviction of the accused of either offence. He then resorted to a procedure which is called in question here. Having come to the conclusion that no conviction under sections 347 and 384, Indian Penal Code, could be supported upon the evidence, he dealt with the evidence given with regard to the consideration which passed for the document and decided for reasons which he has given in his judgment that a charge could be framed under section 423, Indian Penal Code, and that in order that such a charge might be framed there should be additional evidence before him; and he accordingly made an order that the Joint Magistrate should take evidence on the question as to whether or not the Rs. 300 consideration or any part of it passed on the date or at about the time of the execution of that document. The result of that enquiry was that he proceeded upon the additional evidence which came before him and found that no consideration for the sale did pass. He thereupon framed charges against the appellants under section 423, Indian Penal Code, acquitting the other accused who remained before him; and having framed those charges, he proceeded at once, for the reasons which he has given in the earlier part of his judgment, to convict the appellants and ordered them to pay fines amounting in the case of the 3rd accused to Rs. 500 and in the case of the 2nd and the 5th accused to Rs. 1,000 each, in default of which there was to be a term of imprisonment.

The matter reduces itself to this, was the procedure adopted by the learned Sessions Judge a proper one or not? It is, of course, conceded that under section 428 of the Code of Criminal Procedure an appellate Court in dealing with an appeal under the chapter in which the section appears may, if it thinks it necessary, order additional evidence to be recorded after stating its reasons for so doing and either may take the evidence itself or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate and it was purporting to act under this section that the additional evidence was ordered to be taken by the learned Sessions Judge. The strong criticism that is made here by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar is that the accused had been convicted under sections 347 and 384, Indian Penal Code, and had appealed to the Sessions Court of Anantapur against their conviction for those offences and none other and that there was no appeal against any conviction under section 423, Indian Penal Code, because there had not been any conviction or any trial even for an offence under that section. He contends that section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, merely deals with an appeal against a conviction and does not enable the appellate Court to substitute an offence in respect of which there has not been a conviction and then say that additional evidence must be called which may support such an offence. We think that that criticism is clearly correct and well founded and that section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, merely enables an appellate Court, if it thinks it necessary, to call for additional evidence which will explain or clear up or perhaps supplement within limitations the evidence for the prosecution in support of a charge which has resulted in a conviction and which conviction is the subject of an appeal and that it does not enable an appellate Court to adopt the procedure adopted in this case by the learned Sessions Judge. He might—although we say nothing about its being proper in this case, it is merely an indication of a possible procedure—have indicated that a charge under section 423, Indian Penal Code, might be framed and sent the case back again for retrial. But in this case he did not adopt that procedure and we are of the opinion that this petition must be allowed. The convictions will be set aside and the fines paid will be refunded to the appellants.

Hindu Law—Will—Construction of—Bequest to daughter—Nature of estate—“Have been transferred” if sufficient to convey absolute estate—Will or gift—Test of distinction—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), S. 90—Presumption of disposing power of testator if permissible.

Swarna

v.
Vardha-
namma.

The words “duly attested” in S. 90 of the Evidence Act justify not merely the presumption of execution and attestation but also a presumption in favour of the disposing power of the testator.

The general rule in cases of gifts to a Hindu female is that she gets the estate which the Hindu Law confers upon her unless there are words to restrict or amplify it. Where under the Hindu Law, the estate conveyed would ordinarily be, as in the case of a gift to a daughter, an absolute estate, no special words of amplitude are necessary.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit by a reversioner for a declaration that certain alienations made by the 1st defendant, daughter of the last male holder, in favour of her daughter's son are not binding on the plaintiff, now appellant, beyond her life-time. The plaint alleged that the last male holder, Mahadevudu, who was the elder brother of the plaintiff's father, died intestate. In her written statement the 1st defendant set up a will said to have been executed by Mahadevudu in her favour in 1877 and the case turns upon the validity and effect of this instrument. It is in the first place disputed that it is a will and not a gift-deed. Both the Lower Courts have found that it is a will and have applied the presumption permissible under section 90 of the Evidence Act, relying on that provision to find not only that it is genuine, a finding not now disputed, but also that it was executed by Mahadevudu when in a sound disposing state of mind. Whether section 90 can be used to support a presumption of this latter character is the next question, and the final matter in controversy is the 1st defendant's claim that under the will she took an absolute estate.

The document, the nature of which is thus disputed and of which Exhibit I is a copy, was executed on plain paper, a course correct for a will, incorrect for a transfer inter vivos. It is styled a Marana sasanam, a word which is usually translated as "will," but which perhaps more unmistakably than that term connects the execution of the document with the executant's death. Unlike a gift-deed it addresses no transferee in the second person. It states that the executant's properties "have been transferred" to his eldest daughter and proceeds to lay down what she shall do, these instructions appearing to relate to the time when he is gone and she has taken his place. Stress has been laid by the appellant upon the use of the past tense "have been transferred". I do not think that this is necessarily incompatible with the view that the document is to take effect as from the moment of the executant's death. When an English testator writes "I give and bequeath" he does not mean that the words are to operate upon the property at the time of execution of the will. Next, there is the very significant circumstance that the whole estate is transferred, a course not likely to be adopted in the case of a gift, especially a gift to a woman. It is true that no power of revocation is reserved, but it has never been held that the mere absence of an express provision of this nature disproves the testamentary character of a document. In *Rajammal v. Authiammal*¹ it was found upon an examination of the terms of the deed that it was not revocable in character. Finally there is the circumstance that the document was registered as a will. I do not attach weight to that fact because it shows what the Registrar's opinion was; but it does show what course was adopted by those who must have been conversant with Mahadevudu's intentions. It appears to me that those intentions are clear enough from the several indications which I have enumerated, and I have no hesitation in holding that the document is a will.

Swarna
Kotayya
v.
namma.

The point next raised is that, granting the document to be a will, and that the Lower Courts were justified in presuming execution and attestation under section 90 of the Evidence Act, yet the section does not authorise any presumption in favour of the disposing power of the testator. There is upon this point singularly little authority. I do not find any useful analogy furnished by cases such as Ubilack Rai v. Dallial,² *Ramani Kanta Ray v. Bhinnandan Singh*³ and the English case, *In re Airey: Airey v. Stapleton*⁴, which decides that where a person signs as agent for another the fact of agency cannot be presumed; because it is a fact quite outside and apart from the act of execution. Rather closer comes the decision of an Allahabad Full Bench in *Haji Sheikh v. Sukhrum Singh*⁵ that when the signature of the executant purports to have been made by the pen of the scribe it may be presumed under section 90 that the latter was duly authorised to sign for him. Walsh, A.C.J., distinguishes the agency cases referred to above, and with reference to the phrase "duly executed" occurring in the section, says:

"In our view the expression 'duly executed' must include all the facts which would be necessary in order to establish due execution before a Court by positive evidence, if the obligation of producing positive evidence were not dispensed with by the presumption."

The question really turns upon the construction to be placed upon "duly executed". The term "executed" by itself, may mean no more than, as the definition stands in the new English Dictionary, "to go through the formalities necessary to the validity of a legal act, e.g., a bequest, agreement, mortgage, etc." But, unless the word "duly" is purely otiose, the phrase must embrace more than that. That was the opinion expressed by Phillips and Odgers, JJ., in an unreported case, A.S. No. 82 of 1924, Phillips, J., observing,

"It is argued that this presumption does not apply to the fact that the testator was in a sound disposing state of mind, but in my opinion this contention cannot be upheld for it does not give effect to the word 'duly'. A will cannot be said to be 'duly' executed by an insane person or an imbecile, and, therefore, by the word 'duly' I think must be meant the execution by a person legally competent to execute the document."

This I think agrees with the statement of the law in Taylor (Vol. I, section 87) that ancient wills and deeds are said to prove themselves, their bare production from natural custody being sufficient. To hold otherwise would be to render the presumption unavailing in the case of most old wills, because the witnesses to execution, who are ex hypothesi beyond the reach of the Court, would also be the witnesses to the sound disposing state of the testator. I concur, therefore, in the view of the Courts below upon this point.

Taking the will to be validly proved, the question remains of the nature of the estate the 1st defendant took under it. There is a considerable number of decisions upon the effect of gifts and devises of immoveable property to females—many of them will be found summarised in the Privy Council judgment in Musammat Sasiman Chowdhurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury.⁶ Before considering them, it will, I think, save some confusion if the relevant provisions of Hindu Law are borne in mind. The cases fall into two classes, according as they are gifts or bequests to (1) a wife, and (2) a female relative other than a wife. Class (1) is thus dealt with in para. 664 of Mayne, 9th Edition:

"Immoveable property, when given or devised by a husband to his wife, is never at her disposal, even after his death. It is her Stridhanam so far that it passes to her heirs, not to his heirs. But, as regards her power of alienation, she appears to be under the same restrictions as those which apply to property which she has inherited from a male even though the gift is made in terms which create a heritable estate. It is different if the gift or devise is coupled with an express power of alienation. Whether this is so is of course a question of construction of the terms of the particular gift."

Swarna
Kotayya
namma.

Similar restrictions do not by force of law attach to gifts or bequests by relatives other than the husband. The property becomes what is known as Saudayika, "the gift of affectionate kindred", and such property is absolutely at a woman's disposal (para. 662). "She may spend, sell, devise or give it away at her own pleasure."

Now, if these are the principles of law governing such gifts or bequests, it necessarily follows, unless any intention appears to the contrary, that the effect of the gift (and here and elsewhere I include a bequest) is to confer an estate in conformity with them. To hold otherwise would be to assume, in effect, that the donor intended that the woman should take an estate the incidents of which would be at variance with the Hindu Law. This observation may appear to be too obvious to be worth making; but no little trouble has arisen during the arguments addressed to me through losing sight of the fundamental provisions of Hindu Law, and failing to distinguish between an inferred intention and a legal consequence.

In accordance with the two classes of estates given above, the case-law may be divided into (1) cases relating to gifts to wives, and (2) cases relating to gifts to relatives other than wives. Class (1) does not directly concern us, but some examination of the principles upon which the decisions proceeded will be of assistance before turning to Class (2).

Where a gift is made to a wife, the presumption would seem to be, as I have said, that she takes a limited estate unless a contrary intention appears; and this is in general what the cases show. Difference of opinion at one time arose whether the intention must be shown by an express declaration of power to alienate, as was held by the Allahabad High Court in *Sirajmani v. Rabi Nath*⁷, or whether it was enough that "words of amplitude"—some expression sufficient to show that donor's

Kotayya
v Vaidha-
namma.

intention to confer more than the estate which the wife would otherwise get under Hindu Law—are used. In *Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao*⁸ and *Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab*⁹ the Privy Council has set this point at rest by pronouncing for the latter alternative. We are not here concerned with the discussions, as for instance in *Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao*¹⁰, where the word of amplitude accepted was “inam,” and in *Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojah*¹¹ and *Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab*⁹, where it was “malik,” as to the sufficiency of the language to establish intention. Perhaps the clearest as well as the most authoritative (being the most recent) pronouncement of the Privy Council upon the principle to be observed in dealing with this class of cases is contained in Narsingh Rao v. Maha Lakshmi Bai.¹²

“In their Lordships’ opinion there is nothing so far in the deed to cut down the gift or prevent the Rani from taking such an estate in the properties, which are the subject of the gift, as a wife takes in immovable property given her by her husband. According to the Hindu Law, such property is taken by her as stridhan and is descendible to her heirs and not to his, and would devolve first on her daughter and her daughter’s daughter and failing them on her daughter’s son, thus effectually excluding Balwant; but over such property, it is stated by Mr. Mayne, paragraph 664, she would have no right of alienation unless the gift was coupled with an express power of alienation, or, as has been held by this Board, unless there are words of sufficient amplitude to confer it upon her.”

Here we have clearly expressed the principle which I suggested at the start is indisputable, that a woman gets the estate which Hindu Law confers upon her unless there are words to restrict or amplify it. Odgers and Jackson, JJ., have in *Illappavuluri Chelapati Rao v. Patchi Golla Subba Rao*¹³ decided a case upon this basis. It is unnecessary for me to discuss another case of this Court, *Kanakammal v. Baktavatsulu Naidu*¹⁴, further than to say that the learned Judge who wrote the leading judgment, Ramesam, J., certainly did not take a less liberal view of the rights passing to a woman by gift or devise than the other authorities I have cited.

If that is the principle to apply to a gift to a wife, it is difficult to find any reason why it should not apply to a gift to a woman other than a wife, for instance to a daughter, as here. Under Hindu Law she takes an absolute estate, and the presumption that she takes it can only be rebutted by the employment of restrictive language. It is true that this method of construction does not appear very clearly upon the face of any early Privy Council judgment, *Moulvie Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Sherwukram*¹⁵ and if that case stood alone and uninterpreted by later decisions it might be reasonable to deduce from it that whenever a Hindu makes a gift or bequest to a woman not his wife, he intends, unless he demonstrates the contrary, to bestow only a woman's estate. As was pointed out in *Mahim Chandra Sarkar v. Hara Kumari Dasee*¹⁶, however, such a view would mean in effect that the presumption was that the donor intended his gift to have an effect different from the effect ordained by Hindu Law; because every Hindu may be supposed to know that a daughter, for example, takes an absolute estate in such circumstances. The judgment, properly understood, seems only to lay down that in construing a will or gift-deed it is necessary to bear in mind that the testator or donor is a Hindu; and, further, that this consideration should not be lost sight of, in particular, where there is ambiguity in the terms. In *Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao*¹⁷ Wallis, C.J., observes:

Swarna
Kotayya
v.
namma.

"We must, I think, take it to be now settled, at any rate so far as this Court is concerned, and until the decisions to which I have referred are overruled by higher authority, that the rule laid down by the Judicial Committee in *Moulvie Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Sherwukram*¹⁵ is a rule of construction to be applied only when there is some uncertainty or ambiguity in the language of the instrument before the Court."

In the same case Seshagiri Aiyar, J., thought that where the language was ambiguous, recourse could be had to the ordinary notions of Hindus as a rule of construction to find out what the intention of the donor was; but where the words employed are clear and unambiguous, no matter who the donee is, the language should be given effect to. He supported this principle by a reference to section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act.

A similar view has been taken by Benches of this Court in more than one recent case. In *Rajamanicka Chettiar v. Manickam Chettiar*¹⁷ (to which in facts and ratio decidendi *Yellappa v. Golla Swami*¹⁸ is closely parallel as to need no separate notice) a brother bequeathed property to sisters directing that they should "enjoy" it. After holding that there is no presumption against a woman taking an absolute estate, the learned Judges deemed "enjoy" to be a word of sufficient amplitude to convey absolute rights. As to this, it is perhaps worth while to point out that the phrase "sufficient amplitude" was used by the Judicial Committee as in *Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab*⁸ and *Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao*⁸, where a transfer to a wife was in question and it was necessary to consider whether the language used raised the estate from qualified to absolute. Where the estate conveyed would without such words be, under Hindu Law, an absolute one, the view to which I can discover no objection, either on general principles or on recourse to the authorities, is that no words of amplitude are necessary.

In a Calcutta case, *Mahim Chandra Sarkar v. Hara Kumari Dasee*¹⁶ which I have already mentioned in connection with the construction of *Moulvie Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram*¹⁵, a bequest to a daughter was in question, and the testator was deemed to have intended to confer an absolute power of alienation. There is nothing, I think, in this case in conflict with the principle I have attempted to extract. It was presumed that the testator knew the Hindu Law and had its effect in contemplation in framing his will.

The conclusion I draw is, that where under Hindu Law a bequest to a woman would convey the whole estate, it is permissible to construe the will free from any presumptions created by her sex. If the words used would invest a male legatee with an absolute estate, so would they invest a female legatee. If this test is correct, I regard the words "have been transferred" unattended as they are by any qualification, as sufficient to achieve that object. They are appreciably stronger, in my view, than the word "enjoy" which was held to show a similar intention in the two Madras cases above cited.

I agree accordingly with the Courts below that the document in controversy is a will, that it has been proved to be validly executed by Mahadevudu, and that it passed an absolute interest in the property to the 1st defendant. The plaintiff's suit must

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sundaram Chetty, J.—In this reference, the point arising for determination is, whether in a suit for possession of immoveable property and mesne profits, Court-fee should be paid on the aggregate value of both the reliefs, or on the value of each of the reliefs separately. The question turns upon the applicability of section 17 of the Court Fees Act to this case. That section says, that where a suit embraces two or more distinct subjects, Court-fee has to be paid separately on the value of each subject, and not on the aggregate value of all the reliefs.

The word "subject" in this section is somewhat obscure in its meaning, and has been held in some decisions to be not capable of precise definition. Ordinarily, the right or title to the land is the basis for the claim for possession of the land, as also for mesne profits, and it cannot, therefore, be deemed, that the two claims are so disconnected, without any interrelation, as to form distinct subjects, under section 17 of the aforesaid Act.

The Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court, in *Kishori Lal Roy v. Sharut Chunder Mozumdar*¹, is a clear authority for holding that the claim for possession and the claim for mesne profits should be taken as one entire claim, for the computation of the Court-fee, and not as distinct subjects. The question has been viewed by Garth, C.J., in several aspects, and due importance has been attached to the uniform practice prevalent in the whole country in respect of this matter, which a Court of Justice ought to be slow in changing to the prejudice of the suitor, unless it sees clear and weighty reasons for so doing. With this view, we are in agreement. This decision has been followed by the Allahabad High Court in *The Reference under the Court Fees Act, 1870, S. 5*².

There seems to be no decision of this High Court directly bearing on the present question. In *Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar*³ the Full Bench has held that the claim for possession and the claim for mesne profits are separate causes of action, though they may arise out of one act of dispossession. But that decision is for the purpose of Order II, Rules 2 and 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The question remains whether separate causes of action would invariably be the criterion for treating the claims based on them as distinct subjects under section 17 of the Court Fees Act. In the Full Bench case in *Kishori Lal Roy v. Sharut Chunder Mozumdar*¹ this does not appear to have been taken as the deciding test. In a case dealt with by the Patna High Court, it is stated that two views are possible as to the meaning of the word "subject" in this section. One is that the word "subject" relates back to section 7 where the various subjects of suits are put under different heads. The other view is that the word "subject" means "cause of action". (*Nauratan Lal v. Wilford Joseph Stephenson*⁴.) But, however, it was held, on the strength of the Full Bench decision in Kishori

2. (1894) I.L.R. 16 A. 401.

3. (1914) I.L.R. 38 M. 829; 28 M.L.J. 127 (F.B.).

4. (1918) 4 Pat. L.J. 195.

*Lal Roy v. Sharut Chunder Mozumdar*¹ that the long continued practice should not be disturbed and that Court-fee may be paid on the aggregate value of the reliefs, viz., claim for possession and claim for mesne profits. The preponderance of authority is in favour of not treating these two claims as distinct subjects under section 17 of the Court Fees Act.

There being no definition of the word "subject" in the Act, we think, we need not attempt to define it in the present case, and should only be guided by the long course of practice.

We think, that any doubt or obscurity as to the precise meaning of the word "subject" in this section should be cleared by the Legislature in due course.

We answer this reference by stating, that in a suit for possession of immovable property and past mesne profits Court-fee is payable on the aggregate value of both the reliefs.

Two persons, accused (1) and (2), were convicted for murdering another person by the Sessions Judge. By a statement to a Sub-Magistrate accused (2) confessed that accused (1) alone murdered the deceased and that himself took no part in it except that, on being threatened by accused (1), he had helped him to throw the body of the deceased into a burrowed pit. On the question whether the Sessions Judge was at liberty under S. 30 of the Evidence Act to take into consideration against accused (1), a statement made by the co-accused, because it was a confession of causing evidence of murder to disappear, Held, that "confession" in S. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act means confession of the offence for which the accused are being tried.

Confession in S. 30 cannot reasonably be interpreted to mean a confession of any offence in the world, nor even of any minor offence included in the offence for which the accused persons are being tried, nor of any offence connected with that offence, nor of any other offence which may be disclosed by the evidence, but only of the very offence for which they are being tried, "offence" always including, under the explanation to the section, abetments and attempts.

Waller, J.

JUDGMENTS. Waller, J.—I agree that Exhibit G is a statement that should not have been taken into consideration against the 1st accused. He and the maker of the statement were being jointly tried for murder and Exhibit G was not a confession of murder jointly affecting both. The law on the point was correctly laid down by Straight, J., many years ago in the Allahabad case *Empress of India v. Ganraj*¹ cited by my learned brother. As regards the case *Shivabhai v. Emperor*² a statement by one of the accused that he by himself had burnt the clothes of a murdered man and would show the place was treated as a confession of participation in the murder and admissible under section 27 of the Evidence Act against him. To that extent, the decision seems to be correct, but when it goes on to put forward some circumstantial grounds on which the Judges held that the confession "indirectly affected" another accused not named in it and could, therefore, be used against him under section 30 of the Evidence Act, I find myself wholly unable to follow it.

Apart from the so-called confession, there is, I think, a strong circumstantial case against the 1st appellant. Against the 2nd, there is that and more, that is to say, his statements, Exhibits G and H. They show that he was present when the murder was committed. That they give a true account of what happened is incredible. The murder and disposal of the body could not have been the work of one man. Nor is it believable that the 1st appellant would have suddenly murdered Rama-swami in the presence of the 2nd appellant without the previous knowledge and consent of the latter. The scene of the murder was probably deliberately chosen. It was a place where the Periyar channel, which was then certain to be in flood, runs close to the road. Doubtless the intention was, as stated in Exhibit H, to throw the body into the channel. Apparently, in the darkness, the murderers mistook the water in the burrow-pit for the channel. I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

Reilly, J.—In this case the appellants, accused 1 and 2, have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Madura of murdering one Ramaswami Moopan, with whom it has been found they were dealing in sheep as partners.

Reilly, J.

The learned Sessions Judge has taken into consideration against accused 1 a statement, Exhibit G, made by accused 2 before the Sub-Magistrate of Dindigul. In that statement accused 2 does not admit that he took any part in the murder of Ramaswami; he says that accused 1 killed Ramaswami and then compelled accused 2 by a threat to assist in disposing of the body. The learned Public Prosecutor has contended that Exhibit G is a statement which the Sessions Judge was at liberty to take into consideration against accused 1 under section 30 of the Evidence Act because it was a confession, not indeed of murder, but of causing the evidence of murder to disappear, which is an offence punishable under section 201, Indian Penal Code. In my opinion that contention is mistaken. Section 30 of the Evidence Act is a very exceptional, indeed an extraordinary, provision, by which something which is not evidence may be used against an accused person at his trial. Such a provision must be used with the greatest caution and with care to make sure that we do not stretch it one line beyond its necessary intention. It is true that the section provides only that the confession of one accused person may be "taken into consideration" against his fellow-accused. As I understand the section, the confession cannot take the place of evidence against the co-accused; nor can it be added to supplement evidence otherwise insufficient. As I understand the matter, the provision goes no further than this—where there is evidence against the co-accused sufficient, if believed, to support his conviction, then the kind of confession described in section 30 may be thrown into the scale as an additional reason for believing that evidence. But even for that limited purpose the confession must be of the kind intended by the

Periyaswami
Moopan,
In re.

Reilly, J.

Legislature when enacting section 30. What kind of confession is intended? The words of the section are:

“When more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence, and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved.”

In my opinion “confession” in that collocation of words cannot reasonably be interpreted to mean a confession of any offence in the world, nor even of any minor offence included in the offence for which the accused persons are being tried, nor of any offence connected with that offence, nor of any other offence which may be disclosed by the evidence, but only of the very offence for which they are being tried “offence” always including under the explanation to the section abetments and attempts. That appears to me to be the plain meaning of the words. To interpret the word “confession” in the section in any wider sense is to accuse the Legislature of using loose language in a matter of great importance. In my opinion we must read the word “confession” as if it were followed immediately by the words “of that offence”; and that appears to me to be the plain meaning of the section as read by a reasonable man. And indeed, if that were not the meaning, why should the use of the word “confession” be confined to cases where the accused persons are being tried for the same offence? But, keeping our attention for the moment on the words themselves, if we speak of persons being tried for the same offence and in the same sentence speak of one of them making a confession, how can we mean by “confession” a confession of any other offence unless we are most careless in the use of language? To my mind the words of section 30 of the Evidence Act leave no doubt that the confession mentioned is a confession of the offence for which the accused persons are being tried. If the words left us in any doubt, the nature and effect of the provision might be called in to help us. The provision allows a statement of an accused person, not made an oath, not tested by the cross-examination, to be used against a person tried with him. What can be the justification of a provision at first sight so startling? If, while confessing some minor offence, a man could implicate his fellow-accused in a far more serious offence for which they were being tried, and the confession could then be used against his fellow-accused, would not that be offering to the confessing accused a plain temptation to make himself useful by throwing the serious blame on his fellow-accused while saving his own skin or exposing himself only to a minor penalty? To my mind it is inconceivable that the Legislature had any idea of offering to any accused person a temptation to such mean and immoral conduct. But, if the confession which may be used is confined to a confession of the very offence for which the accused persons are being tried, the position is different. Then at least the confessing accused has nothing to gain by his confession; on the contrary he exposes himself to the very penalty which he helps to bring down on his fellow-accused. To such a confession it is not entirely unreasonable to allow some weight, and the danger that it may be untrue is at least very greatly reduced. If we examine the effect and nature of the provision, we arrive again at the same result, that it is only such a confession which the Legislature can have allowed by section 30 to be taken into consideration. Lastly, if in this respect two interpretations of the section were grammatically possible, the ordinary canons of interpretation would compel us to adopt in the interest of accused persons the stricter and narrower construction, the construction which gives the less scope to this very exceptional extension of what may be used against an accused person at his trial. Examining the section in any or all these ways, in my opinion, we must arrive at the same conclusion, namely, that "confession" in section 30 of the Evidence Act means confession of the offence for which the accused persons are being tried.

Periyaswami

It appears to me surprising that any other interpretation of the section should now be put forward. The interpretation I have indicated as proper was adopted by Straight, J., in *Empress of India v. Ganraj*¹ and his view has been followed in a great many later cases. The learned Public Prosecutor quoted in his favour Shivabhai v. Emperor.² So far as that case deals with this point, I must say with very great respect that I neither agree with it nor understand it.

In Exhibit G, as I have mentioned, accused 2 does not admit that he took any part in the murder of Ramaswami Moopan: he admits only that he helped to dispose of the corpse. That is not a confession of the offence of murder for which accused 1 and 2 were tried, and therefore in my opinion the learned Sessions Judge in dealing with accused 1 should have excluded Exhibit G entirely from consideration. If that is done, what is the evidence against accused 1? There is evidence, which I see no reason to doubt, that for a few weeks accused 1 and 2 had been trading in sheep in partnership with Ramaswami Moopan and that they had taken some sheep bought in the Trichinopoly District south through Dindigul to Madura. There is evidence that on Thursday, 28th November, 1929, they arrived at Madura with 12 sheep and stayed that night with P.W. 27, who knew accused 2, as accused 2 had married and divorced a daughter of P.W. 27's neighbour; on the Thursday they sold 2 of the sheep, and on the Friday they sold the rest with the help of P.W. 27, who himself bought the last one for Rs. 11-8-0; the money for the sheep sold on the Friday was given to Ramaswami Moopan, who was carrying a money bag; about 4 P.M., on Friday, 29th November, accused 1 and 2 and Ramaswami left P.W. 27's shop at Madura saying that they were going to walk home. This evidence of what happened at Madura is given by P.W. 27, whom there is no reason to distrust. The villages of Ramaswami and of accused 1 and 2 are close to each other, a few miles north-west of Dindigul. Their way from Madura lay along the Madura-Dindigul trunk road, which from Madura runs first slightly north of west and then slightly west of north. On the morning of Saturday, 30th November, Ramaswami's dead body was found near Vadipatti with 9 cut wounds on it floating in water in a burrow-pit by the side of the road, between it and the Periyar channel close by, 17 miles from Madura, at a point which the accused and Ramaswami would have reached in their journey at some time in the previous night. Though an inquest on the body, on which the only money found was 2½ annas, was held on 30th November and a photograph of it and prints of its fingers were taken, it was not identified until 12 days later. P.W. 11, Ramaswami's widow, gives evidence that on Sunday, 1st December, she met accused 2 at a shandy near her village and asked him where Ramaswami was. Accused 2 replied: "We went to Madura and sold sheep. He got his share in the sale and went to the east to buy sheep and would be returning in 2 or 3 days. Why are you searching for him?" P.W. 12, Ramaswami's brother and P.W. 14 say that they went on Monday, 2nd December, to the village of the accused and asked accused 1 where Ramaswami was. Accused 1 told them that they had sold the sheep at Madura, that Ramaswami had got his share of the proceeds and had gone to "eastern parts" to buy other sheep and would be back in 2 or 3 days. P.W. 12 adds that accused 1 told him that Ramaswami's share of the sale-proceeds was Rs. 57. That the accused gave this explanation to Ramaswami's relations when they became anxious because he did not return is proved not only by oral evidence. Exhibit K is a letter, dated 4th December, written by P.W. 20, for P.W. 21, who is the brother of Ramaswami's widow, to their cousin, P.W. 22, who lives in the Trichinopoly District, near the place where Ramaswami and the accused had bought the sheep which they sold at Madura; and that part of the Trichinopoly District is east of the north part of the Madura District, where the accused and Ramaswami lived. Exhibit K runs:

"Our brother-in-law, Palaniamma's (P.W. 11's) husband, went there (i.e., to your place), purchased sheep and went to Madura to sell them. Those who went with him have returned about 7 days ago. When questioned, they say that Ramaswami has gone to eastern parts and I suspected it. So I request you to search for him in those parts and send him back at once and, if he is not found, to inform me about it."

The genuineness of this letter cannot be disputed. Its history in the post is shown by the post-marks on its cover, Exhibit K-1; and Exhibit L is P.W. 22's answer to it, dated 12th December.

That is the evidence against accused 1. It shows that he left Madura on the afternoon of 29th November in company with Ramaswami and accused 2 to walk to their homes; Ramaswami was then carrying a considerable sum of money; next morning Ramaswami's body, with wounds upon it which showed that he had been murdered, was found by the roadside at a point which they had to pass on their journey and would have reached in the night: there was practically no money on the body: the accused went on to their village, and on 2nd December accused 1 gave to P.Ws. 12 and 14 a reassuring but false account of Ramaswami's whereabouts. Accused 1 gives no explanation of this. He does not explain when or where he left Ramaswami nor profess that he had any reason to suppose that what he told P.Ws. 12 and 14 was true. He denies that he ever traded in sheep with Ramaswami and denies that he ever went to Madura with Ramaswami and accused 2. These denials are no doubt false. From the facts that accused 1 left Madura with Ramaswami and accused 2, that on the way they were to travel Ramaswami was murdered and the money on his person removed, and that 3 days later accused 1 gave a deliberately false account of Ramaswami's movements, the proper inference in my opinion is that accused 1 took part in murdering Ramaswami.

Against accused 2 there is the same evidence as against accused 1 except that his statement about Ramaswami's movements was made a day earlier, on 1st December, and was made to Ramaswami's widow, P.W. 11. But besides this evidence there is against accused 2 the statement Exhibit G, which he made to the Sub-Magistrate of Dindigul on 16th December. In that statement he admits that he and accused 1 and Ramaswami after they had sold their sheep at Madura left P.W. 27's house in the afternoon; they went along the road, and at midnight, when they were near Vadipatti, accused 2 was walking in front, Ramaswami next and accused 1 last. Accused 1 caught Ramaswami by the feet and threw him down and stabbed him to death. Accused 2 took no part in that, but, when Ramaswami was dead, accused 1 by threatening to stab him made him help in throwing Ramaswami's body into a burrow-pit by the roadside. That statement accused 2 withdrew in the committing Magistrate's Court and at the trial, explaining that he made it because he had been beaten and was afraid. Oddly enough in his appeal petition he says that he did make the statement because he was afraid but that he stated what was true. However accused 2's admissions in Exhibit G are corroborated in a remarkable way. There is evidence that at his own village on 9th December accused 2 told the same story to P.Ws. 12, 14, 15, 16 and 18. They all say that accused 2 then gave them practically the same account of the murder as is given in Exhibit G except that P.Ws. 12 and 18 say that accused 2 told them that he refused to help in throwing the body away and that accused 1 did it by himself. In corroboration of the evidence of P.W. 12 about accused 2's admission on 9th December we have Exhibit H, the statement made by P.W. 12 to his Village Magistrate, P.W. 19, the same day, when he produced accused 2 before him; and the Village Magistrate adds that, when questioned by him, accused 2 admitted that he had told "the Panchayat" what is recorded in Exhibit H. When accused 2 told his story of the murder to P.W. 12 and the other witnesses on 9th December, none of them knew what had become of Ramaswami, still less that he had been murdered near Vadipatti, more than 20 miles away. Nor did the Police of Sholavandan Station, within the limits of which Ramaswami's body had been found, then know whose body it was. On 10th December the Sub-Inspector of Palakanuthu, the Station for the village of the accused, sent P.W. 12, Ramaswami's brother-in-law, to Vadipatti: there on 11th December P.W. 12 learnt that a body had been found, the description of which was like Ramaswami: next day he went to Sholavandan Station and saw Exhibit B, the photograph of the body, which he recognised as that of Ramaswami. I may add that the identification of the body is not disputed, as besides the photograph the finger prints taken from the body correspond with those of Ramaswami on a sale-deed executed by him, Exhibit F. But it was because accused 2 told his tale of the murder on 9th December that Ramaswami's fate was discovered and his body identified. Though he has withdrawn his statement, Exhibit G, there is no doubt that his admission in it that he was present when Ramaswami was murdered is true. That is what he admits in Ex. G. But taken with the other evidence that cannot be accepted as the limit of his guilt. In the circumstances it is very highly improbable that, as accused 2 represents, accused 1 fell upon Ramaswami without a word to accused 2 of his intention. Of the 9 wounds found on Ramaswami's body only one, on the right of the neck, cutting the carotid artery, was necessarily fatal. From the fact that so many wounds were inflicted it may be inferred that Ramaswami was not killed without a struggle. Accused 2, according to his own account, stood by and was not responsible for what was done. To my mind in the circumstances the only reasonable inference is that accused 2 took part in the murder, whether he actually had a hand in the struggle, as is probable, or merely stood by on guard.

In my opinion the convictions and sentences of both the accused should be confirmed and their appeals should be dismissed.

the spot and found it insanitary and hence the Municipality gave the applicant permission to build in the western corner of the compound instead of at the place where he desired to build it. But they did not mention the reason for not giving the permission to build at the place where the applicant wanted. To a letter by the applicant to the Municipality requesting them to correct the error "western corner" which he thought had crept in for the words "eastern corner," there was no reply for some time. The Court delivered the following ORDER.—This is a petition by the Chairman of the Mangalore Municipality to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional 1st Class Magistrate of Mangalore reversing the conviction of the respondent by the Stationary 2nd Class Magistrate of Mangalore for an offence under section 199 read with section 338 of the District Municipalities Act and acquitting him.

The facts are short and practically not in dispute. The respondent is the owner of a compound T.S. No. 127 in the market ward of Mangalore Town. He wanted to erect a new latrine in that compound and made an application to the Municipality on 14th March, 1928, for permission to construct the latrine. The application was accompanied by a site plan and a plan of the building, Exhibits A, A-1 and A-2. The place where the respondent wanted to construct the latrine was the north-east corner of the property. It is in evidence that the Health Officer of the Municipality and the Sanitary Inspector inspected the spot when the respondent was present and they, finding that the proposed location of the latrine was unsuitable, pointed out to the respondent a spot at the north-western corner of the property where it might be constructed. The permission was accordingly granted and communicated to the respondent by the order of the Chairman, dated 26th of March, 1928, and a license of permission to erect the latrine at the north-western corner was granted in the usual form of a license with conditions. (See Exhibits D and D-1.) On the 10th April the respondent wrote Exhibit C to the Municipal Health Officer stating that he had asked for permission to construct the latrine at the north-eastern corner but was surprised to find that the permission was to construct the latrine at the north-western corner and suggested that the words "western" and "west" in the license were a clerical error for "eastern" and "east" and requested that the alleged error may be corrected and the license returned with its enclosures. It is admitted that the Municipality has not corrected the so-called error or returned the license to the respondent permitting him to construct the latrine at any other place except that mentioned in the license returned by the respondent. The Municipality, however, moved in the matter by asking the Health Officer to again inspect the place. That Officer did so and reported that the place already pointed out is the most suitable, but that the petitioners and his neighbours are objecting, and that there is no other site which is less objectionable. The visit of the Health Officer and the Sanitary Inspector to the spot after the petition, Exhibit C, is spoken to P.W. 1, who also says that the respondent was then present and learnt the result of the visit, namely, that there was no other site except the one already pointed out to him. This appears to have been on or about the 28th April, 1928. In this state of affairs the respondent wrote Exhibit I to the Chairman of the Municipal Council on the 19th of September, 1928, saying that the license had not been returned to him after correction and that unless the license for the place shown by him in his application, namely, the north-eastern corner, were granted to him before the end of October, 1928, he would commence the construction without the permission. Upon this, one Mr. Madhava Rao, Councillor for the ward, at the request of the Chairman visited the property and made another suggestion as to the location of the latrine, and the Chairman requested the Health Officer to communicate to the respondent the site selected by Mr. Madhava Rao as suitable. But the Health Officer protested that the place selected by Mr. Madhava Rao was quite insanitary being only 2 feet from a place of worship used by the local people and that it is very close to the main road adjoining which there is a mutt as well as a temple. He insisted that the north-western corner which had been already pointed out and for which permission had already been given was the only site suitable from a sanitary point of view. Therefore the proposal of Mr. Madhava Rao was never communicated to the respondent, and the position was just the same as when the respondent returned the license for correction. The respondent thereupon began the construction of the latrine where he wanted, that is, at the north-eastern corner. The Municipal Sanitary Inspector discovered this early in January, 1929. Thereupon, on the 2nd of January, 1929, a notice was issued to the respondent by the Health Officer to stop the work. He refused to do so. The Chairman sent another notice on the 8th January. The respondent still persisted and justified himself on the ground that he had already by his letter of the 19th of September, 1928, intimated his intention to commence the construction of the latrine, if no license was issued to him by the end of October, 1928. He also informed the Chairman that the latrine had been completed "yesterday evening". Thereupon this prosecution was started against the respondent for constructing the latrine without permission.

The Stationary Sub-Magistrate held that the respondent was guilty under sections 199 and 338 of the District Municipalities Act, although in his view the respondent had been hardly treated by the Municipality by no reply being sent to him to his letter of the 19th September, 1928. He, therefore, fined the respondent Rs. 15. In appeal, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate set aside this conviction on two legal grounds: first, according to the Magistrate, it was not a case of construction of a building without permission, because permission had already been granted, although it was for a different site; and secondly, according to the Magistrate, the offence fell not under section 338 of the Act but under section 317 of the Act.

It seems to me that the Magistrate's opinion is wrong on the first point. To say that where a Municipality gives permission for a building in a particular place, it amounts to a permission to build at another place, is, in my opinion, not in keeping with either sense or law. The permission granted by the Municipality was a permission to erect the latrine at the north-western corner of the property. It was not a permission to erect it elsewhere, and to say that the Municipality permitted the erection of the latrine and that the variation of the location is a matter covered by section 205 of the District Municipalities Act is to impute to the Municipality what it did not do and to make non-sense of the careful provisions of the District Municipalities Act and the rules thereunder as to construction of buildings. I have not the least doubt that, so far as permission was needed to the construction at the place where it was built, the latrine was constructed without any permission whatever. The view on this point of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is clearly wrong.

The Chairman, Municipal Council, Mangalore
v.
Vasudeva
Kamath

But the learned Advocate for the respondent attempted to support the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on two other grounds. His first point was that the case comes under sections 201 and 202 of the District Municipalities Act, which say that the Chairman shall within thirty days of the approval of the site under section 200 grant or refuse permission for the construction and on his failure to give or refuse his approval of a building site or his permission to execute any work, the Council shall be bound, on the written request of the applicant, to determine whether the approval or permission should be given or not, and that if the Council does not, within one month from the receipt of such request, determine the question, such approval or permission shall be deemed to have been given. His second argument is that the Chairman or the Municipal Council could not refuse permission to erect the latrine at the spot pointed out by the respondent as the refusal could not fall within any of the grounds mentioned for such refusal in section 203 of the District Municipalities Act.

Both these contentions are, in my opinion, incorrect. By section 108 the Chairman is not empowered to grant permission to construct a building until the site has been approved, and by section 199 the construction or reconstruction is not to be begun until the Chairman has granted permission for the execution of the work. What happened in this case was that the respondent was told in writing that he could have permission to construct his latrine on condition that he erected it at a place mentioned in the license. This had no other meaning and was known by the respondent to have no other meaning than that the site proposed by him for the latrine was not approved. His own letters show that beyond possibility of doubt. Immediately after the receipt of the license, he returned it to be corrected thereby showing that he knew that the site proposed by him was not approved. Again in his letter of the 19th September he wrote to the Chairman saying that his license had not been corrected and intimated that, unless it was so returned before the end of October, he would proceed to construct the latrine without any permission. There is no warrant for the argument that there was any failure by the Chairman to intimate his refusal of the site proposed by him to the respondent. Therefore, section 202 which only applies on default of a decision by the Chairman has no application to the case. It may also be added that, even if that section had any application, the respondent did not apply to the Municipal Council to make his own decision, nor wait for one month for the Council to do so. He has written no letter to the Municipal Council throughout the correspondence. His letter of the 19th of September is addressed to the Chairman. The first argument, therefore, fails.

Council,

The argument based upon section 203 is that the work proposed by the respondent would not contravene any provision of any law or some specified order, rule, declaration or by-law made under any law as required by section 203, clause (1). In short, the argument comes to this, that under the District Municipalities Act and the rules thereunder, there is no power in the Chairman or the Council of a Municipality to decide the location of a latrine proposed to be constructed by the owner of property in a Municipal area and to refuse permission if the proposal is to locate it in an insanitary or otherwise objectionable spot. I find myself unable to concur in this view. By section 191, clause (1), the Governor-General in Council is enabled to make rules, among other things, for the regulation or restriction of the use of sites for building. Rule (1) of the rules made under this power says that "no piece of land shall be used as a building site, if the Council considers that the site is insanitary, or that it is dangerous to construct a building thereon." It is argued that this only applies to cases of sites being considered insanitary or dangerous for the construction of buildings thereon generally, such as the place being a bog or a marsh or a feverish area and that it does not apply to the selection or exclusion of sites on the ground of their being sanitary or insanitary for specific purposes such as erection of latrines. I do not find sufficient ground to restrict the generality of the language in the way suggested. I think the rule applies to and prohibits the erection of buildings on lands insanitary or dangerous both, where the insanitary or dangerous character applies to all kinds of buildings or only to a particular class of buildings intended to be erected thereon. By reason of this rule, the Chairman or the Council of a Municipality would, in my opinion, be entitled to refuse the approval of a particular site for the erection of a latrine on the ground that such erection would be insanitary. That was what happened in this case.

On the second ground on which the Sub-Divisional Magistrate based his decision, namely, that the offence was not one falling under section 338 of the District Municipalities Act but under section 317, I think he was right. Section 338 applies to cases where no penalty has been specially provided by the Act, whereas this was a case of commencing the construction of a building without permission of the Chairman which is specifically provided for by section 317 read with section 199. But this was not enough to acquit the respondent as both the offences were summons cases. What the Sub-Divisional Magistrate should have done was, to alter the conviction to one under the proper section and pass such sentence as he thought fit in appeal. The result is that the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate acquitting the respondent is set aside and the papers in the appeal will be sent back to him for hearing and disposal according to law.

Hindu Law—Maintenance suit by a widow—Maintenance amount made specific charge on specific items of property of the joint family—Another creditor holding simple money decree against a member of the joint family—Sale in execution thereof of one of the charged items—Doctrine of lis pendens—Priority of joint family debt over maintenance claims—Whether possible—Charge to take effect, from when.

A Hindu widow claimed against her husband's brother and the alienees from him of certain joint family properties, for maintenance due to her from the joint family and prayed that the same might be made a charge on certain specified items of immoveable properties. She obtained a decree to that effect. After the filing of her plaint but before the passing of the decree therein, a creditor of her husband's brother upon a promissory note, executed a decree obtained against him, brought to sale one of the items charged for the maintenance due to the widow, purchased it, and sold it in turn to the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff to declare the sale of the same item by Court auction to the second defendant, in execution of the widow's maintenance decree, is not valid and also to restrain by injunction the second defendant from taking possession of the same,

Held, (1) that S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to a suit by a Hindu widow in which she claimed to have her maintenance charged on specific items of immoveable property mentioned in her plaint.

The principle of the doctrine of lis pendens applies to sales in invitum that takes place during pendency of such suits.

(2) that a decree obtained by the plaintiff in such a suit creating a specific charge over a specific item of immoveable property mentioned in the plaint, operated to give her a charge from the date of the plaint and not as from the date of the decree only unless there be anything in the decree to the contrary.

(3) that without sanction of the Court transfers inter vivos or sales in invitum during the pendency of such suit could not prevail over such charge claimed in the plaint and granted by the decree.

(4) that a simple money decree-creditor of a joint Hindu family had no priority over such charge granted by the decree in the absence of fraud or collusion. Hence an auction purchaser, during the pendency of such maintenance suit, of an item of property over which a charge was claimed in the plaint and was granted by the decree, who purchased in execution of a simple money decree binding on the family was not entitled to priority over another auction purchaser of such properties in proceedings taken to execute such maintenance decree.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam in Appeal Suit No. 31 of 1925 (A.S. No. 75 of 1924, Sub-Court, Ellore), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Ellore in Original Suit No. 116 of 1923 (O.S. No. 318 of 1922, District Munsif's Court, Nuzvid, at Bezwada).

G. Lakshmanna for appellant.

K. Kameswara Rao for respondents.

This second appeal coming on for first hearing before Odgers, J., the Court delivered the following

Odgers, J

JUDGMENT. Odgers, J.—In this case an interesting question of law was opened, namely, as to whether the maintenance decree-holder with a charge (1st defendant) was to be held to have a superior claim to the plaintiff who purchased from a Court auction purchaser. It is admitted by Mr. Lakshmanna for the appellant that if the debt for which the property was brought to sale in execution of Small Cause No. 1906 of 1916 was not a debt binding on the family the claim of the 2nd defendant must prevail. The District Munsif held that the decree debt in S.C.S. No. 1906 of 1916 was not a binding debt which could prevail against the claim of the maintenance of the 1st defendant. He gives various reasons which have induced him to come to this conclusion and they are set out in paragraph 6 of his judgment. He observed inter alia that "the extract from the suit register could have been produced to show the nature of the claim in S.C.S. No. 1906 of 1916." There are, however, various other circumstances which induced him to come to the conclusion that it has not been proved that the debt is a debt binding on the family. The Subordinate Judge, on the other hand, mainly or exclusively from the fact of the extract from the suit register which he admitted and marked as Exhibit H comes to the opposite conclusion. It is said that this Exhibit H supplies the missing link because it shows that the promissory note which is referred to in the endorsement of Exhibit B is the very note referred to in the suit register. The circumstance under which the admission of Exhibit H was applied for and allowed seems to be somewhat extraordinary. The plaint was filed on the 20th June, 1922 and the decree in the first Court was not made until the 23rd November, 1923. On the 29th January, 1924, an appeal was filed in the Lower Appellate Court and on the 4th December, 1924, there was a petition to receive Exhibit H, that is to say, over a year after the learned District Munsif had commented on its absence and nearly 2½ years from the institution of the suit. No order was made on this petition which is extremely vague in its allegations, the affidavit in support saying "it is, therefore, very necessary that these two documents of which Exhibit H is one should be received" without saying any reasons why this document could not have been filed in the District Munsif's Court. The matter is governed by Order 41, Rule 27 (d). The Appellate Court did not require the document to be produced so that the Court must be satisfied that there is some other substantial cause to allow such document to be produced. No substantial cause is alleged and further with regard to the proviso in sub-section (2) the Court has not recorded any reason for its admission. On the 16th April, 1925, two days before judgment in appeal was delivered, the Judge ordered this extract from suit register to be received and marked Exhibit H. Cases having gone to the length of saying that such reception of additional evidence under those circumstances is totally without jurisdiction. In *Kaki Mutyalu v. Kanigolla Siva Raghavayya*¹ a Bench of this Court held that the admission of a document in evidence was illegal where no reasons were recorded. There was no application for the admission of the evidence and no reasons were shown for failure to produce the document in the Court of first instance. Apart from this irregularity or illegality in admitting Exhibit H in evidence, the learned Judge has, to my mind, failed to deal with some of the aspects of this question of fact that presented themselves to the District Munsif. It is important to have this question of fact settled and I must, therefore, send the case down for a finding to the Subordinate Judge as to whether or not the debt in question, i.e., the decree-debt in S.C.S. No. 1906 of 1916, is a binding debt of the family. The Subordinate Judge need not again enter into the question as to whether it takes precedence or not of the claim for maintenance of the 1st defendant. That is a question of law which if necessary can be argued later on. As I have said, it seems to me that on the authority of *Kaki Mutyalu v. Kanigolla Siva Raghavayya*¹ the reception of Exhibit H was illegal. If the appellant here can persuade the Subordinate Judge that substantial reasons did exist for his failure to produce the documents in evidence in the Court of the District Munsif, the Subordinate Judge may consider the same. Otherwise, the finding is to be returned on the evidence on record. Six weeks for finding and 7 days for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Masulipatam submitted the following FINDING.—This appeal has been remanded for a finding as to whether or not the decree debt in S.C.S. No. 1906 of 1916 was a debt binding on the family of the 1st defendant.

* * * * *

My finding is that the debt in S.C.S. No. 1906 of 1916 was a debt binding on the family of 1st defendant. I may add that I have not taken Exhibit H into consideration. A petition was filed before me for its admission but it was rejected for the reasons given on it.

This appeal again came on for hearing for final disposal before Mr. Wallace and Anantakrishna Aiyar, JJ.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The first defendant (Venkatasubbamma) filed on 11th January, 1916, O.S. No. 451 of 1916, on the file of the Temporary District Munsif's Court of Gannavaram against her deceased husband's brother Venkatappayya and the alienees from Venkatappayya of certain joint family properties, for maintenance due to her from the joint family. She prayed that the maintenance that might be decreed to her should be made a charge upon nine specific items of immoveable property mentioned in her plaint. She alleged that items 1 to 8 had been alienated by Venkatappayya to the other defendants in O.S. No. 451 of 1916 fraudulently and collusively with a view to defeat her right of maintenance. She also alleged that those alienations were not bona fide nor supported by consideration. She obtained a decree for maintenance on 27th April, 1918, and the same was charged by the decree on all the nine items of immoveable property mentioned in her plaint. Before the decree was passed in O.S. No. 451 of 1916, P.W. 1 (Narasayya) filed a plaint on 27th January, 1916, and obtained a decree for money in Small Cause Suit No. 1906 of 1916 on the file of the same Court against Venkatappayya on a promissory note, and in execution of that decree P.W. 1 brought item 9, specified in O.S. No. 451 of 1916, as one of the properties charged for the widow's maintenance, to sale, and after purchasing the same himself on 8th April, 1918, sold the same to the plaintiff on 2nd June, 1919. In the meantime the widow, Venkatasubamma, executed the maintenance decree obtained by her (O.S. No. 451 of 1916) and brought item No. 9 mentioned in that decree to sale, and the second defendant Veerayya became the purchaser in Court auction on 5th April, 1922. The 2nd defendant attempted to obtain possession of the said property in pursuance of the sale certificate granted to him in O.S. No. 451 of 1916, and therefore the plaintiff instituted the original suit, out of which this second appeal has arisen, for a declaration that the Court-sale of the property in suit (item No. 9 in O.S. No. 451 of 1916) in favour of the 2nd defendant is not valid and binding on him and for a permanent injunction restraining the 2nd defendant from taking possession of the property in pursuance of the Court-sale to him.

The 1st defendant, the widow Venkatasubamma, did not appear in this suit. The 2nd defendant pleaded that the purchase by the plaintiff's vendor P.W. 1 in execution of the Small Cause decree on 8th April, 1918, was vitiated by the doctrine of lis pendens, since O.S. No. 451 of 1916 instituted by the widow to have the suit item also made a charge in respect of her maintenance was pending at the time, and that consequently the purchase by P.W. 1 could not prevail over the widow's rights, that the 2nd defendant being the auction purchaser in execution of the maintenance decree, his rights to the property should prevail over the rights of P.W. 1, the plaintiff's assignor.

Three main questions were discussed in the Lower Courts — (a) whether the doctrine of lis pendens applies to suits for maintenance where a charge is claimed on specified immoveable property; (b) whether the doctrine applies to involuntary sales; and (c) whether debts binding on the joint family have priority over claims of widows of the joint family for maintenance, and, if so, whether the Court-sale to P.W. 1 would have precedence and priority over the Court-sale to the 2nd defendant in the circumstances.

The Trial Court found that the decree-debt in Small Cause Suit No. 1906 of 1916 was not under the circumstances a binding debt which could have prevailed against the claim for maintenance of the 1st defendant; and on the other two points the Trial Court held that the doctrine of lis pendens applied. The suit was accordingly dismissed. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Lower Appellate Court admitted a fresh document in evidence and found that the decree-debt in Small Cause Suit No. 1906 of 1916 was a debt binding on the joint family. The Lower Appellate Court further observed that the doctrine of lis pendens applied in the circumstances, and therefore confirmed the Trial Court's decree.

When the second appeal first came for hearing, Mr. Justice Odgers being of opinion that the finding of the Lower Appellate Court on the question of the binding nature of the debt, which was the subject-matter of the Small Cause Suit No. 1906 of 1916, was not satisfactory, called for fresh findings and reserved the other questions of law arising in the case for further consideration. The finding submitted by the Lower Appellate Court (another Subordinate Judge) is to the effect that the debt which was the subject-matter of the Small Cause suit was one binding on the joint family. This finding is one of fact and has to be accepted for the purpose of this second appeal.

Mr. Lakshmanan, the learned advocate for the appellant, argued two questions: (1) that the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to the case; and (2) that debts binding on the family have priority over the claims of a Hindu widow for maintenance, and that on the finding of the Lower Appellate Court that the debt which gave rise to the Small Cause decree was binding on the family, the purchase by P.W. 1 in Court-sale should prevail over the purchase made by the 2nd defendant.

Seetharama
nujacharyulu
v.
subbamma.

On the question of lis pendens we are clearly of opinion that the doctrine applies to a suit for maintenance where the plaintiff claims to have maintenance specifically charged on specific items of immoveable properties mentioned in the plaint. In such a case, "a right to immoveable property is directly and substantially in question" within the meaning of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, and therefore "the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party of the suit so as to affect the rights of any other party to the suit under any decree which may be made therein". *Dose Thimmanna Bhutta v. Krishna Tantri*² is a clear and direct decision on this point. There, the learned Judges (Benson and Sankaran Nair, JJ.) held that a "suit in which a widow claims to have her maintenance made a charge on specific immoveable property is one in which a right to such immoveable property is directly and specifically in question within the terms of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act". See also *Jogendra Chunder Ghose v. Fulkumari Dassi*³ and *Krishna Pattar v. Sinnaponn*⁴. In fact the learned advocate for the appellant did not seriously dispute this point, and we think it is clear that the doctrine of lis pendens applies to a suit for maintenance in which the plaintiff claims to have her maintenance made a charge on specific immoveable property mentioned in the plaint and a decree is passed creating a charge on such property.

Mr. Lakshman, however, argued that the doctrine of lis pendens has no application to cases of involuntary sales. It is however clear to us that the principle of the doctrine of lis pendens applies equally to involuntary sales and is not confined to transfers inter vivos if the other conditions are satisfied. In *Pethu Aiyar v. Sankaranarayana Pillai*⁵ Justice Napier observed as follows:

though having regard to the provisions of section 2, proviso (d), section 52 as such might not apply to such cases. See *Man Singh v. Amantaka Prasad*⁶ and Tinoodhan Chatterjee, v.

*Trailokhya Charan Sanyal*⁷. In *Tinoodhan Chatterjee v. Trailokhya Charan Sanyal*⁷ the learned Judges held that "the doctrine of lis pendens is applicable to a purchase at an execution sale, and that the question may now be considered as set at rest by decisions of the Privy Council" (page 415).

In Ghose on Mortgages, Volume II, page 706; the learned author remarks that "the weight of authority is decidedly in favour of the extension of the doctrine to alienations in invitum," and at page 707 it is stated that in *Nilakant Banerji v. Suresh Chandra Mullick*⁸ their Lordships of the Privy Council expressed strong doubts as to the correctness of confining the principle to voluntary alienations. And the question may now be taken to be practically concluded by their Lordships' judgment in *Radhamadhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerji*⁹ and *Moti Lal v. Kurabuldin*¹⁰. In *Vedachari v. Narasimha Mudali*¹¹ Krishnan and Odgers, JJ., held that the doctrine of lis pendens applies to Court-sale also.

The question is discussed in Hukm Chand's Treatise on the law of res judicata at pages 713 and 714. The conclusion arrived at is that the weight of authority is in favour of the view that a purchaser at a sale in execution pending a suit is bound by the result in that suit. The inconvenience that would be caused by upholding the opposite view is forcibly pointed out in an elaborate judgment of Sir Richard Couch, C.J., in *Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Radhamadhub Holdar*¹². See also Bennett on Lis pendens, page 328, section 284.

We accordingly overrule the contention raised by the learned advocate for the appellant and hold that the principle of the doctrine of lis pendens applies to sales in Court auction also.

The last point raised by the learned advocate for the appellant is really the point that was strongly pressed by him in this second appeal. He argued that debts binding on a joint Hindu family have priority over maintenance of widows, and as the finding of the Lower Appellate Court that the decree in the Small Cause suit was in respect of a debt binding on the joint family has to be accepted, he argued that the claims of the widow, the 1st defendant and of the 2nd defendant, who is the auction purchaser in execution of the maintenance decree, could not prevail over the rights of the auction purchaser in execution of the Small Cause Court's decree. He strongly relied on the following observations in *Dose Thimmanna Bhutta v. Krishna Tantri*² of the learned Judges, Benson and Sankaran Nair, JJ., that "It is not alleged that, so far as the property in dispute before us is concerned, the mortgage debt due to him was contracted for the purpose of paying off any debt entitled to any priority over the widow's claim for maintenance, or already due by the mortgagor."

He also relied on the observations of Benson and Bhashyam Aiyangar, JJ., in *Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma*¹³ to the effect that the debts of a husband take precedence over the widow's claims for maintenance. Some other decisions were also referred to, to the same effect.

Turning to *Dose Thimmanna Bhutta v. Krishna Tantri*² it is clear that the observations relied on were only obiter. The Court as a matter of fact held in that case that the doctrine of lis pendens applied, and upheld the widow's claims. Further, it is not mentioned what debts are entitled to any priority over the widow's claim for maintenance and under what provisions of law. Mr. Lakshmananna admitted, and in our view very properly, that the case reported in *Dose Thimmanna Bhutta v. Krishna Tantri*² is not a decision on this point, and that the observations relied on at page 509 are only obiter. The decision in *Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma*¹³ does not lay down anything inconsistent with the view we are inclined to adopt. In that case there was no decree obtained by the widow creating a charge in respect of any specific immoveable property of the family; nor was her general claim for maintenance against the joint family estate reduced by any contract between the parties to the form of a specific charge on any specific immoveable properties of the family. In these circumstances, the learned Judges held that an auction purchaser in execution of a money decree binding on the family was entitled to the properties purchased by him, and that the general rights of a Hindu widow under Hindu law could not be put forward to resist the claim of such auction purchaser.

"The widow's claim being strictly to maintenance and maintenance only, without any defined share in the estate even on partition, and the kind of maintenance even that she can claim being dependent on the perhaps fluctuating circumstances of the joint family, it appears that although she may at her will get her claim recognised as chargeable on the estate in the hands of the co-parceners reduced to certainty, and secured as a specific charge on the estate, . . . yet if she could refrain from that course in the hope of sharing the improving circumstances of the family or through mere carelessness, she leaves to the co-parceners an unlimited estate to deal with at their discretion, and must share their ill as well as their good fortune."

In the absence of fraud, the above passage describes the widow's rights in general, and before her rights are reduced to the form of a charge on any specified family property.

The other decisions cited do not take the case any further. In those cases also there was no specific charge created, either by act of parties or by the decree of Court, over specific items of immoveable property belonging to the family for the maintenance due to the widow. Our attention was also drawn to Trevelyan's Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, page 99, where it is stated as follows:—

"A right of maintenance is not affected by a transfer made during the pendency of a suit for maintenance, unless such transfer be effected for the purpose of paying off a debt, which has priority over the claim for maintenance."

Mulla's Hindu Law, 6th Edition, section 570, page 578, was also relied on, where it is mentioned that

"Debts contracted by a Hindu take precedence over the right of maintenance of his wife or infant child, or his widow after his death. The same is true of debts contracted by the manager of the joint family of which the husband was a member, provided the debts were incurred for the benefit of the family."

The only authority quoted by the learned author, Sir E. J. Trevelyan, is Dose Thimmanna Bhutta v. Krishna Tantri,² about which we have already made our remarks. The passage quoted from Mr. Mulla's book refers, as we understand it, only to cases where the right of maintenance has not been reduced to the form of a specific charge either by private contract or by proceedings taken in Court. That is made clear by the concluding sentence in the same paragraph at page 579:

"But where maintenance has been made a charge upon the property, it takes precedence over the right of a subsequent purchaser of the same property in execution of a money decree, though the decree was in respect of debts binding on the family."

². (1906) I.L.R. 29 M. 508; 16 M.L.J. 413.

No doubt in paragraph 572 the learned author quotes the observations already referred to from *Dose Thimmanna Bhutta v. Krishna Tantri*² to the effect that "The transferee of immoveable properties pending a suit by a Hindu widow to establish a charge on specific immoveable property for her maintenance must hold the property subject to such charge, unless the transfer be effected for the purpose of paying off a debt which has priority over the widow's claim for maintenance."

In *Somasundaram Chetty v. Unnamalai Ammal*¹⁵ it was held by Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., that "A charge on joint family properties created by a decree for maintenance payable to the widow of a member of a joint Hindu family takes precedence over the right of a subsequent purchaser of the same properties in execution of a money decree binding on the family."

No objection could be, nor in fact was, taken by the learned advocate for the appellant to the decision in *Somasundaram Chetty v. Unnamalai Ammal*¹⁵. See also *Lakshman Ramchandra Joshia v. Satyabhamabai*¹⁴ per West, J., *Kuloda Prosad Chatterjee v. Jageshar Koer*¹⁶, *Muttia v. Virammal*¹⁷ and *Jamna Bai Ammal v. Balakrishna Tawker*¹⁸. In *Jamna Bai Ammal v. Balakrishna Tawker*¹⁸ Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao observed that

"(1) Under Hindu Law a widow's claim to maintenance is not a charge upon the estate of her deceased husband until it is fixed and specifically charged upon that estate either by agreement or by decree of Court and does not take precedence over unsecured debts which are binding on the family of her deceased husband; (2) that if the widow's claim has ripened into a specific charge it has priority over the claims of creditors whose rights have not been secured by alienation of property."

The cases in *Sham Lal v. Banna*¹⁹ and *Gur Dayal v. Kaunsila*²⁰ were relied on by the learned advocate for the appellant. But in neither of them was there a specific charge created in respect of the maintenance claim. The observation that even if there is a charge it would be subordinated to the claims of the creditor is not (so far as we are aware) supported by any texts of Hindu Law, and no such texts were cited to us. Section 2 of the Transfer of Property Act was also relied on to show that nothing in Chapter II of the Transfer of Property Act (and section 52 forms part of Chapter II) shall be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu Law; but as no rule of Hindu Law has been brought to our notice supporting the appellant's contention, we are of opinion that the statement that the debts of a Hindu family take precedence over the claims of Hindu widows for maintenance would apply only so long as the claim for maintenance is not made a charge on any specific property.

In these circumstances, the question arises whether any reason has been shown why the principle of the doctrine of lis pendens should not apply to such cases as the one before us. After a decree is passed charging specific items of immoveable property of the joint Hindu family for the maintenance due to the widow, it is clear that the rights of a simple money creditor of the joint family do not take priority over the charge created by the decree,—fraud and collusion apart. Does it make any difference when such money creditor seeks to proceed against immoveable property belonging to the family at a time when a suit by the widow claiming to charge that immoveable property is pending in a Court, if such a decree in her favour is ultimately passed. The very principle of the doctrine of lis pendens is to prevent creation of fresh rights with reference to immoveable properties which are the subject of adjudication in suits pending before Courts. After decree, the decree operates, and would protect the decree-holder against any subsequent transferees. One object of the doctrine of lis pendens is to prevent the plaintiff's rights and claims to property being prejudiced by delay of Courts in disposing of the suit and to prevent dealing of the property by or at the instance of the defendant to the prejudice of the plaintiff.

The purpose of the rule is to keep the subject-matter of the litigation within the power of the Court until the judgment or decree shall be entered, since otherwise, by successive alienations pending the suit, the judgment or decree could be rendered abortive and impossible of execution. To give effect to the doctrine of lis pendens, two things seem to be indispensable:

(1) That the litigation must be about some specific thing which must necessarily be affected by the termination of the suit; and

(2) that the particular property involved in the suit must be so defined in the description that any one reading it can learn thereby what property is intended to be made the subject of litigation.

If the conditions are fulfilled, the plea that the purchase was made bona fide and that the purchaser paid a full consideration for it will not avail against such judgment or decree; nor will the purchaser be permitted to prove that he had no notice of the suit. The law infers that all persons have notice of proceedings of Courts of record. See Black on Judgment, Vol. II, section 550.

v.
subbamma

The principle of the doctrine of lis pendens is explained by the Privy Council in *Faiyaz Husain Khan v. Prag Narain*²¹. Lord Macnaghten, after referring to Lord Justice Turner's observations in *Bellamy v. Sabine*²² to the effect that "it would plainly be impossible that any action or suit could be brought to a successful termination if alienations pendente lite were permitted to prevail" observed that the correct mode of stating the doctrine, as Cranworth, L.C., observed in the same case, is that

"pendente lite neither party to the litigation can alienate the property in dispute so as to affect his opponent."

It being clear, and in fact not disputed, that section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to a suit for maintenance where a charge is claimed in respect of specific immoveable property, we are not able to see how the principle of the doctrine of lis pendens ceases to be applicable during the period between the date of the plaint and the date of the decree. No specific rule of Hindu Law to the contrary has been quoted to us, and the principle of the doctrine of lis pendens must be held to apply, it not being pretended that the rights created in favour of the plaintiff's assignor, P.W. 1, during the pendency of the maintenance suit were under the authority of the Court in which that suit was pending. Where reckless plaints are filed claiming charges upon all immoveable properties belonging to the defendants without any justification whatsoever, and with a view to embarrass the management by the kartha of the family, section 52 empowers the Court to sanction that property which is the subject-matter of the suit might be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit on such terms as the Court may impose. If the Court be satisfied that for paying off debts due by the family, the defendant who is the manager of the family should be authorised to sell any of the properties mentioned in the maintenance plaint, then it is open to the Court, if it thinks fit, to sanction the sale or transfer of any such property. Filing of such plaints in Courts should be taken to constitute notice to all persons concerned and unless the money creditor of the family took steps to get sanction of the Court under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, it would seem to logically follow that any transfer of the property mentioned in the maintenance plaint could not affect the plaintiff, in case she got a decree charging that very property.

Our attention was not drawn to any direct decision on the point we have to decide. There is, however, an observation of Justice Phillips in the case reported in *Rajah of Kalahasti v. Venkatappa Nayanam Bahadur Varu*²³. At page 550 it is observed as follows:—

“Under her husband's will the widow obtained no specific charge on the estate and could only claim the allowance as a legatee or as a Hindu widow, but from the date of her suit, namely, 22nd March, 1897, she became entitled to a charge for her allowance by virtue of the decree, dated 22nd August, 1900, which must be deemed to refer back her right to the date of her plaint. As these appeals are concerned mainly with the relative priority of Lakshmikantamma's claim and the claims of the several appellants, it is important to remember that the widow's claim dates back to 22nd March, 1897, and any mortgages or charges created after that date would not affect her right.”

No doubt the question is not discussed by the learned Judge, but the observation of the learned Judge is in accordance with the view we are inclined to take for the reasons already mentioned by us.

Our attention was drawn to the decision of a learned Judge of this Court in the case reported in *Rattamma v. Seshachalam Sarma*²⁴ where he held that a charge takes effect only from the date of the decree. If the learned Judge intended to lay down that even in cases where a plaint prays for specific charge on specific immoveable properties mentioned in it, a charge could take effect only from the date of the decree, and not from the date of the suit, then, with all respect, we are unable to agree with him. No doubt in cases where no charge is claimed on any specific immoveable property, but only a general claim is made against the defendant (manager) and the joint family property generally, without specifying in the plaint any property, then, in such cases, a decree creating a charge on any specific immoveable property would take effect ordinarily only from the date of the decree; but the case would be different when the plaint claims a charge on specific immoveable property and the decree also grants such prayer and charges such specific property. See in this connection Mayne's Hindu Law, Section 462, where the learned author states as follows:—

“Where a widow had sued for maintenance and had named specific pieces of property in order to show the amount she was entitled to, but had made no claim for a charge on the property, but such a charge was in fact created by the decree, the charge was held not to be binding as against a mortgage made pending suit, by virtue of the doctrine of lis pendens. It would have been different if the suit had been to obtain a charge."

A somewhat similar question has arisen in England and America. The general principles of the doctrine of lis pendens being the same there as in India, we think, it is perhaps permissible to refer to analogous cases decided in those countries. It has there been held that

"If in a suit for alimony, relief is sought in respect of specific property, either by making it chargeable with the payment of alimony, or setting it apart for the use of or as the property of one of the parties, or of partitioning or dividing it between them, the doctrine of lis pendens will apply"—(see page 723, Hukm Chand's Treatise on Res Judicata).

In Ulrich v. Ulrich,²⁵ the suit was for maintenance, yet the Supreme Court held the rule of lis pendens to apply, as a certain lot was described in the bill, and it was alleged that the lot constituted the principal property of the defendant out of which the alimony should be decreed. In *Wilkinson v. Elliot*²⁶ the suit was for divorce and alimony from certain property specifically described, and it was contended that the doctrine had no application in such suits, but Johnston, J., held

"If a divorce is asked on account of the fault of the husband, the wife may ask not only that all her own land may be restored to her that has not been disposed of, but may describe particular property belonging to the husband, and ask that the same may be set apart for her as permanent alimony. When this is done, the property is made the subject-matter of litigation, and is brought within the jurisdiction of the Court, and any one who purchases the same should be bound by the judgment or decree thereafter rendered. If in such an action there was no specific property pointed out, but only a general prayer for alimony, the doctrine would not apply, for the reason that the alimony might be awarded out of either real or personal property; and as no particular property was described and made the subject-matter of the litigation, no one could have noticed that any particular property was involved."

Again, in *Powell v. Campbell*²⁷ it was observed that "In many cases where, in divorce proceedings, the application is for alimony proper, that is, an allowance to be paid at regular periods for the wife's support, it was held that the rule of lis pendens does not apply where the suit is in personam, and did not relate to any specific part of the personal or real estate of the husband. If, however, the wife in her complaint specifically describes property which she asks the Court to decree to her for her support, there seems to be no well-founded reason why the rule of lis pendens should not apply. . . . In such a case, a purchaser pendente lite with notice of the suit and its objects knows that the property described may be decreed to the wife, and that one of the objects of the suit is to obtain a decree awarding such property to her (see

The conclusion would seem to be that if the prayer in the bill be for alimony out of her husband's general estate, then the doctrine of lis pendens would not apply; but if the prayer be for alimony to be assigned to the wife out of any specific property of the husband mentioned in the bill or petition, then the rule of lis pendens would apply. The discussion is interesting, and throws light on the applicability of the doctrine of lis pendens to cases like the one before the Court.

For the above reasons, we hold that section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to a suit by a Hindu widow in which she claims to have her maintenance charged on specific items of immoveable property mentioned in the plaint; that the principle of the doctrine of lis pendens applies to sales in invitum that take place during the pendency of such suits; that a decree obtained by the plaintiff in such a suit creating a specific charge over specific items of immoveable property mentioned in the plaint operates to give her a charge as from the date of the plaint, and not as from the date of the decree only, unless there be anything in the decree to the contrary; that without the sanction of the Court, transfers inter vivos or sales in invitum during the pendency of such suit could not prevail over such charge claimed in the plaint and granted by the decree; that a simple money creditor of a joint Hindu family has no priority over such charge granted by the decree, in the absence of fraud or collusion, and an auction purchaser, during the pendency of such maintenance suit, of an item of property over which a charge was claimed in the plaint and was granted by the decree who purchased in execution of a simple money decree binding on the family, is not entitled to priority over another auction purchaser of such property in proceedings taken to execute such maintenance decree.

We would accordingly dismiss the second appeal with costs.

JUDGMENTS. Ramesam, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit, C.S. No. 543 of 1926, on the Original Side filed by the respondent Nathmull originally against three defendants. Later on the suit proceeded against defendants 1 and 3 only. A decree was given against those defendants by the learned Trial Judge, and defendants 1 and 3 are the appellants before us.

Ramesam, J.

The facts out of which the suit arose may be shortly stated as follows:—The 3rd defendant Meghraj Sowcar and his partner Surajmull Sowcar filed a suit against Chunilal Omaidmull Sowcar and another for dissolution of partnership, for taking of accounts and for recovery of a certain sum of money—C.S. No. 261 of 1923. On the 17th of September the suit was decreed by our brother, Waller, J. The plaintiffs applied on the 24th of September, 1924, for attachment of the defendants' interests in the business of Nathmull and Chunilal which had been carried on at No. 99, D'Mellows Road, Choolai, Madras and for the appointment of a Commissioner to take an inventory of articles, jewels and cloths, vessels, etc., pledged with the 1st defendant and to be found in the same premises and to initial the books of account. On the same day notice was ordered and one Mr. C. Devarajan was appointed Commissioner. On the 25th of September the defendants were ordered to admit the Commissioner for the purpose of initialling the accounts and taking an inventory. On the 14th of October notice to Nathmull and Chunilal was ordered. On the 17th Nathmull's counsel asked for time. Meanwhile on the 7th of October Chunilal was declared insolvent and on the 22nd of October the matter having become known to the appellants the application of 24th September was not pressed. The order on that day contained the note, "The question of alleged partnership with Nathmull is left open." In the affidavit accompanying the application of the 24th of September, 1924 it was stated that the business in Nos. 98 and 99, D'Mellows Road, was carried on under the name and style of Nathmull Chunilal. The petitioner's case was that Chunilal was the sole proprietor. The Commissioner made a report on the same date that when he went to the premises he found a piece of paper affixed on the door bearing an inscription.

"To

95, D'Mellows Road, Perambore Barracks."

He also states in his report that neither the defendant Chunilal nor Nathmull's brother Mothichand would give the keys of the premises and they also refused to produce the account books. After the adjudication of Chunilal his property vested in the Official Assignee and Meghraj moved the Official Assignee for taking steps to reduce to his possession the property of Chunilal. Accordingly on the 2nd of November the Official Assignee sent his searcher Kuppuswami with Meghraj to the premises in question. He addressed a letter Exhibit B to the insolvent Chunilal in which he requested the addressee to permit the searcher along with Meghraj to take an inventory of all the articles in the house. The letter then says:

"Should you raise any objection whatsoever, he is authorised to bring in Police assistance."

On the 2nd of November the searcher and Meghraj went to the shop, Nos. 98 and 99, D'Mellows Road. The evidence shows that a policeman was also taken who was standing on the verandah. Meghraj also was standing aside. There was at first some oral protest but ultimately, probably, on account of the presence of the policeman, without any disturbance the account books in the shop were removed and the shop was sealed. The list of account books is Exhibit B-1. It contains a note that Nathmull claimed these books. The Official Assignee immediately applied to the Court for an order to attach the goods in the premises on the ground that the business carried on in those premises was the business of the insolvent himself. That is, he practically adopted the case of Meghraj when he applied for attachment in C.S. No. 261 of 1923. Nathmull himself also applied by petition No. 355 of 1924 for a declaration that the goods belonged solely to him and not to the insolvent. The petition is Ex. I and the affidavit accompanying the said petition is Exhibit I-A. These two petitions came on for orders before Srinivasa Aiyangar, J. His judgment in the said matter is Exhibit I-B and the order is Exhibit B-3. As is seen from the above narration of facts the case of the Official Assignee before Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., was that the goods solely belonged to the insolvent and Nathmull's case was that the goods in the shop belonged solely to himself. There is, of course, an intermediate case possible that the shop belonged to a partnership consisting of Nathmull and Chunilal and not wholly to Nathmull, nor wholly to Chunilal. This case of partnership was suggested before Waller, J., as the note in the order, dated the 22nd October, 1910, shows; but who alleged it is not clear. Before Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., the burden of proof was placed on the Official Assignee (vide note dated the 23rd of February, 1925) and the learned Judge in his judgment says that he was not considering any question as to whether Chunilal had any interest in the business short of total ownership. The only question he considered was whether Chunilal was the sole proprietor of the shop or not. On this matter he found against the Official Assignee; that is, he found that Chunilal was not the sole proprietor of the shop. This finding, of course, does not mean that Nathmull was the sole proprietor of the shop, for the finding that Chunilal was not the sole proprietor is consistent with Chunilal and Nathmull being partners in the shop. But this possible alternative case was not considered by the learned Judge. On his finding Chunilal was not the sole proprietor it followed that Nathmull had either a partial interest or sole proprietorship in the shop and, therefore, he directed that the goods should be delivered to Nathmull. The order Exhibit B-3 is worded as follows:—

"It is declared that the properties attached and sealed by the Official Assignee at premises Nos. 98 and 99, D'Mellows Road, Choolai, Madras, belong to the said Nathmull and not to the insolvent herein and it is ordered as follows:—

(i) that the application, taken out by the said Official Assignee do stand dismissed out of this Court; . . . " etc.

If this order is read solely by itself and without the light afforded by the judgment it certainly means that it was declared that the goods belonged solely to Nathmull; but it is equally clear from the judgment that the learned Judge never decided such a thing. If it is impossible to construe the decree consistently with the judgment, it would be a matter for the amendment of the decree and if it is a matter of any importance to set the matters right, we would adjourn the appeal to enable the appellants to apply for amendment of the decree, and, if the amendment is refused, to file an appeal against such order refusing amendment and such appeal and this appeal might be posted together. But it is possible to construe the decree in the light of the judgment and whenever it is possible to read the decree in two ways, one way consistent with the judgment and the other inconsistent with it, it is our duty to construe it in a way consistent with the judgment. Though read by itself the order implied that the goods solely belonged to Nathmull we think that the proper construction of the order is that the goods belonged at least to some extent if not wholly to Nathmull also but are not the sole property of the insolvent. This matter does not seem to be of great importance now, though before the learned Judge this was one of the points very much debated. The defendants sought to cross-examine the plaintiff for the purpose of showing that Nathmull and Chunilal were at least partners in the shop. But the learned Trial Judge holding that the order of Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., constituted the matter res judicata disallowed such cross-examination and would not permit the defendants to adduce further evidence. It seems to us that in the way we construe the order in the light of the judgment the matter is not res judicata and that the evidence of the defendants to show that Nathmull and Chunilal were partners ought not to have been shut out. But even then it is doubtful whether the Official Assignee could have directly removed the goods from the shop or sealed the premises. The present action is filed for damages for trespass by stealing the premises and by the removal of the account books. Under the English law the bankruptcy of one of the partners seems to put an end to the partnership (vide Lindley, p. 800), but under the Indian law this does not seem to be the case. The bankruptcy affords a ground for the other partners to go to Court and obtain a dissolution, vide section 254 (2) of the Contract Act. Under section 98 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act the Court may authorise the Official Assignee to continue or commence any suit or proceeding in his name and that of the insolvent's partner and any release by the partner is void. But it does not appear that the Official Assignee can take possession of the goods of the partnership without the consent of the other partner or partners in whose possession they may happen to be. Still one would have thought that if the insolvent was a partner in the shop the action of the Official Assignee and Meghraj had more justification than if the business belonged wholly to Nathmull and Chunilal had no interest in it at all. Except from this point of view, namely whether the action of the Official Assignee may be more wrongful in one case than in another, the question of the interpretation of Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.'s order does not seem to be of any importance.

Official Assignee, Madras
v.
Nathmull.
Ramesam, J.

The appeal of the Official Assignee was argued on two grounds: (1) that notice under section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure was necessary before suing, and (2) that the plaintiff abandoned his claim for damages for what the Official Assignee did on the 3rd of November, 1924. To support this case of abandonment Exhibits II and II-A were relied on. Exhibit II was the petition and Exhibit II-A was an affidavit filed along with it. The petition was for leave to sue the Official Assignee for certain action taken by him on the 18th of May, 1926, the Official Assignee on that occasion being Mr. Albuquerque, the 2nd defendant in the present suit. This application was dismissed on the ground that no leave of the Court was necessary before the suit is filed, and in the affidavit it was stated in paragraph 9 referring to the incidents of the 3rd of November, 1924,

"I was advised in the circumstances by my counsel not to press for damages and, therefore, I gave up my claim for damages."

The petition No. 355 of 1924 not only contained a prayer for declaration that the goods belonged to Nathmull but also a claim for damages. At the time of the argument the counsel thought that no claim for damages for trespass can be properly made before the Insolvency Court and therefore it was not pressed and we think this is all what was meant by paragraph 9.

of the affidavit. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, the learned advocate for the appellant, relied on section 86 of the Act and argued that the claim for damages can be made before the Insolvency Court and having been made and withdrawn the present suit does not lie. But it seems to us that section 86 cannot relate to claim for damages. It relates only to the validity of any act or decision of the Official Assignee. On appeal under section 86 the Court can set aside any such decision or act. The words "as it thinks just" merely refer to any incidental or consequential order necessary for giving effect to the rest of the order but cannot refer to a claim for damages for wrongful trespass to goods. The Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a claim for damages and when the plaintiff resolved not to press the claim before Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., he was not withdrawing any claim which was cognizable by the Insolvency Court; nor can it be said that he gave up his claim for damages for all time. All that he meant by paragraph 9 was that he did not press his claim at that stage. This argument of the learned advocate for the appellant therefore fails.

We now come to the second ground, namely, that notice is necessary. A number of English cases were cited before us. It seems to me that most of these cases are not of any help in the present case. Some of them related to the question whether a public officer was protected from being held responsible for his acts under the Public Authorities Protection Act or similar enactments and not to the question whether notice was necessary. One of the decisions, namely, Selmes v. Judge,¹ related to the question whether notice of action was necessary. The question there arose under 5 and 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, section 109, which ran as follows:—

"No action or suit shall be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of, or under the authority of this Act, until twenty-one days' notice has been given thereof in writing. . . ."

There notice was necessary for a suit in respect of anything done "in pursuance of or under the authority of this Act." Still Blackburn, J., and two other Judges held that the defendant was entitled to notice.

Blackburn, J., said:

"I agree that if a person knows that he has not under a statute authority to do a certain thing, and yet intentionally does that thing, he cannot shelter himself by pretending that the thing was done with intent to carry out that statute."

He then proceeds to observe that in that case there was nothing to show that the defendants when they made the rate in question knew that it was not allowed by the statute under which they were appointed. He then observed:

"The only illegal act done by the defendants was to make an informal rate; they proceeded to collect it, and received from the plaintiff the amount assessed upon him; in these transactions it is clear that the defendants intended to act according to the duties of their office as surveyors, although they mistook the legal mode of carrying out their intention. Neither in *Hermann v. Seneschal*² nor in *Roberts v. Orchard*³ was it decided that a defendant would not be entitled to notice of action, because he had been mistaken in the law. In *Hardwick v. Moss*⁴ surveyors had obstructed a highway without any statutory authority, but the Court of Exchequer held that as they intended to act pursuant to the Highway Act, they were entitled to notice of action."

This decision and the last decision quoted in it show that, even where public officers were not acting strictly according to the statute, provided they intended to act according to the duties of their office and provided they did not know that they were committing a mistake, they would be entitled to notice even if they were really acting somewhat illegally. It is unnecessary to discuss the question whether the Official Assignee knew that he had no power to seize the goods of a partnership when only one of the partners had become an insolvent; for it is clear that when the Official Assignee was moved in the matter he acted on the supposition that the goods in the shop belonged solely to Chunilal though the business was carried on in the name of Nathmull and Chunilal. In fact the case of Meghra; in C.S. No. 261 of 1923 and the Official Assignee at that time was that Nathmull was brought in merely as a cloak to shield Chunilal from the creditors. In the deposition of Nathmull before the Trial Judge it is admitted that Chunilal was carrying on business in the premises Nos. 98 and 99 up to the 15th of December, 1923, and it is only from the beginning of 1924 that Nathmull who was previously carrying on business at No. 95, D'Mellows Road, began to carry on business also at No. 99. The business at one place was looked after by Chunilal and at the other place by a partner named Rajmal. It is also admitted that in 1924 he got income-tax notice and that it was sent in the name of Nathmull Chunilal. Practically he never took any steps to get the notice corrected. It is also admitted that he sent certain jewels pledged with him by one Chengayya Naidu for sale and these jewels were sold under instructions from a firm called Nathmull Chunilal. He also admits that at the end of September, 1924, his business was being carried on in the name of Chunilal Nathmull. He says that he protested against his name being used but did not dispense with Chunilal's services. The whole of this part of Nathmull's cross-examination shows that the plaintiff is not a man to be trusted, that certainly the business in the shop did not solely belong to him, that Chunilal had a good deal of interest in the business, that either he and Chunilal were partners or that the business wholly belonged to Chunilal and that Nathmull was lending his own name to shield him from creditors. The latter alternative, it is true, was ruled out by the judgment of Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., but there is a very strong suspicion that the plaintiff was colluding with Chunilal in some manner for the purpose of shielding him from the creditors. To what extent the collusion has gone it is difficult to say. There is a strong suspicion that the whole business is Chunilal's; Nathmull merely associating his name for the purpose of shielding him; but even if this surmise is not correct, at least both were partners and Chunilal had some interest in the business and certainly the case of Nathmull that he is the sole proprietor is absolutely false. However, as I have already said, the Official Assignee thought that the goods belonged solely to Chunilal. When he wrote the letter Exhibit B and when he sent his searcher he simply intended to exercise the powers given to him under section 58 of taking possession of the insolvent's properties. But it is said that a policeman was brought and this at least constituted a show of force. This may be so. It may be that because of the policeman the searcher got possession of the account books easily; but it is also clear that there was no disturbance and no force was used. When Nathmull was asked "What do you mean by forcibly?" he said "I mean that though I protested that the shop belonged to me and that the property in the shop was also mine, in spite of it they did not believe me and they sealed the shop". This answer shows that no actual force was used. There might have been some oral protest. Now it is contended by Mr. Grant that the powers of the Official Assignee are merely those of receivers and receivers have no power of dispossessing forcibly persons in possession, that if they find any resistance in taking possession, they ought to apply to the Court for a warrant under section 59 of the Act and the Court may grant a warrant to any officer of the Court or a police officer and that it is not the business of the Official Assignee to seize the goods. It is true that when the Official Assignee apprehends any serious resistance he may seek the help of the Court under section 59 and under that section the Court issues warrants to any officer of the Court or any police officer and not to the Official Assignee. But section 59 does not involve any prohibition to the Official Assignee to obtain possession in any manner he likes. It is only an enabling section and not a prohibiting section. Nor does clause 2 of section 58 prohibit the Official Assignee from taking a police officer as a protection for himself in obtaining possession of insolvent's goods. I do not think it can be said that a receiver can never take a police officer with him in the course of his duties. The distinction drawn by Mr. Grant between taking possession of goods and seizing goods is rather subtle. In either case certainly the Official Assignee is taking possession. If he forcibly seizes the goods he may take the risk of getting into trouble and it may be prudent for him to obtain possession through Court under section 59. But all this is different from saying that he can never seize the goods and he ought not to be accompanied by a policeman to overawe any resistance in obtaining possession. In the present case, no force was actually used. The presence of the policeman avoided any disturbance and the possession of the goods was obtained practically in a peaceful manner. I do not mean to say by this last observation that the Official Assignee is immune for liability for it turns out that he is not entitled to take possession of the goods found not to belong solely to Chunilal. It may, therefore, be that he is liable for some damages. But to say that he is liable is one matter and to say that he was not acting as Official Assignee is another. In my opinion, even if it turned out ultimately that he was not acting strictly legally in taking possession of the goods which he believed to belong to Chunilal but which did not really belong to him, he was certainly purporting to act as Official Assignee within the meaning of section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. I am unable to agree with the view taken by the learned Trial Judge that "it is only if the acts done by a public officer are acts which that public officer is in law entitled to do that he can be said to be acting or purporting to act as such public officer; he cannot do or purport to do an act which the statute which casts upon him certain duties and defines such duties does not enable him in that capacity to do."

So far as the acts done in a public capacity are concerned, it may be that the acts should be strictly according to law. But as to acts purporting to be done in a judicial capacity to say that they should be strictly according to law is to make the word "purporting" nugatory. It seems to me that the decision in

*Selmes v. Judge*¹ and the cases cited in it are inconsistent with such a view. The word "purporting" means intending to seem. This almost implies that, though it is a case of not being strictly according to law, one may still intend it to appear as if it is according to law. Vide *Koti Reddi v. Subbiah*⁵, *Abdul Rahim v. Abdul Rahman*⁶ and Dakshina Ranjan Ghosh v. Omar Chand Oswal.⁷ The first of these is a decision of a Full Bench. The Village Munsif's act in that case was apparently according to practice and was one which he would ordinarily do, but in that particular case it was wrongful for he paid the balance of the sale proceeds to the owner though there was an attachment. He did it mala fide. The learned Judges held that the mala fides had nothing to do with the case and he was entitled to notice. Wallis, C.J., observed that the words "purporting to be done" are wider than "done or intended to be done" under the provisions of this Act in section 264 of the Public Health Act and that they also include "acts intended to seem to be done in his official capacity." This last observation shows that even where an act is not strictly according to law section 80 may apply. The following observations of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., at page 811 support the same view:

"In the present case, the appellant's act in paying over the balance of the revenue sale-proceeds to the defaulter was an act falling within the ordinary duties of his office as Village Munsif and he clearly professed to do it in execution of that duty and it would be quite reasonable on the part of an ordinary third person who becomes aware of the Village Munsif's act in so returning the balance to the defaulter to receive the impression that the act was done by the Village Munsif in his official capacity."

In the present case, it is the ordinary duty of the Official Assignee to take possession of the insolvent's goods. When he proceeds to the shop, removes the account books and seals the premises, it is quite reasonable on the part of an ordinary person to receive the impression that the act was done by the Official Assignee in his official capacity and the Official Assignee is himself professing to do it in the execution of his duties. Though the whole thing turns out to be wrongful because the goods did not solely belong to the insolvent, wherever the Official Assignee is honestly mistaken and takes goods not belonging to the insolvent in the belief that they belong to him, he is certainly acting in his official capacity. A simple case of that kind is Joosub Haji v. N. W. Kemp.⁸ In that case the timber taken possession of belonged to a third person and not to the insolvent. It was held that notice was necessary. In *Abdul Rahim v. Abdul Rahman*⁶ a police officer entered a person's name in the history sheet and it was held that S. 80 applied. That was a case of an act which is in the ordinary duty of the official though in the particular case he did it with improper motive. In *Dakshina Ranjan Ghosh v. Omar Chand Oswal*⁷ a police officer arrested a person whom he knew to be innocent. He also extorted some money. It was held that so far as the first act was concerned notice was necessary but not as to the second. I agree with these decisions. I admit that it is very difficult to describe in abstract language where exactly to draw the line. But I should say that in the practical application I should scarcely feel any difficulty. It is more a question of fact with reference to the surrounding circumstances and with reference to the ordinary duties of the official and not whether every part of his conduct is strictly according to law. In my opinion the Official Assignee was acting in his official capacity and he was entitled to notice under S. 80. The suit, so far as he is concerned, is not maintainable. The appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout as against him.

We now come to the case of the 3rd defendant. It is true he is a creditor who was instructing the Official Assignee and moving him to take the account books. He certainly believed that the goods in the shop belonged to Chunilal, but this belief does not save him from liability if as a matter of fact he is guilty of any trespass. But the person who actually committed trespass is the searcher of the Official Assignee. The evidence shows that Meghraj merely stood by and took no part in the proceedings. Of course he pointed out the shop to the searcher leaving to the Official Assignee and his subordinates to carry on the proceeding whether it amounted to trespass or not. The person who actually trespassed is certainly the Official Assignee's assistant and he would be certainly formally liable, provided the action was brought in the proper form. But I do not see how Meghraj is liable for the trespass. Inducing a person to trespass is scarcely a ground of action. There is no analogy between such an act and abetment under the criminal law, nor does the principle of procuring a breach of contract extend to other torts. The result is that Meghraj cannot be held liable for moving the Official Assignee, himself not having committed any trespass to goods or premises. The appeal is, therefore, also allowed against him and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout. We certify for two counsels. It is agreed that, in appeal, the costs will be taken by the Official Assignee.

Cornish, J.

Cornish, J.—I have come to the same conclusion. In my opinion the forcible entry by the Official Assignee into the plaintiff's premises without a warrant under S. 59, Insolvency Act, was a tortious act. But I do not think it follows that, because the Insolvency Act does not sanction what the Official Assignee did, his act cannot be regarded as purporting to be done by him in his official capacity.

The principle to be derived from the reported cases on the subject appears to be, that if the act of the officer is one which was ostensibly done by him in the performance of his duties, the act will be deemed as purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, even though he has acted mala fide. This is the test applied by Sir John Wallis, C.J., in *Koti Reddi v. Subbiah*⁵ in the case where a Village Munsif, knowing that the debtor's property had been attached by the plaintiff, fraudulently paid to the debtor the balance of moneys realized from the sale of his property under a distraint for revenue. At page 809 Sir John Wallis said:

"In the present case there were facts justifying the Village Munsif in acting in his official capacity, and there was no occasion for him to resort to the defence that he bona fide, though erroneously, believed in the existence of such facts."

Similarly in Dakshina Ranjan Ghosh v. Omar Chand Oswal,⁷ where the question arose out of the act of a police officer in making a wrongful arrest, Sir L. Sanderson, C.J., holding that the suit for false imprisonment brought by the aggrieved party was not maintainable without the notice required by S. 80, Civil Procedure Code, observed (p. 999):

"On the facts of this case there is no doubt that the defendant was a public officer, and on the facts which I have already stated, in my opinion, there is equally no doubt that the act, namely, the arrest of the plaintiff, was an act purporting to be done by the defendant in his official capacity."

The same test was applied in *Abdul Rahim v. Abdul Rahman*⁶ and in Joosub Haji v. N. W. Kemp,⁸ where it seems to have been assumed that the act of the Official Assignee in seizing somebody else's property in mistake for the insolvent's property was an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, for there was no argument on the point. On the other hand, this test would clearly not cover such acts as the act of the police officer in Narayan Hari v. Yeshwant Raoji and *Dattatraya Ramchandra v. Annappa Pandurang*⁹ in assaulting a person in his custody, the reason being that it cannot be regarded as coming within the functions of a public officer that he should commit an offence under the Penal Code.

Applying these considerations to the facts before us it appears to me that what was done by the Official Assignee falls within the test laid down in *Koti Reddi v. Subbiah*⁵ and *Dakshina Ranjan Ghosh v. Omar Chand Oswal*⁷. Admittedly the Official Assignee took away the account books and sealed up the shop of the plaintiff intending as Assignee of the insolvent Chunilal's estate to take possession of Chunilal's property. The plaint makes no suggestion to the contrary. It is equally indisputable that the act of the Official Assignee in writing the letter (Exhibit B) threatening the insolvent that police assistance would be called in if the searcher was obstructed, and the calling in of a policeman by the searcher when admission was refused to him, had no other purpose than to ensure the searcher's performance of his duties without obstruction or molestation. I think it very probable that when the Official Assignee wrote Exhibit B he did not appreciate that if the threat were put into force it might involve him in an action for trespass. However that may be, I do not see how the circumstances of a trespass resulting from what the Official Assignee did, can make his act any the less an act purporting to be done in his official capacity. For these reasons I think that the failure of the plaintiff to give the required notice is fatal to his suit and that his suit must be dismissed.

With regard to the case against the other defendant, Meghraj, I agree with what has been said by my learned brother in his judgment.

disclosure of facts by the creditor—How far would vitiate a contract of indemnity—Payment by a promissory note only operates by way of conditional discharge—Presumption.

A bank, on the guarantee of the defendant, consented to put through a transaction with a certain firm which required overdraft to the extent of Rs. 10,000. At the date of the guarantee letter a sum of Rs. 5,000 was due to the bank by the indemnified firm. The main question that arose was whether a non-disclosure by the bank of the fact of a past indebtedness of the firm would vitiate the contract of indemnity under S. 143 of the Indian Contract Act.

Held, that the balance of authority was clearly in favour of the view that where a person stood surety for another as regards an advance to be made by a bank, the bank was under no obligation to disclose any past indebtedness existing at the date of the contract of suretyship and that it was a matter which the person standing as surety had to inform himself. If, of course, he wanted information and the bank gave wrong information it might vitiate the contract of suretyship.

Case-law discussed.

Held also that if the surety was liable, he was liable also for the amount of promissory notes accepted as conditional payments by the bank and which were dishonoured.

Where for reducing a liability a promissory note is given, the presumption is that it operates only as a conditional discharge.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant. This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff to recover Rs. 10,053-1-0 with further interest and costs claimed to be due in respect of a guarantee by the defendant guaranteeing payment of the sums that may be due by a firm which carried on business in the name of N. Nanchappa Chettiar. It is stated in the plaint that one N. Nanchappa Chettiar and two others, N. Krishnappa Chettiar and T. N. Krishnappa Chettiar, were carrying on business in partnership under the name and style of N. Nanchappa Chettiar at Olavakkod, that this firm required an overdraft to the extent of Rs. 10,000 and that this transaction was put through by the Bank on the guarantee of the defendant. The form that the guarantee took was the execution of a promissory note in favour of the firm by the defendant for Rs. 10,000 on the 15th March, 1923, the endorsement of the note to the Bank and the passing of a letter on the same date in which the terms of the guarantee are set out.

The first question is whether in respect of these three promissory notes the Bank was entitled to make an entry in the current account debiting the amount when the bills were dishonoured. There can be little doubt that these notes were endorsed over to the Bank in order that credit may be given in the account for the amount of the bills and the Bank took them upon the expectation that the monies would be paid by Govindan Nair. When they were not paid the Bank had a right to make the entries. It is not suggested that the Bank treated them as complete discharge. The general presumption is that a promissory note given for reducing a liability only operates as a conditional discharge for the liability. We need only refer to *Palaniappa Chetty v. Arunachellam Chetty*¹ and the judgment of Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., in Jambu Chetty v. Palaniappa Chettiar.² As regards the right to re-appropriate, it is clear in this case that no intimation was given to the surety of the first appropriation and therefore the Bank, when they sent a letter through their vakil, had a right to re-appropriate the amount. This is clear from the decision in *The Mecca*³ and *Chegganmull Sowcar v. Manicka Mudaliar*⁴ where it was observed that so long as notice had not been given as to the appropriation of any amount to any particular account, it is open to the creditor to alter it and make re-appropriation. If the defendant is liable, he is liable also for the amount of the promissory notes accepted as conditional payment by the Bank and which were dishonoured and on being dishonoured corresponding debits were made by the Bank in the account.

Then the last question is as regards the guarantee not being enforceable owing to concealment of facts. In this connection reference is made to S. 143 of the Contract Act which runs as follows:—

It is argued that the material circumstances in this case is that the fact that the date of the guarantee letter Ex. A about Rs. 5,000 was due by the firm already to the Bank not disclosed, and that on account of this non-disclosure the contract of indemnity is not enforceable. It is not disputed that on the date of Ex. A the amount which was due by Nanchappa Chettiar under the current account was not mentioned; and the question is whether such non-mention vitiates the contract of indemnity. We have already given our reasons for holding that Ex. A, the letter of guarantee, covers past indebtedness also and that this fact was within the knowledge of the defendant when he signed it.

There is therefore no statement of the defendant that if he had been informed of this already existing debt of Rs. 5,000 he would not have signed the letter of guarantee. We must therefore treat the case on the footing that there is a duty cast on the Bank to disclose the past indebtedness under the current account of N. Nanchappa Chettiar irrespective of the defendant's knowledge to presume that that duty not having been performed the guarantee is invalid. We do not think that the authorities cited by Mr. Menon lead to this conclusion. The balance of authority is that there is difference between fiduciary guarantees and guarantees by persons in favour of Banks and that though in the former case there may be a duty to disclose all material acts there is no such duty in the case of a Bank which takes a guarantee from a person to disclose the indebtedness of the person guaranteed at the date of the guarantee. In *Hamilton v. Watson*⁵ it was held by the House of Lords that a surety is not of necessity entitled to receive, without enquiry, from the party to whom he is about to bind himself, a full disclosure of all the circumstances of the dealings between the principal and the party and that if he wants to know any particular matter he must take it the subject of a distinct enquiry. The learned Judges who took part in this decision were The Lord Chancellor, Lord Brougham and Lord Campbell. In *The North British Insurance Company v. Lloyd*⁶ it was held that the rule which prevails in assurances upon ships and lives, that all material circumstances known to the assured must be disclosed, though there be no fraud in the concealment, does not extend to the case of guarantees and that in the latter case, the concealment, to vitiate the guarantee, must be fraudulent. In *Wythes v. Labouchere*⁷ a similar view was taken. In that case Lord Chelmsford observes as follows:—

“I will consider the question of concealment solely upon the footing of the duty of the defendants towards the plaintiff as surety. It must of course be conceded that if the plaintiff had applied to the bankers, and they had given him a false account of the transactions between them and M'Gregor, the plaintiff would be entitled to be relieved from his suretyship. But not only was there no application to the defendants by the plaintiff, but they never came into communication with each other directly or indirectly in the transaction. Was there, under these circumstances, any legal, or, I would add, any moral obligation upon the bankers, when they learnt that the plaintiff was willing to become security to them for a large advance to M'Gregor, to search for him, and warn him against the danger of such a step, by communicating the condition of his old account, the security which they had taken, and the circumstances connected with the Parliamentary qualification? No case which has been cited goes this length or near it. Indeed the case of the *North British Insurance Company v. Lloyd*⁵ expressly decides that the obligation of the creditor to communicate even material circumstances that are known to him is not co-extensive with the rule which prevails in insurances upon ships and lives; and that unless the non-disclosure amounts to a fraud upon the surety, he is not entitled to relief."

The Imperial Bank of India
v.
Avanasi
Chettiar.

These cases have been considered in *London General Omnibus Company, Ltd. v. Holloway*⁸ where it was held that suretyship for the fidelity of a servant is distinct from a guarantee in respect of a banking account. In that case Farwell, L.J., observes:

"There is a wide distinction between a case like the present and the cases which have been cited of guarantees for overdrafts given to bankers, such as *Hamilton v. Watson*⁵ and *Wythes v. Labouchere*⁷ and he points out the difference."

He further observes:

"No surety asked to guarantee a banking account is entitled to assume that the customer of the bank has not been in the habit of overdrawing; the proper presumption in most instances is that he has been doing so, and wishes to do so again. That is a legitimate carrying on of business, and that is what the surety is asked to guarantee."

Kennedy, L.J., observes:

"On the other hand, in the case of the suretyship or guarantee of a financial account, the previous pecuniary dealings between the creditor and the person whose future liability the surety is invited to secure constitute only extrinsic circumstances. They may be material circumstances, such as might affect the judgment of the person who is asked to be surety. But, in the language of Sir Frederick Pollock (Principles of Contract, 8th Ed., p. 568), 'the creditor is not bound to volunteer information as to the general credit of the debtor or anything else which is not part of the transaction itself to which the suretyship relates: and on this point there is no difference between law and equity.' The bank or other creditor cannot reasonably be taken as affirming, by mere silence respecting earlier dealings, the financial ability of the person whom the proposed surety is asked to guarantee."

Then the learned Judge quotes with approval a passage from Mr. Justice Rowlatt's work on Principal and Surety, p. 155. At page 154 the following passage occurs:—

"A guarantee will fail if the creditor misrepresents to the surety the state of accounts between the principal and himself. But a surety proposing to guarantee a banking account should enquire whether there is any adverse balance already existing; he is not entitled to assume there is not."

So far as the Indian cases are concerned, in *Balkrishna V. N. Kirtikar v. The Bank of Bengal*⁹ Sir Charles Sargent, C.J. and Bayley, J., took a similar view and held that the expression "keeping silence" in S. 143 of the Contract Act clearly implies intentional concealment as distinguished from mere non-disclosure and the withholding must be fraudulent, as necessarily is the case when a material circumstance is intentionally concealed. This case, so far as we are aware, has not been dissented from and is on a line with the English cases we have referred to. It is contended by Mr. Menon that there is no difference between fidelity contracts and contracts of guarantee in respect of banking accounts, that some eminent English Judges have dissented from the view that there should be any such difference and that in each case the question is whether there is evidence to go to the jury to say that the non-disclosures of the past liability which was existing at the date of the guarantee amounts to concealment of a material fact or not; and *Lee v. Jones*¹⁰ is referred to. In that case there was a difference of opinion, Crompton, J., Channell, B., Blackburn, J. and Shee, J., taking one view and Pollock, C.B. and Bramwell, B., taking another view. We may state that Blackburn, J., refers to the decision in *Hamilton v. Watson*⁵ and notes the distinction between the contracts referred to. He says:

"Now, whether the handing the agreement by the plaintiffs to the defendant amounted to an inaccurate representation or not, depends, as I think, on the question whether in such a transaction as that described in the agreement, it might or might not naturally be expected that the masters might have allowed a balance of this extent to accumulate, and might have allowed the account to stand over unsettled for so long a time. In Hamilton v. Watson,⁵ the transaction was a security for a banker's cash account; and the decision of the House of Lords was that, in such a case, it might be so naturally expected that the proposed principal had already overdrawn his account, that there was no evidence of a representation that he had not."

Although Shee, J., took the view that there was no difference in principle between the contracts and that the question in the case was whether there was evidence for the jury to say that the suppression was material, Pollock, C.B., and Bramwell, B., took the opposite view. Reference was also made by Mr. Menon to *Railton v. Mathews*¹¹ where the Judges were of opinion that undue concealment need not be wilful or intentional with a view to the advantages the employers were thereby to gain, but it was sufficient if it was material. This case related to a fidelity contract. A party became surety in a bond for the fidelity of a commission agent to his employers. The commission agent was entrusted with the property of his employers. The employers discovered irregularities in the agent's accounts and put the bond in suit. The surety then instituted a suit on the ground of concealment by the employers of material circumstances. It was held by the House of Lords that

"Mere non-communication of circumstances affecting the situation of the parties, material for the surety to be acquainted with, and within the knowledge of the person obtaining a surety bond, is undue concealment, though not wilful or intentional, or with a view to any advantage to himself."

We think that the balance of authority is clearly in favour of the view that where a person stands surety for another as regards an advance to be made by a bank, the bank is under no obligation to disclose any past indebtedness existing at the date of the contract of suretyship and that it is a matter on which the person standing as surety has to inform himself. If, of course, he wanted information and the bank gave wrong information it might vitiate the contract of suretyship. In the present case the defendant did not require any information as to the state of the account between the firm and the bank on the date of the suretyship. There can therefore be no question of the guarantee being invalid because of the non-disclosure by the bank that about Rs. 5,000 was due. Further, the defendant does not plead this in his written statement as a ground; he does not state that if he had been aware of the fact he would not have become surety. Even assuming that in every case it is for the surety there is nothing in the evidence which would entitle the jury to hold that if the defendant had been told that Rs. 5,000 was due by the firm he would not have stood surety. We find that Rs. 7,000 went in discharge of the indebtedness under the current account under which money was already due by the firm.

As regards the question of estoppel it is difficult to see where estoppel comes in on the pleadings in the written statement. What is stated is that because the bank said in Exhibit III that Rs. 2,000 and odd was due the defendant put in a petition mentioning that figure to adjudicate the principal debtors as insolvents. It is not suggested that he would not have done so if Rs. 10,000 had been claimed instead of Rs. 2,000; all that is stated is that he had to amend this petition by stating the correct amount due and this would involve some additional expenditure, however trifling it may be. The fact is that Exhibit II, the notice sent by the bank through their vakil giving full particulars, is dated 16th of June, 1924. The insolvency petition was filed on the 12th of June, 1924. Admittedly until the 18th of September, 1925, nothing was done as the Judge points out. The mere filing of the insolvency petition would not amount to proof or admission of the amount due. That has to be proved in subsequent proceedings. It is not suggested that when the stage came the defendant relying upon the Exhibit III minimised his claim and got it admitted for a smaller sum whereas, as a matter of fact, a larger sum was due. In these circumstances it is difficult to see how there can be any estoppel by the defendant putting himself in a worse position owing to the conduct of the plaintiff.

We do not think that the decision of the Subordinate Judge can be supported on any of the grounds stated by him. The decree of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and in lieu thereof there will be a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 8,470-10-7 with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the plaint to the date of payment with costs in this and the Lower Court on the entire amount decreed.

The Subordinate Judge's decree allowing any costs to the defendant will be set aside.

The case having been set down for being spoken to this day the Court made the following order:—

Credit will be given for the amounts already collected and no interest will run on the amounts collected.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 417—Appeal against acquittal—High Court when can interfere.

In an appeal by Government against an acquittal the High Court ought not to interfere unless the trying Judge was clearly wrong and the judgment is either perverse or based on obvious error of procedure. Where there are some grounds to justify the judgment, or even just a reasonable doubt supporting the acquittal, the High Court will not interfere.

Queen-Empress v. Robinson, (1894) I.L.R. 16 All. 212 and The Public Prosecutor v. Narayana Naidu, (1915) 16 Cr.L.J. 529: 29 I.C. 657, approved.

Appeal under S. 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid accused by the Sessions Judge of Kurnool in Sessions Case No. 14 of 1929 on his file.

K. S. Vasudevan for accused.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—On the 9th February last the deceased a young boy had climbed a fruit tree to get some berries or some other fruits which had grown on that tree. Beneath the tree was a little girl, the daughter of the accused, the respondent here. The little boy threw the fruits down on the ground from the tree above and the little girl picked up those fruits, whereupon the little boy climbed down from the tree and beat the little girl with a cholam stick. She went off to her home and complained to her mother (the respondent) about the beating. The mother then came up and pursued the little boy. Up to this point both the prosecution case and the defence case agree. The little boy sustained very serious injuries. He had three ribs broken on the one side and four on the other penetrating the pleural cavity and causing his death some two days later. The respondent was charged at the Sessions Court with murder under S. 302, Indian Penal Code.

The defence put forward by the respondent was that it was true that she pursued the little boy and that he was running away but in the course of his flight he tripped up and fell upon a stone or a boulder well imbedded in the ground and that was how he came by his injuries. The learned Sessions Judge after hearing the evidence agreed with the opinion of the four assessors in finding that the respondent was not guilty of the offence; and she was accordingly acquitted.

This is an appeal by Government against the acquittal. The case for the prosecution was that the respondent fisted, struck and kned the little boy and was the cause of his broken ribs. The evidence for the prosecution was that after he sustained his injuries, however they were caused, the respondent led the little boy to his home. He was quite conscious then and afterwards for a little time and his mother, P.W. 2, does not appear to have thought that his injuries were of a serious nature. It was not until his death and the post mortem examination that the real nature of his injuries became apparent. But she questioned the little boy and, according to her evidence, he told her that he had been fisted, struck and kneed by the respondent. There are two witnesses in addition to herself who are supposed to have heard the statement of the little boy and they are P.Ws. 3 and 4. The learned Sessions Judge does not believe their evidence and we certainly think that it is open to suspicion. It seems to us very unlikely that they would have overheard this little boy's statement and the evidence is particularly suspicious when it is taken in conjunction with the evidence of P.W. 2 who says that they were not present and did not overhear the little boy's statement. We, therefore, think that the evidence of these two witnesses can quite properly be rejected. Then there is an eye-witness to this occurrence, P.W. 7, who says that he was picking groundnuts in a field and saw the flight of the little boy and his being beaten by the respondent. A good deal of criticism was levelled against this evidence because it was said that his evidence was obviously untrue as there were no groundnuts to be picked at that time. But P.W. 9 says that there was a groundnut crop upon the land. The remainder of the evidence is that of witnesses who give evidence on the part of the case in which there is an agreement between the defence and the prosecution, namely, about the little boy being up the tree and the respondent coming up and chasing him. The medical evidence is certainly far more consistent with these injuries having been caused to the boy in the manner described by the prosecution witnesses and by the little boy himself though it is quite true that the medical witness stated that these injuries might possibly have been caused by the little boy falling down and his chest coming into contact with a stone. But reading the evidence, the plain understanding of it, we think, is that it is unlikely that in the opinion of the medical witness, the injuries were caused by falling on a stone. The reason the witness gives for saying that it is far more consistent with these injuries being caused by blows is that no marks or bruises in the hands or the body were found by him and from this he deduces that the little boy did not fall. But as against this, there is the criticism to be made that the body was in a decomposed state when the medical witness saw it and there is the statement of P.W. 2 in Ex. B that there was an abrasion on the leg of the little boy. The conclusion we have come to in this case is that upon the evidence the prosecution case was sufficiently strong to justify a conviction for an offence and that it establishes the fact that the injuries were caused to the little boy by this woman.

But we have got to consider what test should be applied by the High Court on an appeal by Government against an acquittal. Is the test to be that in the opinion of the appellate Bench there should have been a conviction sufficient to justify allowing the appeal or should it be something much more strong on the facts before the High Court is entitled to allow that appeal? We have not had any cases cited to us but we have discovered two cases which lay down a test which we think is the correct one to be applied in such cases as this. The first of them is Queen-Empress v. Robinson.¹ In that case it was held that an appeal on behalf of Government in the exercise of the powers conferred by S. 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should not be entertained when the judgment appealed from is based upon facts and the conclusions of the Court are such as may reasonably be arrived at upon the facts found. The other case is a decision of a single Judge, Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in The Public Prosecutor v. Narayana Naidu.² There it was held that in appeals against acquittals the High Court ought not to interfere unless the trying Judge was clearly wrong and the judgment is either perverse or based on obvious error of procedure. That is saying the same thing which was said in the Allahabad case in different words. We think that those tests are the proper ones. At a trial in a Sessions Court or in any other Court in which evidence is taken, the trial Judge or Magistrate, as the case may be, has the witnesses before him and he is really in a better position to decide whether those witnesses give correct evidence and in this case the Sessions Judge has disbelieved most of the prosecution witnesses. We cannot say that there were not some grounds which might justify the acquittal of the respondent in this case. We are unable to say that the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is perverse or one which no reasonable man could have come to on the facts. There was just a reasonable doubt and, that being so, we are unable to interfere with that judgment and this appeal by Government must be dismissed.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Suit for partition—Alienees of joint family properties how and when can be made parties—Costs to added parties.

Whether anybody should be made to pay the costs of the added parties depends on the finding in the case after the trial.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely, dated 15th August, 1929, in I.A. No. 408 of 1929 in O.S. No. 12 of 1929.

T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar and S. Ramaswami Aiyar for petitioners.

K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar and K. Venkateswaran for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition is filed against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely refusing to strike out the names of defendants 4 to 16 who had been previously added as parties to the suit O.S. No. 12 of 1929. The suit was one for partition. The 1st and 2nd defendants are the sons of the 1st plaintiff and the 3rd defendant is the son of the 1st defendant. The 2nd plaintiff is the grandson of the 1st plaintiff. On the 1st defendant's allegations that there had been alienations of the family properties by the 1st plaintiff in favour of defendants 4 to 16 they were previously directed to be made as parties by the Court. Now the plaintiffs apply that they may be expunged. The Subordinate Judge refused the plaintiffs' prayer and hence this revision petition. Before me the learned advocate for the plaintiffs relies on the case

*Norris v. Beazley*¹. There Coleridge, C.J., pointed out that defendants to be added must be defendants against whom the plaintiff has some cause of complaint and it was never intended to apply where the person to be added as defendant is a person against whom the plaintiff has no claim. This is perfectly true and it is no doubt the general rule, but as Denman, J., in the same case points out, if a very strong case is made out other parties against whom the plaintiff does not wish to proceed may be made parties. In cases relating to partition of Hindu joint-family properties, alienees of joint-family properties may be made parties at the instance of the parties other than the plaintiffs. Similarly the case in *Sitaramaya v. Ramappayya*² is a case where it was found that there was no need to bring in additional parties and if such a need is found additional parties will be rightly made parties. On the allegations of the 1st defendant the order of the Court below is right. It may be that if the 1st defendant fails to make out his case ultimately the costs due to the added parties should be paid by him. If he succeeded in making out his case then it may be that the plaintiffs may be liable for the costs of these parties. Whether anybody should be made to pay the costs of the added parties depends on the finding in the case after the trial. It is said that the plaintiff has to send summonses to these defendants. So far as this is concerned, I direct that copies of the plaints and the summonses should be issued at the expense of the 1st defendant. Subject to this modification the order of the Subordinate Judge is confirmed and the petition is dismissed with costs.

creditor—Official Receiver whether can set off against claim of creditor—Meaning of word “due”.

Where, in a case of mutual dealings between an insolvent and a creditor, an account is taken under S. 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, the Official Receiver has no right to set off against the creditor's claim a time-barred debt due by the creditor.

Per Reilly, J.—The word “due,” as used in S. 46, means “legally recoverable” and not “justly due”.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of South Malabar at Calicut in C.M.A. No. 6 of 1925 preferred against the order of the Official Receiver of South Malabar, Calicut, on the claim petition, dated 17th August, 1924 and made in I.P. No. 25 of 1923, District Court, South Malabar.

C. S. Swaminathan for appellants.

The Court delivered the following

Reilly, J.

JUDGMENTS. Reilly, J.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge of South Malabar in an insolvency matter. The appellant, a creditor of the insolvent, has put in a claim before the Official Receiver for an amount which he says is due to him from the insolvent. The learned District Judge has found that the Official Receiver is entitled to set off against that claim a time-barred debt due from the creditor to the insolvent. I do not think it can be disputed, and I did not understand Mr. Anantaraman for the Official Receiver to dispute, that a creditor in an insolvency can prove only a debt which at the date of the adjudication has not become time-barred. If we examine sections 34 and 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, I do not think that there can be any doubt on that point. But it is suggested that, although the creditor cannot recover from the insolvent a time-barred debt and although a day before he is adjudged insolvent the insolvent himself could not set off against the creditor a time-barred claim, the Official Receiver has a higher right and can set off against the creditor's claim a time-barred claim. That appears to me to be a very startling proposition. Mr. Anantaraman argued that it can be founded on the wording of S. 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. That section runs:

“Where there have been mutual dealings between an insolvent and a creditor proving or claiming to prove a debt under this Act, an account shall be taken of what is due from the one party to the other in respect of such mutual dealings, and the sum due from the one party shall be set off against any sum due from the other party, and the balance of the account, and no more, shall be claimed or paid on either side respectively.”

Now in that section Mr. Anantaraman contends "due" does not mean "legally recoverable" but "justly due"; and he has pointed out that in S. 60 of the Contract Act "due" is used of a debt which is no longer legally recoverable from the debtor but which is actually and justly due from him. No doubt the word "due" is used in that sense in S. 60 of the Contract Act; but we have to ascertain in what sense it is used in S. 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. I think that, if we try to work that section out, there can be no doubt that "due" as used in it means "legally recoverable" because, if it includes not only debts which are legally recoverable but also debts which have become time-barred, then that meaning of the word must apply to both parties, and, if we take into account what is due otherwise than legally recoverable from the insolvent to the creditor and from the creditor to the insolvent and arrive at the balance in the way indicated in the section, the balance may well be in favour of the creditor by reason of a time-barred debt due to him. The result of that would be that under the Insolvency Act a creditor could recover a time-barred debt, which I think is entirely out of the question. For that reason alone without discussing the matter further, I may mention neither side has been able to find any authority on this point, it appears to me clear that the learned District Judge's view of the matter is wrong and that the Official Receiver in this case has no right to set off against the creditor's claim a time-barred claim against the creditor.

But it is represented to us that, although the learned District Judge disposed of the appeal on his view of the law in this matter and then sent the case back to the Official Receiver to be worked out in accordance with that view, it has not yet been determined whether the claims of the insolvent against the creditor are actually time-barred, and that question, of course, must be investigated. So, although I do not agree with the learned District Judge's view of the law, I agree with him that it is necessary that this case should go back to the Official Receiver for further investigation.

In the circumstances the appellant is entitled to his costs on this appeal.

Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.—I agree. I wish to add that the object of section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is not to do away with the provisions of the Limitation Act and to revive claims already barred by limitation before a person became insolvent. The logical result of the contention raised by the learned advocate for the respondent would be that once a person becomes insolvent, not only could the Official Receiver representing the estate of the insolvent enforce claims of the insolvent which had become barred by limitation long before the insolvency but also the creditors of the insolvent whose debts had become barred by limitation long prior to the insolvency could seek to enforce such claims against the estate of the insolvent in the hands of the Official Receiver. In the absence of any specific provision in the Insolvency Act, I am not prepared to agree to a contention which leads to such results. I can understand that claims not barred by limitation on the date of adjudication should be taken to be not barred so long as the adjudication subsists; but the contention that the effect of insolvency is to revive debts already barred by limitation is, I think, a startling one, and, in the absence of authority, should not be accepted. No decision of any English or Indian Court in support of such a contention has been cited before us.

It seems to me that the object of S. 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is to provide for a just and equitable mode of adjustment of mutual dealings of the insolvent and his creditor; but for such a provision the creditor of an insolvent if he also owed a debt to the insolvent would have to pay the whole of the debt to the Official Receiver, that is, he will have to pay the full sixteen annas in the rupee in respect of the debt due by him to the insolvent's estate, whereas he would be entitled to receive from the estate only pro rata dividend from the estate. Such a result was considered unjust and equitable in cases where "mutual dealings" of the nature contemplated by the section existed between the parties. The section accordingly provides that "an account shall be taken of what is due from the one party to the other in respect of such mutual dealings and that the sum due from the one party shall be set off against any sum due from the other party, and the balance of account and no more shall be claimed or paid on either side respectively."

Whether any amounts are due from the one party to the other and whether they are barred by limitation are all questions to be decided under the general law, and S. 46 only provides how the respective rights of the parties should be adjusted by set off in cases of mutual dealings.

I agree with my learned brother that the appeal should be allowed.

The interest which entitles a person to lodge a caveat must be an interest in the estate of the deceased, that is to say, there must be no dispute as to the title of the deceased to the estate.

Where, in an application for the grant of probate of a will, a caveat was filed by a person alleging that certain jewels, which the testator had disposed of by his will, were the property of the caveator,

Held, that the caveator did not have such an interest in the estate of the deceased as will entitle her to oppose the grant of probate.

Hanumantha Rao v. Letchamma, (1926) I.L.R. 49 M. 960: 51 M.L.J. 563, commented on.

Decision of Venkatasubba Rao, J., reported in Sowbhagiammal v. Komalangi Ammal, (1928) 54 M.L.J. 382, affirmed.*

On appeal from the judgment and decree of the Honourable Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao, dated the 16th, 17th, 18th and 24th days of January, 1928, and passed in the exercise of the Original Testamentary Jurisdiction of the High Court in T.O.C. No. 13 of 1927.

The respondents who were the executors named in a will applied for probate thereof. Two caveats were filed, one of them being by the appellant. An objection was taken on behalf of the respondents that the appellant did not possess such an interest as to support the caveat. The interest alleged on behalf of the said caveator was that the testator had purported to dispose of by will her stridhanam jewels as if they belonged to him.

The learned Trial Judge Venkatasubba Rao, J., held as follows on a review of the authorities:—

"I am asked to go into the question of ownership of these jewels and declare by my judgment that the deceased was not the owner and that his will in regard to them is inoperative. Two things I regard to be clearly settled by authority, firstly, that the interest alleged is not an interest as would support a caveat, and, secondly, that a probate Court does not decide questions of title in regard to the property disposed of by the will."

The objection was consequently upheld.

The caveator preferred an appeal.

Ramesam, J.

JUDGMENTS. Ramesam, J.—Most of the decisions of all the High Courts are against the appellant. They are referred to by the learned Trial Judge and need not be repeated. The learned advocate for the appellant relies on Hanumantha Rao v. Letchamma.¹ This case has been considered by the Trial Judge. It is based on In the matter of the Petition of Bhobosoonduri Dabee,² a case which has not been followed in the Calcutta High Court ever since and certain other decisions. The cases in *Arakal Bastian Ansap v. Narayana Aiyar*³ and *Kishen Dai v. Satyendra Nath Dutt*⁴ also referred to in it are cases of judgment-creditors of a son of the testator. In *Arakal Bastian Ansap v. Narayana Aiyar*³ the will was revoked and it was not necessary to rely on In the matter of the Petition of Bhobosoonduri Dabee.² The decision in *Brinda Chowdhraim v. Radhica Chowdhraim*⁵ is the case of a widow entitled to maintenance against her husband's estate, the husband being the alleged testator. I do not see how *Kishen Dai v. Satyendra Nath Dutt*⁴ supports the decision in Hanumantha Rao v. Letchamma.¹ It is unnecessary for us to say whether *Hanumantha Rao v. Letchamma*¹ is correctly decided or not and we are not to be taken as agreeing with all the observations in it.

In a case of the kind before us, all the authorities are agreed that the caveator has no interest to oppose the grant of the probate. In so far as she claims that the jewels dealt with in the will are hers, it is not an interest in the estate of the deceased according to all the authorities. Whether the will is genuine or not, her right to the jewels cannot be affected. In so far as she claims to be the wife of one of the grandsons, and can claim to be supported from the estate, her position under the will is no worse than if the will did not exist.

The case of *Kipping v. Ash*⁶ does not help the appellant. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Cornish, J.

Cornish, J.—I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. The interest which entitles a person to lodge a caveat must be an interest in the estate of the deceased, that is to say, there must be no dispute as to the title of the deceased to the estate [see *Pirojshah Bikhaji v. Pestonji Merwanji*⁷ and *Kalajit Singh v. Parmesher Singh*⁸]. But here the caveator is alleging that the jewels which the testator has disposed of by his will are her own property. In other words, she is setting up a title adverse to the testator's title to the property. It is impossible to say that she has an interest in the deceased's estate when she is claiming that the property in question does not form part of the deceased's estate. It has long been settled that it is not the province of a Court of Probate to determine questions of title to a property which a testator purports to dispose of by his will, the reason being that the grant of probate does no more than establish the factum of the will and the appointment of the executors (if any) named in the will. The grant of probate will not, therefore, prevent the appellant from bringing a suit, if she should be so advised, to recover from the executors, or any other persons in possession, the jewels which she claims as her own property.

In the absence of any prima facie excessive or exaggerated claim made in the plaint the plaintiff should not be directed to pay the defendant's costs on the portion disallowed.

Rangathayi Ammal v. Munuswami Chetty, (1911) 21 M.L.J. 706, followed.

Second appeal against the decree, dated 27th August, 1925, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Nellore in Appeal Suit No. 30 of 1925 (A.S. No. 385 of 1924, District Court, Nellore) preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Kavali in O.S. No. 196 of 1923.

K. Ramamurthi and M. Venkatasubbiah for appellant.

B. Somayya for respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal preferred by the defendant arose out of a suit for maintenance filed by his step-mother against him, a minor. The plaintiff and the defendant's mother are co-widows and they were married on the same day to Chinna Subba Reddi who died on 16th April, 1918. The plaintiff filed her suit for maintenance on 12th April, 1923 and she claimed future maintenance from April, 1923, at Rs. 40 per mensem and also Rs. 120 for arrears of maintenance for January, February and March, 1923. The main plea of the defendant was that there was a will executed by the defendant's father under which the plaintiff was entitled to only the income from the two acres of wet land mentioned in the will, and that in any event she had jewels to the extent of Rs. 800 and also monies to the extent of Rs. 2,000, and consequently she was not entitled to maintenance claimed in the plaint. The District Munsif held that the plaintiff was entitled to maintenance, since the question relating to the will set up by the defendant was withdrawn by him at the time of the trial. As regards the jewels, the District Munsif found that the plaintiff was in possession of jewels worth Rs. 800 but that no account could be taken of them in calculating the amount of maintenance awardable to plaintiff, as they are her stridhanam and are of an unproductive character. As regards the sum of Rs. 2,000 which the defendant alleged that the plaintiff had, the District Munsif held that the plaintiff had this amount of Rs. 2,000 at the time of her husband's death, but that "the same should be taken to have been set off against her for her past maintenance, since the plaintiff did not claim maintenance from 1918 to 1923." In the result, the Trial Court granted the plaintiff a decree for her maintenance at the rate of Rs. 36 per mensem. The defendant thereupon preferred an appeal, and the learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the Dis-strict Munsif that the plaintiff had Rs. 2,000 with her at the time of her husband's death. He also reiterated the argument advanced by the learned District Munsif that the plaintiff did not claim any maintenance for the period from April, 1918 to January, 1923 and that he would take that circumstance also in fixing the rate of maintenance. On the merits, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 25 per mensem in respect of food and clothing and sundry amenities, Rs. 3 per mensem for a servant and Rs. 3 per mensem for house rent. He modified the decree of the District Munsif by reducing the amount of maintenance from Rs. 36 to Rs. 31. The defendant has preferred this second appeal.

The learned advocate for the appellant argued that both the Lower Courts having found that the plaintiff had Rs. 2,000 at the time of her husband's death, and no claim being made in respect of the arrears due to her from 1918 to 1923, the Lower Courts were not right in ignoring the possession of the said sum of Rs. 2,000 in fixing the rate of future maintenance. In support of his contention, the learned advocate relied on a passage in Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 459, which runs thus:—

"In calculating the amount of maintenance to be awarded to a female, her own stridhan is not to be taken into account, if it is of an unproductive character, such as clothes and jewels. For she has a right to retain these, and also to be supported, if necessary, by her husband's family. But if her property produces an income, this is to be taken into consideration. For her right is to be maintained, and so far as she is already maintained out of her own property, that right is satisfied."

"The right to maintenance is an absolute one and the consideration of her private means is primarily only a means for fixing the quantum of maintenance to be assigned to her; but if those means were shown to be sufficient in themselves to support her adequately in her station of life, her right to maintenance would be wholly in abeyance, though it might revive on a change in her circumstances."

With reference to this argument, the learned advocate for the respondent contended that (with all respect to the learned author) the statement should be taken with necessary qualifications in the circumstances of each particular case. No doubt in cases where the income from the joint family property is not sufficient to maintain properly all the members who are entitled to maintenance out of the same, it would be proper that the private properties of any particular member and the income thereof should be taken into account in fixing the amount of maintenance due to such member having private means. But the learned advocate argued, in cases like the present where the income from the joint family property is not only enough to provide decent maintenance for all those who are entitled to maintenance out of the same, but there is also surplus left, it is not right, and there is no law which would compel the Court, to take into account the income from the private properties of a person when awarding her maintenance. It would appear that in Bombay the rule enunciated by Mr. Mayne prevails. But so far as this Presidency is concerned, the learned Judges Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., in the case reported in *Lingayya v. Kanakamma*¹ have not followed the principles of law followed by the Bombay High Court. The learned Judges observed as follows:—

"The fact that a Hindu widow is able to maintain herself out of other property is no ground for not giving her some maintenance out of her husband's estate; but it is a factor to be taken into account in determining the quantum of maintenance to be decreed to her."

The decision in *Ramarwati Koer v. Manjhari Koer*² to the contrary is specifically dissented from by the learned Judges of this Court in Lingayya v. Kanakamma.¹ But it was pointed out by the learned advocate for the appellant that even the decision in *Lingayya v. Kanakamma*¹ states that it is a factor to be taken into account in determining the quantum of maintenance to be decreed to her. It is therefore necessary to see how far the learned advocate's contention is borne out by the decision in Lingayya v. Kanakamma.¹ For this purpose it is necessary to state the facts of that case. There, both the Lower Courts found that the defendant was in possession of family property yielding about Rs. 100 a year. They also found that the plaintiff (widow) had private property out of which she could get Rs. 40 or 50 a year. The Lower Courts in these circumstances awarded to the plaintiff Rs. 20 a year on the ground that the plaintiff's income from her own sources of Rs. 40 or Rs. 50 was not sufficient to cover her maintenance. The defendant preferred a second appeal, and on his behalf it was contended that the plaintiff (widow) having been found to be in possession of private property out of which she could get Rs. 40 or Rs. 50 a year and the defendant having been found to be in possession of the joint family property yielding only Rs. 100 a year, the Lower Courts were wrong in awarding to the plaintiff Rs. 20 a year out of the joint family income. To that the learned Judges answered in effect:

2. (1906) 4 C.L.J. 74.

"It is not so. The plaintiff's right to maintenance is to be traced to the old law under which the plaintiff was even entitled to a share. The right to maintenance is an absolute right and you cannot deprive the plaintiff of her right to maintenance in the way you suggest."

Kodanda-

v.
Chenchamma.

To quote the exact words of the learned Judges:

"His argument is that a widow who is able to maintain herself out of other property has no right to claim out of her husband's estate anything for that purpose. In our opinion this view cannot be supported. It is based on an entirely wrong conception of the right sought to be enforced. . . . This is an absolute right due to their membership in the family and does not depend on their necessity arising from their want of other means to support themselves."

They, therefore, held that though the joint family income was not enough to maintain all the members of the family in a proper state, the plaintiff must be held entitled to some maintenance out of her husband's estate. The amount awarded by the Lower Courts was Rs. 20 a year against which there was no appeal by the plaintiff and the learned Judges dismissed the defendant's appeal and declined to accede to the contention that the plaintiff (widow) was in the circumstances not entitled to get maintenance at all. As I understand that judgment, it is no authority for the position contended for by the learned advocate for the appellant in this case that even in cases where the joint family income is sufficient and in fact more than is sufficient for maintaining properly all the members depending upon it, when a widow claims maintenance, if in possession of her own property which yields some income, the Courts are bound to take into consideration the income so derived by her from her own property. My attention has not been drawn to any case in Madras which goes to this extreme extent, and I do not understand the passage quoted from Mayne's Hindu Law by the learned advocate for the appellant as giving support for such an extreme contention. No doubt, the learned author does say that in particular cases the right to maintenance would be wholly in abeyance. But this particular aspect of the question has not been considered by the learned author, and, in any event, I am not prepared to say that any decided cases in Madras compel me not to give effect to the view that I have expressed above.

Arguments by analogy should not be pressed too far. But if one is permitted to take a somewhat analogous case, questions have arisen in Malabar where junior members of a tarwad claim maintenance from the income of the tarwad property; and though the income from the tarwad property is enough and more than is necessary to maintain all the members decently,

v.
Chenchamma.

yet it was argued that if the plaintiff, a junior member, be proved to have private property of his own which yields private income to him, the same should be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of maintenance due to him. This Court repelled that argument in the case reported in P. Teyan Nair v. P. Ragavan Nair,³ where it was held that a karnavan of a tarwad is not justified in excluding a junior member from participation of the family property, because the junior member has other property of his own and the circumstance that the junior member has other property is not an element in the consideration of his right to share in the enjoyment of the joint family funds which are enough and more than necessary for such purposes.

As I am of opinion that the principle applied by this Court in the case of maintenance claimed by junior members of a Malabar tarwad in possession of private funds should be the principle that should ordinarily be applied to cases where Hindu widows claim maintenance from the estate of their husbands or from the estate of the joint family in which their husbands had a share, I proceed to note the trend of decisions under Malabar Marumakkathayam Law. In the case reported in *P. Teyan Nair v. Ragavan Nair*³ Innes and Tarrant, JJ., held as follows:—

"The circumstance that a junior member has other property is not an element in the consideration of his right to share in the enjoyment of the joint family funds. If it were, a man's own individual industry and exertions might be the means of depriving him of his rights in the joint property."

A similar question arose in the case reported in Thayy v. Shangunni,⁴ where Sir Charles Turner, Kt., Chief Justice and Muthuswami Aiyar, J., observed at page 72 as follows:—

"The circumstances of each member in respect of his private acquisitions would not affect his right to subsistence where the income was sufficient to provide a suitable subsistence for all the members of the tarwad; but where the income is insufficient for this purpose, the karnavan must, with due regard to the interests of all, look to the private means of each."

These cases were taken to lay down the law correctly in *Manikkath Ammini Ammal v. Manikkath Padmanabha Menon*⁵ and Maradevi v. Pammakka.⁶ I do not understand the decision in *Mahesh Partap Singh v. Dirgpal Singh*⁷ to lay down a different rule of law.

v.
Chenchamma.

The question would be important in these days of social advancement when widows belonging to joint Hindu families might find themselves able to earn a part of their maintenance by doing honourable work elsewhere. If the result of their honourable activity and laudable attempts to earn a portion of their maintenance should work against them in claiming maintenance from their husbands' estate, in my opinion it will be a disadvantage both to them and to the family. The interests of social advancement (if one is entitled to have regard to the same) would be in favour of allowing her claim as put forward in the present case. If the result of her activity in earning or saving money by laudable means be to deprive her of her right to receive proper maintenance from the husband's estate which is admittedly rich, such people would have no inducement to work or to save. On the other hand, it would be in the interests of the joint family also to encourage such earning and saving. It therefore seems to me that in the cases where the joint family income is sufficient to allow maintenance to all members, the possession by members of separate property yielding income or the circumstance that such members are themselves earning as a result of their activity should not be taken into account. The question will be different when the income from the joint family estate is not enough to maintain all the members depending upon it. The law as administered in Bombay would seem to be different. See Savitri Bai v. Luximi Bai and Sadasiv Ganoba.⁸ See also Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad.⁹ If the property in her possession be property belonging to the husband or to the estate of the joint family, then the matter might (I have not to decide that question here) stand on a different footing. But so far as Madras is concerned, I am not aware of any decision which would prevent me from applying by analogy the principles laid down in the Madras cases referred to by me already to cases of joint Hindu families where the income from the joint family properties is more than enough to maintain properly all members having rights to the same.

For the above reasons, I am inclined to hold that, in cases where a joint Hindu family possesses properties, the income from which is not only enough but more than enough for the purpose of paying maintenance to all the members depending upon the same, the fact that one is in possession of private funds which also yield an income should not be taken into account for such purposes. In the present case the plaintiff and the defendant's mother are co-widows. The only member of the family is the defendant who is a minor. There are also two young girls, sisters of the defendant, who have to be married in due course. The lower appellate Court in paragraph 6 of its judgment has taken that matter into consideration. It says in paragraph 5 that the family is quite in affluent circumstances and that the net income of the family may reasonably be estimated to be Rs. 3,000 per annum. Having regard to all the circumstances, I think it was open to lower appellate Court to entirely disregard the possession of the plaintiff of the sum of Rs. 2,000 which represented her private property. If I am right in this view, the argument pressed upon me by the learned advocate for the appellant fails. It must be stated that the sum of Rs. 2,000 is plaintiff's own moneys, and not moneys belonging to the joint family.

Mr. Somayya, the learned advocate for the respondent, supported the finding of the lower appellate Court by another argument, namely, even if it be held that the plaintiff had Rs. 2,000 at the time of her husband's death, as the plaintiff had to support herself from 1918 to 1922 even calculating maintenance at the rate now decreed, there would be only about Rs. 400 left in the hands of the plaintiff. That is a small amount, and as both the Lower Courts have said in their judgment that they have taken that point also into consideration in fixing the maintenance, there is no ground for interference by this Court in the second appeal. On the whole, I have come to the conclusion that the award of maintenance of Rs. 31 per mensem by the lower appellate Court is not open to attack on any legal ground in second appeal. That being so, the main ground of the appellant fails and the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff has filed a memorandum of objections in respect of (1) the rate of maintenance, and (2) costs. As regards the former, I am not in a position to say that any legal error has been committed by the lower appellate Court in fixing the amount of maintenance. That being so, the memorandum of objections, so far as this item is concerned, fails:

As regards costs, though the plaintiff had claimed maintenance at the rate of Rs. 40 per month and though the District Munsif allowed only Rs. 36, the District Munsif did not allow any costs to the defendant in respect of the difference disallowed by him, but directed that the defendant should pay the plain-tiff's costs in respect of so much of the claim as was decreed to her. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge decreased the rate of maintenance from Rs. 36 to Rs. 31. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, modified the decree of the first Court with reference to costs. The order as to costs passed by the lower appellate Court was that the plaintiff should pay the defendant's costs on the portion of her claim disallowed in both the Lower Courts and that the defendant should pay plaintiff the costs in both the Lower Courts in respect of so much of her claim as was allowed. I think that this is not the proper order as to costs that should have been passed in this case. It is not possible to foretell or predict accurately the amount of maintenance that a person will be entitled to, in the opinion of the Court. What the Courts have to look into in such circumstances is to see whether there was any prima facie excessive or exaggerated claim made in the plaint. In this case the plaintiff claimed Rs. 40 and the lower appellate Court has decreed at Rs. 31 per mensem. The difference is not much, and I could not surely say that the claim was exaggerated to such an extent that the plaintiff should be directed to pay the defendant's costs on the portion disallowed. In this respect, I follow the decision of this Court in the case reported in *Ragathayi Ammal v. Munusawmi Chetti*¹⁰ where the rule as to costs to be followed in maintenance suits was discussed by the learned Judges. I modify the decree of the lower appellate Court in respect of costs, and pass the following order:—In both the Lower Courts the plaintiff's costs on the amount allowed to her shall be paid by the defendant. The defendant will bear his own costs on the excess portion disallowed. In second appeal, the appellant will pay the respondent's costs. I make no order as to costs in the memorandum of objections, which I have allowed in part.

Companies Act of 1913, S. 109—Registration of mortgage pursuant to—Failure—Effect—S. 120—Extension of time for registration under—Order of—Reservation in, of rights of any mortgagee accrued in the meantime—Meaning and effect of—Mortgage expressly stated to be only second mortgage if converted into first mortgage merely by priority of registration.

The Pioneer Mills, Ltd. (hereinafter called the Company), who carried on the business of sugar manufacturers, executed, on 10th August, 1922, a mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs, the property comprised in the mortgage being the Company's sugar refinery and distillery. It was stipulated that the mortgage should be treated as a second mortgage against the sugar refinery and as a first mortgage against the distillery, and the mortgagor (the Company) covenanted that "there was no other charge or mortgage against the mortgaged premises except that of the Tata Bank against the sugar refinery." The mortgage to the plaintiffs was registered in pursuance of the provisions of the Indian Companies Act of 1913 on 21st November, 1922, the time for registration having been extended, under section 120 of that Act, by an order of the High Court of Calcutta, dated 14th November, 1922.

On the same day, viz., 10th August, 1922, the Company executed a mortgage in favour of the Tata Bank (hereinafter called the Bank), the premises comprised in the mortgage being the refinery and the machinery attached thereto in which the plaintiffs held a second mortgage. The mortgage to the Bank was registered under the Companies Act on 22nd December, 1922, the time for registration having been extended, under section 120 of that Act, by an order of the High Court at Calcutta, dated 6th December, 1922. That order extending the time for registration expressly stated that it (the order) was to be "without prejudice to the rights of any mortgagee accrued in the meantime".

Held, that the Court having extended the time for registration of the Bank's mortgage, and the mortgage having been registered within that time, the mortgage was constituted a valid charge ab initio, i.e., from the date of its execution, viz., 10th August, 1922, subject only to such conditions as were imposed by the Court in the order which extended the time; and that, as, on the face of the plaintiff's mortgage, it was only a second charge upon the refinery, the reservation in the order of 6th December, 1922, extending the time for registration of the Bank's mortgage that the order should be "without prejudice to the rights of any mortgagee accrued in the meantime" could not have been intended to convert the plaintiffs' second mortgage upon the refinery into a first charge thereon and that the said order had not the effect of interfering with the priority of the Bank's mortgage upon the refinery over the plaintiffs' mortgage therein.

The right which the plaintiffs had to enforce their mortgage against the property of the Company depended not only upon the registration but also on the terms of the mortgage itself, and the right which they had to enforce in respect of the refinery was a second charge only.

Section 109 of the Companies Act, which requires a mortgage coming within its terms to be registered in a particular manner and within a fixed time, does not avoid a mortgage not so registered absolutely, but only so far as any security is given thereby on the Company's property or undertaking. The effect, therefore, is that if a mortgage is not registered it is valid as an admission of debt, but as against a creditor or the liquidator it could not be said that a valid charge on the Companies' property had been created.

Where an order under section 120 of the Companies Act extending the time for registration of a mortgage stated that the order was to be "without prejudice to the rights of any mortgagee accrued in the meantime," held, that the expression "in the meantime" in the order must be taken to mean the period between the date when the said mortgage should have been registered and the date of actual registration.

Appeal No. 9 of 1928 from a judgment and decree, dated the 29th November, 1926, of the Chief Court of Oudh (Stuart, C.J. and Wazir Hasan, J.), which partly affirmed and partly reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 9th December, 1925, of the Subordinate Judge of Unao.

The material facts of the case for purposes of the present report are sufficiently fully set out in their Lordships' judgment.

The following are extracts from the mortgage deed, dated the 10th August, 1922, executed by the Pioneer Mills, Ltd., in favour of the plaintiffs (Bilas Rai Hardat Rai):—

"In consideration of rupees four lakhs already received by the Company the mortgagor Company doth hereby grant, convey and mortgage the premises known as the Sugar Refinery at Unao and the Distillery including engines, boilers, sugar manufacturing machinery and distillery together with godown quarters, manager's bungalow, out-houses and other buildings appurtenant thereto and also all lands and landed property in any way attached to or considered to be part or parcel of the said Distillery and Sugar Refinery situated at Unao.

"Whereas the mortgagor agrees to repay the said loan of rupees four lakhs with interest at eight per cent. per annum within a period of one year to the mortgagee and the mortgagee to hold the said mortgaged premises and every one of them and every part thereof respectively as to the said mortgaged premises by way of security in lieu of principal and interest at the aforesaid rate. It is further stipulated that this mortgage deed will be treated as a second mortgage against the Sugar Mills and the first mortgage against the Distillery. . . . The mortgagor covenants that there is no other charge or mortgage against the mortgaged premises except that of the Tata Bank against the Sugar Refinery."

The order of the High Court, Calcutta, dated 6th December, 1922, referred to in their Lordships' judgment, was in the following terms:—

"Upon reading a petition of the Tata Industrial Bank, Ltd., of Cawnpore and an affidavit of Sham Soonder Burman in verification thereof affirmed on the 5th day of December instant filed this day and upon hearing Mr. N. Bose, the attorney for the said petitioner,

"It is ordered under section 109 [? section 120—K.J.R.] of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, that the time to file with the Registrar of 12th December, 1929. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir Lancelot
 Sanderson.

SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against a judgment and decree of the Chief Court of Oudh, dated the 29th of November, 1926, which partly affirmed and partly reversed a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Unao.

The plaintiffs are the representatives of Bilas Rai Hardat Rai, a mercantile firm of Nayaganj, Cawnpore. The defendants were the Pioneer Mills, Ltd., and the respondent firm Radha Kishen Moti Lal Chamaria.

The Pioneer Mills, Ltd. (hereinafter called the Company), was registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, and carried on the business of sugar manufacturers; the factory was at Unao and the head office was in Calcutta.

Radha Kishen Moti Lal Chamaria (hereinafter called the defendant firm) carried on their business in Calcutta.

The main question in this appeal is whether a mortgage, dated the 31st August, 1922, executed by the Company in favour of the defendant firm, ever took effect as a valid security, the plaintiffs alleging that there was no consideration in respect thereof.

The learned Subordinate Judge found in favour of the plaintiffs on this issue.

The plaintiffs' suit was for the recovery of 4 lakhs of rupees principal and Rs. 18,666 interest on a mortgage, dated the 10th of August, 1922, executed by the Company in favour of Bilas Rai Hardat Rai.

The learned Subordinate Judge made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the sum of Rs. 2,68,000 and interest thereon, and directed that the plaintiffs should withdraw that amount from the monies held in deposit by the Imperial Bank of Calcutta. The Company was in liquidation and the said monies in deposit represented the proceeds of the sale of the Company's assets.

The defendant firm appealed to the Chief Court of Oudh; the plaintiffs also appealed against that part of the Subordinate Judge's decree which disallowed a portion of the plaintiffs' claim on their mortgage.

Both appeals were allowed by the Chief Court, and it was directed that the plaintiffs' claim—

"Be and is hereby decreed for Rs. 4,18,666-10-0 (Rupees four lakhs eighteen thousand six hundred and sixty-six and annas ten) only with 8 per cent. per annum interest from 15th of March, 1923, till realization against the liquidators, defendant No. 1, subject to the prior incumbrance in favour of Radha Kishen Moti Lal Chamaria, defendant No. 2, under the deed of mortgage, dated 31st of August, 1922."

No question arises in this appeal as to the amount due to the plaintiffs on their mortgage. The appeal is against that part of the decree which directed that the plaintiffs' claim should be subject to the prior incumbrance in favour of the defendant firm under the mortgage of the 31st August, 1922.

It appears that the liquidation of the Company was in consequence of an application made by the Company on the 9th of April, 1923, to the High Court at Calcutta, which made an order on the 4th June, 1923, for the winding up of the Company. The Company and the liquidators are not parties to this appeal.

The material facts are as follows:—

On the 10th August, 1922, the Company executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs to secure a sum of four lakhs and interest at 8 per cent. per annum. The property comprised in the mortgage was the sugar refinery at Unao and the distillery, including engines, machinery, buildings and lands, considered to be part and parcel of the said sugar refinery and distillery.

It was stipulated that the mortgage should be treated as a second mortgage against the sugar mills (which it was agreed meant the refinery), and as a first mortgage against the distillery.

The above-mentioned mortgage was not registered in pursuance of the provisions of the Indian Companies Act of 1913 until the 21st of November, 1922. The time for registration was extended by an order of the High Court at Calcutta, dated the 14th of November, 1922, for three weeks from the date of the order.

On the same day, viz., the 10th of August, 1922, the Company executed a mortgage in favour of the Tata Industrial Bank, Ltd. (hereinafter called the Bank). It recited that the Bank had agreed to open a cash credit loan account to the extent of five lakhs of rupees, and in consideration of the advances to be made and as security for the repayment of all monies from time to time owing to the Bank in respect of the said account, the Company pledged and hypothecated to the Bank all the stocks of gum, sugar, molasses, coal, gunny bags and other articles from time to time on the premises of the Company's refinery at Unao or at any other place which might be used as a godown. In further consideration of the said advances the Company mortgaged the immoveable property and machinery mentioned in Parts I and II of Schedule B, the whole of which were declared to be free from incumbrances.

The premises thus mortgaged were the refinery and the machinery attached thereto. It was on these premises that the plaintiffs held a second mortgage.

The Bank's mortgage contained a provision that the Company should always maintain a margin of 25 per cent. between the sum owing to the Bank and the open market value of the stocks thereby pledged, and a further provision that if the Company when called upon to maintain such margin, failed to do so within 14 days after notice in writing, it should be lawful for the Bank to sell and dispose of by public auction or private sale all or any part of the stocks thereinbefore mentioned.

The above-mentioned mortgage in favour of the Bank was not registered under the Companies Act until the 22nd of December, 1922. The time for registration had been extended by an order of the High Court at Calcutta, dated the 6th of December, for three weeks from the date of the order.

It will be necessary to refer to the terms of this order in detail when another part of this case comes to be considered.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the arrangement made on the 31st August, 1922, between the Company and the defendant firm, of which the defendant firm's mortgage was part, was never carried out, and that the arrangement made between the Bank and the defendant firm in April, 1923, was a transaction of an entirely different nature and on different terms, to which the Company were not parties, and from which the Company obtained no benefit.

They are, therefore, of opinion that there was no consideration in respect of the mortgage in favour of the defendant firm, dated the 31st of August, 1922.

The result is that their Lordships are unable to agree with that part of the decree of the Chief Court, dated the 29th of November, 1926, which directed that the plaintiffs' claim should be subject to the prior incumbrance in favour of the defendant firm under the mortgage of the 31st of August, 1922.

There is, however, a further matter to be considered. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs argued that, although the defendant firm by means of the assignment became entitled to the security held by the Bank, which included a mortgage over the refinery, the plaintiffs' mortgage, which was on both the refinery and the distillery, had priority over the Bank's mortgage, even though the two mortgages were executed on the same day, viz., 10th August, 1922, and the terms of the plaintiffs' mortgage expressly stated that the plaintiffs' mortgage should be treated as a second mortgage against the sugar mills, i.e., the refinery. The basis of the learned counsel's argument was that whereas the plaintiffs' mortgage was registered in pursuance of the Indian Companies Act of 1913 on the 21st November, 1922, the Bank's mortgage was not registered until the 22nd December, 1922, and that the order of the High Court of Calcutta of the 6th December, 1922, by which the time for registering the Bank's mortgage was extended, provided that the order should be without prejudice to the rights of any mortgagee accrued in the meantime.

It was argued that by registering their mortgage on the 21st of November, 1922, the plaintiffs acquired a right which they did not possess before, and consequently that such right could not be prejudiced by the subsequent order of the High Court or by the registration of the Bank's mortgage in pursuance of the said order.

The order of the High Court was made under section 120 of the Indian Companies Act. The reference to section 109 in the order is an obvious mistake.

Section 109 is as follows:—

"Every mortgage or charge created after the commencement of this Act by a Company and being either— . . . (c) a mortgage or charge on any immoveable property, wherever situate, or any interest therein: shall, so far as any security on the Company's property or undertaking is thereby conferred, be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the Company, unless the prescribed particulars of the mortgage or charge, together with the instrument (if any) by which the mortgage or charge is created or evidenced, or a copy thereof verified in the prescribed manner are filed with the Registrar for registration in manner required by this Act within twenty-one days after the date of its creation, but without prejudice to any contract or obligation for repayment of the money thereby secured, and when a mortgage or charge becomes void under this section, the money secured thereby shall immediately become payable."

"The Court, on being satisfied that the omission to register a mortgage or charge within the time required by section 109, or that the omission or misstatement of any particular with respect to any such mortgage or charge was accidental, or due to inadvertence or to some other sufficient cause, or is not of a nature to prejudice the position of creditors or shareholders of the Company, or that on other grounds it is just and equitable to grant relief, may, on the application of the Company or any person interested, and on such terms and conditions as seem to the Court just and expedient, order that the time for registration be extended; or, as the case may be, that the omission or misstatement be rectified, and may make such order as to the costs of the application as it thinks fit."

By the terms of section 120 the Court, when extending the time for registration, has a discretion to impose such terms and conditions as it thinks just and expedient, and the material words of the order in this case are "without prejudice to the rights of any mortgagee accrued in the meantime."

The phraseology of the order is not very precise, but their Lordships assume that "in the meantime" must be taken to mean the period between the date when the Bank's mortgage should have been registered and the date of actual registration. This period would cover the 21st November, 1922, when the plaintiffs' mortgage was registered.

Section 109 provides that a mortgage, such as the Bank's mortgage of the 10th August, 1922, shall so far as any security on the Company's property or undertaking is thereby conferred, be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the Company unless the prescribed particulars are filed with the Registrar within 21 days after the date of its creation.

It is to be noted that the section does not avoid the mortgage absolutely, but only so far as any security is given thereby on the Company's property or undertaking.

The effect, therefore, is that if a mortgage is not registered it is valid as an admission of debt, but as against a creditor or the liquidator it could not be said that a valid charge on the Company's property had been created.

But it is provided by section 120 that the Court may extend the time for registration in a proper case, as was in fact done in this case. What, then, was the effect of the registration of the Bank's mortgage within the extended time?

In their Lordships' opinion, the Court having extended the time for registration, and the mortgage having been registered within that time, the mortgage was constituted a valid charge ab initio, i.e., from the date of its execution, viz., the 10th of August, 1922, subject only to such conditions as were imposed by the Court in the order which extended the time.

If that be so, the Bank's mortgage on registration became a valid charge on the refinery as from the 10th August, 1922, and the plaintiffs' mortgage of the 10th August, 1922, which also was registered within the time extended by the High Court, became a valid charge from the 10th August, 1922, on the refinery and the distillery; but on the face of the plaintiffs' mortgage it was only a second charge upon the refinery.

But it was said on behalf of the plaintiffs that a right to enforce their mortgage had accrued to them on the registration of the mortgage on the 21st November, 1922, and by the order of the Court such right was not to be prejudiced. The right which the plaintiffs had to enforce their mortgage against the property of the Company depended not only upon the registration but also on the terms of the mortgage itself, and the right which they had to enforce in respect of the refinery was a second charge only. The order of the Court of the 21st December, 1922,* that it should be without prejudice to the "rights of any mortgagee accrued in the meantime," in their Lordships' opinion, could not have been intended to convert the plaintiffs' second charge upon the refinery into a first charge thereon.

The learned counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants, in support of his argument, referred to the decision in In re Monolithic Building Co. Tacon v. The Company,¹ which decided that section 93 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, avoids an unregistered mortgage as against a subsequent registered incumbrancer, even though he had express notice of the prior mortgage at the time when he took his own security.

The facts of the present case are materially different from the facts of the cited case, especially by reason of the fact that the plaintiffs' mortgage contains an express term that it is a second charge on the refinery. Further, the learned Judges who decided the cited case seem to have dealt with it "in reference to the difference of position between a registered secured creditor and a prior unregistered secured creditor." See judgment of Cozens Hardy, M.R. at page 662, and the effect of the subsequent registration of the prior creditor's security within the time extended by the Court does not seem to have been considered.

Their Lordships are of opinion that there is nothing in the order of the High Court of the 6th December, 1922, which interfered with the priority of the Bank's mortgage upon the refinery over the plaintiffs' mortgage therein.

Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that the appeal should be allowed on the ground that there was no consideration for the mortgage of the 31st August, 1922, in favour of the defendant firm, but they are further of opinion that the Bank's mortgage of the 10th August, 1922, which was assigned to the defendant firm, has priority over the plaintiffs' mortgage in respect of the property comprised in the mortgage so assigned to the defendant firm.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 84—Foreign State—What is—Attributes of sovereignty—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), Ss. 4 and 5—"Certain person"—Promissory note executed in favour of a person described by his office—Validity—Conflict of laws—Unstamped promissory notes inadmissible by the lex loci contractus—Admissibility in British India.

Any State which has preserved any degree of sovereignty must have at least three characteristics before it can properly be called a sovereign State. First, the people of the territory concerned must owe allegiance to the ruler of the supposed State. Secondly, the laws enforced in the State must be the ruler's laws, either made or recognised by him, not imposed by any outside authority, nor laws made by him in virtue only of a delegated authority. Thirdly, these laws should be enforced by his Courts, that is, Courts deriving their authority from him and not subject to the judicial control of any outside authority.

Held, on the evidence before the Court, that Gadwal Samasthanam, the head of which was the plaintiff in the suit, was in no sense a sovereign State or a "foreign State" for the purpose of S. 84 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

A promissory note executed in favour of the "Mohathameem Sahib Garu of Gadwal Samasthanam" is one in favour of a "certain person" within the meaning of S. 4, read with the last part of S. 5, of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

Mahant Damodar Das v. Benares Bank, Ltd., (1920) 5 Pat. L.J. 536 and Ramanadhan Chetty v. Katha Velan, (1917) I.L.R. 41 Mad. 353: 33 M.L.J. 627, followed.

The suit was brought upon certain promissory notes executed by the defendant in H.E.H. the Nizam's Dominions. Not having been stamped, they were not admissible in evidence even on payment of a penalty under the law in force in the Nizam's Dominions. It was contended by the defendant in the suit that the documents were void and unenforceable.

Held, the result of the provision in the foreign statute was only to make them inadmissible in evidence in the Nizam's Courts and not void; and that they could be sued upon in British India.

Dhondiram Chatrabhuj v. Sadasuk Savatram, (1918) I.L.R. 42 Bom. 522 and Bristow v. Sequeville, (1850) 5 Ex. Rep. 275, referred to.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kurnool in O.S. No. 34 of 1922.

The appeal was originally heard by Devadoss and Mackay, JJ., who delivered the following judgment:—

The suit is by the proprietor of Gadwal Samasthanam for an amount due by the defendant. The Lower Court decreed the suit and the defendant has preferred this appeal. In his written statement, the defendant pleaded that "the plaintiff being of a foreign State and the subject-matter of the suit being one relating to the State revenue of that State, the plaintiff has no right to institute this suit in this Court." The plaintiff relied on section 84 of the Civil Procedure Code as enabling him to file the suit. Section 84 applies to cases of foreign States recognised by His Majesty or by the Governor-General in Council. In order to enable a foreign State to sue in a British Court, two conditions have to be fulfilled: (1) the foreign State must be recognised by His Majesty or by the Governor-General in Council, and (2) the object of the suit must be to enable a private right vested in the head of such State or in any officer of such State in his public capacity. Though the Lower Court acted on the representation of the plaintiff, that section 84 applied to the case and granted a decree, yet as section 84 casts upon the Court the duty of taking judicial notice of the fact that a foreign State has or has not been recognised by His Majesty or by the Governor-General in Council, we referred the matter to the Government and the information we received is that section 84 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to Gadwal Samasthanam in Hyderabad State. We hold, section 84 has no application to the present case. The defendant's contention that Gadwal Samasthanam is a foreign State is a question of fact and this question of fact has not been tried by the Lower Court. It is but fair that the appellant should have an opportunity of adducing evidence to show that Gadwal Samasthanam is a foreign State and we therefore direct the Subordinate Judge of Kurnool to record a finding on the following issues:—

Is Gadwal Samasthanam a foreign State? and to submit the finding in the course of four weeks. Fresh evidence may be adduced by both the parties. Ten days for objections.

[In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Kurnool took evidence regarding the internal administration of the Samasthanam. He found it had no executive or judicial independence or legislative functions to discharge and returned a finding in these terms: "I find that Gadwal Samasthanam is not a 'State' or a 'Foreign State' and decide the issue in the negative."—Rep.]

W. Kothandarama Ayya for appellant.

C. S. Venkatachariar and R. Srinivasa Aiyangar for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

Reilly, J.

JUDGMENTS. Reilly, J.—In this suit the Raja of Gadwal sued the defendant, a resident of the Kurnool district, on ten documents, which are called Shokhas. The defendant admitted liability on one of them, Exhibit K, and disputed liability on the others. The Subordinate Judge made a decree for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed. The defendant appeals.

Before the Subordinate Judge in his written statement the defendant objected to the suit on the ground that Gadwal was a foreign State and that the plaintiff was suing, not to enforce a private right, but to enforce a State right arising out of liability to pay revenue due to the State. The learned Subordinate Judge did not consider at the trial the question whether Gadwal was a foreign State. He found that the right which the plaintiff was suing to enforce was a private right. When the appeal came on for hearing in this Court, the defendant raised a rather different objection, which was not set out in his appeal memorandum, namely, that Gadwal is a foreign State, but not a foreign State recognised by His Majesty the King-Emperor or the Governor-General in Council, and so the plaintiff as the ruler of that State could not sue in British India to enforce a private right, because he did not come within section 84 of the Code of Civil Procedure. At first sight it seems not very likely that within the borders of the Indian Empire there should be a foreign State the establishment of which has not yet been recognised by His Majesty or the Governor-General in Council. But

Mr. Kothandarama Ayya, who appears for the defendant, has urged that the Gadwal Samasthanam is a State not in direct relations with His Majesty or the Governor-General in Council, but a State under the suzerainty of the Nizam of Hyderabad. It is possible that there might be a State, not itself recognised by His Majesty or the Governor-General in Council, but subject to the suzerainty of some other State within the borders of the Indian Empire which was so recognised. But it is not disputed that, if Gadwal is to be found to be such a State, we must find that at any rate some degree of sovereignty has been preserved to it. When the case came on first before Devadoss and Mackay, JJ., they thought it was necessary to inquire of the Government whether Gadwal was a State recognised by His Majesty or the Governor-General in Council for the purpose of section 84 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and in reply to an inquiry made by the Registrar on that question a letter was received from the Chief Secretary to Government of Madras saying:

"I am directed to state that the Government of India have intimated that section 84 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, does not apply to Gadwal Samasthanam in Hyderabad State."

It will be seen that there are various implications in that letter, but that it does not directly meet the point raised by Mr. Kothandarama Ayya. If we received through the regular official channel any intimation in regard to the relations of a foreign State with His Majesty or with the Governor-General in Council or any statement that a foreign State had or had not been recognised by His Majesty or the Governor-General in Council, I need hardly say that we should accept that intimation as conclusive. But in this case it happens that the answer to the inquiry made does not conclude the contention raised by the defendant. Having received that answer, Devadoss and Mackay, JJ., thought it well to frame an issue: "Is Gadwal Samasthanam a foreign State" and send it to the Subordinate Judge for a finding. The Subordinate Judge after taking further evidence has submitted a finding that Gadwal Samasthanam is not a "State" or a "foreign State." The defendant has raised objections to that finding and has urged before us that Gadwal is a State, a foreign State, but not one recognised by His Majesty or the Governor-General in Council, and that therefore the plaintiff as the ruler of that State could not bring this suit in a Court in British India.

The position is rather curious because the defendant is trying to thrust upon the plaintiff an honour which the plaintiff does not claim. The plaintiff maintains that the Raja of Gadwal is a subject of the Nizam of Hyderabad, a subject indeed with a long and very distinguished history behind him, a subject in a very special position, a subject with special rights and privileges and exercising some of the powers usually exercised by ruling sovereigns, such as the rights of escheat and warship, the right to hold Judicial Courts, but nevertheless a subject, not a sovereign. We must remember that in many parts of the world such powers as I have just mentioned have been exercised by subjects in feudal or quasi-feudal relations with their sovereigns; but nevertheless their legal position has been that of a subject. In the circumstances of this case it does not appear necessary to me to enter into elaborate discussion of the character and essence of sovereignty. But I think it cannot be denied that any State which has preserved any degree of sovereignty—and various attributes of sovereignty may have been ceded to their suzerains by different States—must have at least three characteristics. First, the people of the territory concerned must owe allegiance to the ruler of the supposed State, and in the term “ruler” I include any person in whom, or body in which, the sovereign power resides. Secondly, the laws enforced in the State must be the ruler’s laws, either made or recognised by him, not laws imposed by any outside authority, nor laws made by him in virtue only of a delegated authority. And thirdly, those laws must be enforced by his Courts, that is Courts deriving their authority from him and not subject to the judicial control of any outside authority. Mr. Kothandarama Ayya in the course of his argument referred to Federated States. What I have said in regard to the power of law-making does not relate directly to Federated States; but I do not think it is in any way in conflict with the position of a body of Federated States. A group of co-ordinate sovereign States can agree together that the whole body shall make laws which are to run in the territory of each member; but those laws are made not by any external authority but by virtue of authority derived from the sovereign members themselves.

If we look at the evidence regarding the laws which run in Gadwal and the Judicial Courts which are established there, we shall find, I think, no difficulty in deciding the question before us. Diwan Bahadur Aravamudu Aiyangar, an Advocate of this Court, whose father was a judicial officer of the Gadwal Samasthanam and who himself had been legal adviser of the Samasthanam for nearly 30 years, has given evidence as

P.W. 5. He states that the Raja of Gadwal has no legislative power; and he has also given evidence to the effect that the Nizam's laws run in the Gadwal territory, instancing the Nizam's Criminal Procedure Code and the Nizam's Land Revenue Act. D.W. 3, a vakil called by the defendant, has stated that Gadwal is governed by the laws prevailing in the Nizam's State and that there is no independent power in the Gadwal Samasthanam to frame laws. In regard to Courts, Mr. Aravamudu Aiyangar has stated that judicial officers in Gadwal are nominated by the Raja but not appointed by him: they are appointed by the authorities of the Nizam's State. He has also stated that for more than 30 years there has been a right of appeal from the Courts of Gadwal to the Nizam's Courts—it must be noticed, not to the Nizam as suzerain in any political or executive capacity, but to the Nizam's Courts. The defendant himself as D.W. 2 has made a similar statement regarding the position of the Gadwal Courts. I think that evidence is quite conclusive to show that the Gadwal Samasthanam is in no sense a sovereign State or a foreign State for the purpose of section 84 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Besides this objection to the maintainability of the suit, the defendant has urged a number of points in regard to the Shokhas before us. The learned Subordinate Judge has treated all the 9 Shokhas in dispute as promissory notes. But I think it is quite clear, when they are examined, that all except three of them are not promissory notes. Exhibits A, B and H do contain unconditional promises to pay for a certain consideration named, that is trees assigned. But the other Shokhas except Exhibit K are offers for date trees. I think it will be convenient to deal first with the Shokhas which are promissory notes, Exhibits A, B and H. The defendant maintains that there was no consideration for these notes. But consideration is recited in them. In the ordinary way it is for him to prove want of consideration: He is a witness whose evidence does not read in a very convincing way, and the attitude he has taken up in this suit has shifted from time to time. The learned Subordinate Judge has not believed him on this point. I can see no sufficient reason why we should differ from the Subordinate Judge as regards that.

But apart from the question of consideration Mr. Kothandarama Ayya has urged other points. One is that the defendant executed these notes only as the agent of another man called Rangayya. There is nothing whatever in Exhibit A to suggest that the executant was anybody but the defendant himself or that he was acting for anybody else. Nor is there in Exhibits B and H as they appear before us. But unfortunately part of the paper on which Exhibits B and H have been written appears to have been torn or cut off just below the defendant's signature. It is suggested for the defendant that under his signature on these notes he wrote some words to indicate that he was the agent for Rangayya. It is a suspicious thing that the paper should have been torn off below the signature in these notes. An allegation was made before the Subordinate Judge that the notes had been tampered with while they were in the Subordinate Judge's Court. The clerk of the plaintiff's vakil filed an affidavit that they were not torn in that way when he put them into Court. The learned Subordinate Judge made an inquiry with the aid of affidavits into the matter but was unable to come to any conclusion. But, because the paper on which the notes were written has been torn or cut off in this way, can we accept the defendant's statement that he signed as agent for Rangayya? His own evidence in the matter is extraordinarily halting. He says:

"I do not well remember if in the suit Shokhas I had written anywhere that I was Rangayya's agent. I remember in some Shokhas which I executed for him I mentioned that I was agent. Some of the suit Shokhas were in full paper when I executed them. Exhibits B, H, J and D were in fuller paper when I executed them. Below my signature in Exhibit J some letters are missing in the part found torn. The letter that appears now is 'a'; the missing word should be agent. In Exhibit D I similarly find the yethvam of Ye Rangayya."

Then he goes on to explain that in the other notes "out of laziness and because plaintiff and his Abkari Superintendent were aware that I was Rangayya's agent I failed to mention in the rest that I executed them as Rangayya's agent." But it will be seen that he does not say specifically that in the case of Exhibit B or in the case of Exhibit H he signed as agent. When we look at these notes themselves it does not appear at all probable that he did so. Each of them is headed, as indeed all these Shokhas are, "Shokha executed by Kothakota Venkatarami Reddi," that is the defendant. There is no suggestion there that it was executed for anybody but himself. It has also to be noticed that, when a lawyer's notice was sent to him, in his reply he said that the claim was false, but he did not say that he executed any of the Shokhas in question as agent for Rangayya. In these circumstances I think that the contention that Exhibits B and H were executed only as agent for Rangayya clearly fails.

Another objection taken for the defendant is that these three promissory notes are made in favour of the "Mohathia-

The clerk of the plaintiff's vakil filed an affidavit that they were not torn in that way when we put them into Court. The learned Subordinate Judge made an inquiry with the aid of affidavits into the matter but was unable to come to any conclusion. But because the paper on which the notes were written has been torn or cut off in this way, can we accept the defendant's statement that he signed as agent for Rangayya? His own evidence in the matter is extraordinarily halting. He says:

"I do not well remember if in the suit Shokhas I had written anywhere that I was Rangayya's agent. I remember in some Shokhas which I executed for him I mentioned that I was agent. Some of the suit Shokhas were in full paper when I executed them. Exhibits B, H, J and D were in fuller paper when I executed them. Below my signature in Exhibit J, some letters are missing in the part found torn. The letter that appears now is 'a'; the missing word should be agent. In Exhibit D I similarly find the yethvam of Ye Rangayya."

Then he goes on to explain that in the other notes "out of laziness and because plaintiff and his Abkari Superintendent were aware that I was Rangayya's agent I failed to mention in the rest that I executed them as Rangayya's agent." But it will be seen that he does not say specifically that in the case of Exhibit B or in the case of Exhibit H he signed as agent. When we look at these notes themselves it does not appear at all these Shokhas are "Shokhas executed by Kothakota Venkatarami Reddi," that is the defendant. There is no suggestion then that it was executed for anybody but himself. It has also to be noticed that, when a lawyer's notice was sent to him, in his reply he said that the claim was false, but he did not say that he executed any of the Shokhas in question as agent for Rangayya. In these circumstances I think that the contention that Exhibits B and H were executed only as agent for Rangayya clearly fails.

meem Sahib Garu of Gadwal Samasthanam," that is the officer holding that post, and not in favour of any person by name. It is contended that to make a note in favour of a person described by his office is not to make it in favour of a certain person as required by section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. But in *Mahant Damodar Das v. Benares Bank, Ltd.*¹ it was decided that a promissory note made in favour of "the manager or acting manager of the Benares Bank, Ltd." was properly made and the person who was certainly indicated was the Benares Bank. Following that I am quite prepared to find that these promissory notes were executed in favour of the Raja of Gadwal, sufficiently described through his officer by the name of the office. It must be remembered that in this country we have the last part of section 5 of the Negotiable Instruments Act to help us in this matter, which provides that, if it is clear to whom payment is to be made, he may be a "certain person" within the meaning of section 4 of the Act although he is misnamed or only designated by description. In *Ramanadhan Chetty v. Katha Velan*² it was held that a note drawn in favour of a trustee of a temple by name and office was really in favour of the trust and could be sued on by a successor of the trustee. In my opinion this objection also fails.

Another objection to these notes is that none of them is stamped, though they were all executed in the Nizam's Dominions where promissory notes must be stamped in a manner similar to the way in which they have to be stamped in British India. The result of this is that none of these three notes could have been admitted in evidence according to the Negotiable Instruments Act in force in the Nizam's Territories to prove the plaintiff's claim. It appears that there is a provision in the Negotiable Instruments Act of the Nizam's Dominions that, although other documents which have not been stamped at the time of execution may be made admissible in evidence by paying a fee or penalty, the defect of want of stamp cannot be cured in that way in the case of promissory notes. Mr. Kothandarama Ayya suggests that the result of that is that these notes were void in the Nizam's territories. But that is not what the Act says. It merely makes them inadmissible in evidence. If they were void in the Nizam's Dominions, the place where they were made, certainly they could not be used as the basis of a suit instituted in British India. But, if they are merely inadmissible in evidence in Courts in the Nizam's Dominions because they are not stamped, it does not follow that they are inadmissible in Courts in British India. A note made in British India and unstamped would be inadmissible in our Courts; but we cannot stretch the provisions of our Negotiable Instruments Act to exclude on that basis a promissory note executed in a foreign territory. This particular point came before the Bombay High Court in *Dhondiram Chatrabhuj v. Sadasuk Savatram*³ and it was there decided that a promissory note made in the Nizam's Dominions, but unstamped and so inadmissible in evidence in any of the Nizam's Courts, could be proved in a Court in British India. That is the principle which has been adopted in England, as may be seen from *Bristow v. Sequeville*⁴. I cannot agree with Mr. Kothandarama Ayya's contention that because these promissory notes being unstamped could never have been admissible in any of the Nizam's Courts and so were practically unenforceable in his territory they must be regarded as void. That is not, so far as I can see, the effect of the penalty imposed in the Nizam's territory for failure to stamp them.

So far in regard to Exhibits A, B and H. There remain the other six Shokhas. These are, as I have said, in the form of applications for date trees, apparently required for the purpose of drawing toddy. They are offers for date trees and promises to pay certain amounts in certain periods. For the defendant it is contended that they are mere offers, that, though on the back of each paper there is an endorsement saying that it was accepted, no such acceptance was ever communicated to the defendant and that therefore he is not bound by the documents at all. On the other hand, Mr. Venkatachariar for the plaintiff contends that there is evidence that the right to tap date trees was given in consequence of these applications to the defendant's knowledge and therefore there was acceptance by performance and he got consideration for these documents and is bound by them. All these six documents refer to date trees required for the "Rajavole mamla Savukattu," which we are told means trees required for the toddy-tapping lease in the Rajavole village. There is the evidence given by P.W. 4, which combined with that of D.W. 1 shows sufficiently, I think, that the lease of trees for toddy tapping in the Rajavole village for Fasli 1329 was granted to Rangayya and a man called Thimma Reddi, who is a brother of the defendant. If the defendant applied for trees for the purpose of that lease and the lease was granted to Rangayya and Thimma Reddi, we can hardly suppose that the defendant was not aware of that. I think that the defendant must be held liable on any of these six Shokhas I am now discussing which can be shown to relate distinctly to the lease of trees in Rajavole for Fasli 1329. Exhibits D, E, F and G by their dates must refer to trees required for that Fasli. Ex. C is dated the 19th of November, 1920, that is about a fortnight after the expiry of the Fasli, and Exhibit J is dated 13th October, 1920, about 16 days before the end of Fasli. It is obvious that Exhibit C cannot refer to Fasli 1329 at all; nor can we reasonably suppose that Exhibit J refers to trees required for that Fasli, as it is a promise to pay Rs. 1,125 for a very large number of trees, which could be used only for a few days if it were for Fasli 1329. Exhibits C and J must, I think, refer to the succeeding Fasli, and we cannot find from the evidence who got the lease for that Fasli. Possibly the defendant himself was applying for it; but there is no evidence who got the lease. I think therefore that we cannot say that the offer made in Exhibit C or the offer made in Exhibit J was accepted to the knowledge of the defendant or that trees were let in accordance with them, and therefore the plaintiff's claim in respect of these two documents must be dismissed. Of the remaining Shokhas Exhibits D, E, F and G, Exhibit D is torn in a manner similar to Exhibits B and H, and the defendant takes advantage of that to urge that he only acted as an agent in connection with Exhibit D. But that contention, I think, fails, as it did in respect of Exhibits B and H.

4. (1850) 5 Ex. Rep. 275.

In my opinion, therefore, this appeal should be allowed in respect of the amounts concerned in Exhibits C and J, but in other respects should be dismissed and in the circumstances the parties should pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

Indian Registration Act (XVI of 1908), Ss. 17 (b) and 49—'Share list'—Deed of partition or memorandum of division—Necessity of registration—Admissibility to show divided status—Hindu Law—Illatom relationship—Burden of proof—Incidents of—Status of son-in-law—Right to interdict alienation.

The question whether a document is a deed of partition or a mere memorandum of partition is a pure question of fact, to be decided on a perusal of the actual document.

Veerappan v. Mylai Udayan, (1924) 87 I.C. 285 and Ayyakutti Man-kondan v. Periaswami Koundan, (1913) 30 M.L.J. 404, referred to.

An unregistered document styled a "share list" set out "particulars of the immoveable property which fell to the share of one member" in the division of the family properties effected between two brothers. It was of the same date as the alleged oral agreement to divide.

Held, the document was intended to be evidence of partition and not being registered, was not admissible in evidence to prove the partition in so far as it affected immoveable properties.

Per Curgenven, J.—"The document says 'particulars of the immoveable property, etc.' . . . If it had said, 'we hereby declare that the following are the particulars of the immoveable property, etc.,' no doubt could be entertained as to its nature, and since it is in substance and intention a declaration to that effect, it must, I think, be deemed to operate within the meaning of S. 17."

It is nevertheless admissible for the purpose of explaining the nature and character of the possession held by a party or as evidence of a divided status which can be dissociated from and does not necessarily imply a division of property.

Case-law reviewed.

Claims based on an illatom relationship should be carefully scrutinised. The practice is a departure from ordinary Hindu Law and accordingly it lies upon the party claiming by virtue of the status to override the provisions of that law, to substantiate his claim. The incidents of this relationship are still in the making and in the absence of any evidence in that respect there is no warrant from the authorities available, for the view that the illatom has, during the life-time of his father-in-law such an interest in the latter's property as would give him a right to interdict alienation and devise. Chenchamma v. Subbaya, (1885) I.L.R. 9 M. 114 and Sooramma v. Varāhulu, (1926) 101 I.C. 828, referred to.

Subbarao
v.
Mahalaksh-

Beasley, C. J.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—Plaintiffs 2 to 7 are the appellants. The 1st plaintiff died after the suit was filed. The 1st defendant is the wife of Sambayya, the deceased brother of the 1st plaintiff, and the 2nd defendant is the son-in-law of Sambayya having married Suramma, his fourth daughter. The 1st plaintiff and Sambayya were formerly members of an undivided Hindu family in possession of large properties. It is alleged in the plaint that Sambayya managed the family property and that he died an undivided member of the family on the 24th November, 1925. He was at the time of his death the Village Munsif of Dokiparru. One of the questions to be decided in this appeal is whether the 1st plaintiff and Sambayya became divided or not. Neither the 1st plaintiff nor Sambayya had any male issue. They had only daughters. It is alleged in the plaint that after the death of Sambayya the entire property of the joint family devolved upon the 1st plaintiff by right of survivorship. It is alleged that the 1st and 2nd defendants nevertheless took possession of the joint family property and a decree is sought establishing the right of plaintiffs 2 to 7 and the 3rd defendant to enjoy the property set out in Schedule A and a permanent injunction is claimed restraining the 1st and 2nd defendants from causing obstruction to the enjoyment of plaintiffs 2 to 7 and the 3rd defendant in this property and other reliefs. The plaintiffs, therefore, base their claim on a right to enjoy the undivided property of the 1st plaintiff and Sambayya. To meet this case the defendants set up the plea that Ramayya (the 1st plaintiff) and Sambayya were divided members and that the share of Sambayya did not pass to the 1st plaintiff after his death by right of survivorship. It is alleged that a partition was effected in November, 1924, between Sambayya and Ramayya and that share lists showing a division of the properties were prepared at Bunder on the 9th November, 1924 and in para. 5 of the written statement the items which fell to the share of Sambayya are set out. At this time Sambayya was very ill and he died on the 24th November, 1925. Before he died it is alleged that he made a will at Bunder disposing of the property which fell to his share in the partition. The date of this alleged will is the 26th February, 1925. Under the terms of this document, Exhibit VII, 15 acres of land passed to his daughters, 12 acres under a codicil of the same date to the 2nd defendant, some 5 acres of land and godowns to a temple and the residue to one Koti Reddi, who was the son of the 2nd defendant and whom it is alleged by the defendants Sambayya adopted.

Subbarao
v.
Mahalaksh-

Beasley, C. J.

Sambayya's second daughter, Sowbhagyam, who was a widow living in Sambayya's house was not provided for in the will. In Exhibit VII Koti Reddi is described as the adopted son of Sambayya and it is also stated in it that Sambayya had given authority to the 2nd defendant, the natural father of Koti Reddi, to act as guardian of Koti Reddi and to act as Village Munsif during his minority and to manage all his properties. The rice mill at Gudlavalleru which in the will is stated by Sambayya to be his self-acquired property was bequeathed to Koti Reddi. This alleged will—I describe it as an alleged will because it is the plaintiff's case that it is a spurious document—was attested by four witnesses, namely, Divi Rangacharyulu, a doctor who was attending on Sambayya, Pamireddi Ramayya, the 1st plaintiff, Korapati Venkatakrishnayya (D.W. 4) and another witness whose signature is illegible but who was examined as D.W. 5. It is not disputed by the plaintiffs that the signature of the 1st plaintiff is his, but it is alleged that he was an uneducated man and under the influence at this time of the 2nd defendant and that he either signed the document being unaware of its contents or the document was written on blank paper which bore the signature of the 1st plaintiff. It will be seen, therefore, that the respondent's case is that Sambayya having effected a partition with Ramayya disposed of by will the share which fell to him by reason of the partition and that, therefore, the plaintiffs have no right to any of the property of Sambayya so disposed of; and a matter of considerable importance to be considered here is whether the allegation by the defendants that the 2nd defendant's son Koti Reddi was adopted by Sambayya is true or false. It should be mentioned that the 2nd defendant's son Koti Reddi died on the 1st January, 1926. Not, however, content with setting up a defence claiming Sambayya's property, a claim for Ramayya's property is also made by reason of an alleged relationship of illatom son-in-law to Ramayya. The 2nd defendant, it will be remembered, married Sambayya's fourth daughter. He was, therefore, a son-in-law of Sambayya, but notwithstanding this it is the case of defendants 1 and 2 that Ramayya who had no unmarried daughters and no male issue brought up Surammal and gave her in marriage to the 2nd defendant. In the written statement of the 1st and the 2nd defendants it is stated that Sambayya and Ramayya effected an arrangement to the effect that Ramayya should take Surammal as his foster-daughter and she should be given in marriage to his sister's son, the 2nd defendant, that the latter should have a joint right to the property of Ramayya and that after the death of Ramayya the entire property forming the share of Ramayya should pass to him. This illatom relationship and the rights attaching thereto are denied by the plaintiffs. It is also alleged by the defence—and this is admitted by the plaintiffs—that whilst the suit was pending Ramayya, the 1st plaintiff, disposed of the bulk of the plaint properties, having by means of a Dhakal deed disposed of immoveable properties worth Rs. 50,000 and under another Dhakal deed properties worth Rs. 8,000. Ramayya died in July, 1926.

Several points of great importance and difficulty arise in this appeal. They are: (1) Did Ramayya and Sambayya become divided before the death of the latter? (2) Is the will, Exhibit VII, and its codicil genuine? (3) Was Koti Reddi the adopted son of Sambayya? (4) Was the 2nd defendant the illatom son-in-law of Ramayya? (5) If he was, to what share of Ramayya's property is he entitled? and (6) Was the rice mill in Gudlavaluru the self-acquired property of Sambayya? In considering the before-mentioned matters several difficult questions of fact and law present themselves.

In dealing with the first question what we have to consider is whether what is described by the defendants as a "share list" can be properly given that description and whether it is a deed effecting a partition as is alleged by the defendants. This question is a most important one because that document is an unregistered one. If it is a document which under the Registration Act is required to be registered, then the question arises whether it can be referred to in evidence in order to prove that there was a partition or division in status as between Sambayya and Ramayya or whether it can be disregarded altogether and parol evidence admitted to prove a division in status or partition. First of all, does this document require registration? Under S. 17 (b) of the Registration Act (XVI of 1908) amongst other documents required to be registered are non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, to or in immoveable property. If Exhibit VIII is a document of this description, then under S. 49 of the same Act it shall not affect any immoveable property comprised in it or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property unless it has been registered. Therefore the first thing to be considered is whether this is a document such as is described in S. 17 (b) of the Registration Act. Exhibit VIII is headed "Particulars of the immoveable properties which fell to the share of Pamireddi Sambayya in the division of the family properties effected on the 9th November, 1924, between the sons of Pamireddi Lakshmanna (1) Sambayya and (2) Pamireddi Ramanna's adopted son, Ramayya, residents of Dokiparru village." Then follow the survey numbers of the properties, their situation and their rough extent. This document was signed by both Sambayya and Ramayya. The writer of the document is stated to be Burra Ramayya (D.W. 3) and there are the signatures of two attesting witnesses, Nagabhushanam who was not called as a witness in the Court below and Seetaramaswami (D.W. 7). For the plaintiffs it is contended that this document operates to create an interest in the immoveable property described in it and by the defence it is contended that it is nothing more than a memorandum of a division of properties previously agreed upon. A wealth of authority upon this question has been presented to us in the course of the argument by both sides. Amongst the cases to which we were referred are the following: *Pothi Naicken v. Naganna Naicker*¹. There the document in question reads as follows:—

"As we have, in the presence of the undermentioned Panchayatdars, divided, into equal moieties, the cash, moveables and immoveables, Court decrees, etc., of which we are now possessed, valued at Rs. 80,000, our connection shall hereafter be only by relationship, but we shall have no monetary connection in respect of these properties."

It was there held by Sir John Wallis, C.J., Sadasiva Aiyar and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., constituting a Full Bench, that the document had the effect of causing immoveable properties heretofore held by the co-parceners as joint tenants thenceforward to be held by them as tenants-in-common and as such, without registration, could not affect immoveable property. In my view, the document in question did not create much difficulty on the face of it. It did more clearly appear to be a document effecting a partition than otherwise. The question whether a document is a deed of partition or a mere memorandum of partition is a pure question of fact to be decided on a perusal of the actual document. This was the opinion of Jackson, J., in *Veerappan v. Mylai Udayan*² and also of Spencer, J., in *Ayyakutti Mankondan v. Periaswami Koundan*³. In the former case after an award directing a partition was passed by panchayatdars a list was drawn up which contained the shares given to the different members and was signed by them and attested by witnesses. Jackson, J., held that the document was a deed of partition declaring an interest in the immoveable property mentioned therein and, if unregistered, was inadmissible in evidence respecting any transaction affecting such property. Jackson, J., however, thinks that at the most it will be evidence of an intention to divide and receivable in evidence as proof of such intention. The latter opinion deals with the question as to admissibility and the former as to whether it purports to create an interest in immoveable property. In *Saraswatamma v. Pad-dayya*⁴ the document was described as a "List of shares of division." Lands were divided in it and then the residential house and it contained the statement: "Both of us have agreed to the said shares and effect settlement without any dispute whatever." Venkatasubba Rao, J., was of the opinion that this document afforded clear evidence of conduct from which an intention to divide on the part of the executants was deducible but that all the co-parceners not being parties to the document it did not effect an immediate division in status. With this opinion Spencer, J., agreed. On page 359 he states:

"On the same principle I think that documents which are instruments of partition, as defined in S. 2 (15) of the Stamp Act, that is, instruments whereby co-owners of any property divide or agree to divide such property in severalty, are required by S. 17 of the Indian Registration Act to be registered when the property to be divided is immoveable property over Rs. 100 in value, and if they are not so registered they cannot by reason of S. 49 be admitted as evidence of the transaction they purport to effect; but they may be used for the collateral purpose of proving division of status among the parties to the documents. When so used they do not 'affect' immoveable property nor is the division of status a 'transaction affecting immoveable property' in the sense intended by the Act to be given to the word 'affect'. Documents that do not fall under the above description are not required to be registered at all and are admissible in evidence without registration."

The observations of Spencer, J., are useful in our consideration of the question whether and for what purpose a document inadmissible under S. 49 of the Registration Act by reason of want of registration may yet be used in evidence. In *Gopayya v. Kristnayya*⁵ it was held by Krishnan and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ., that if the parties had treated the "Share lists" as final it would be inadmissible in evidence without registration and that an oral agreement as to partition could be proved and, if proved, the written deed could be treated as the minutes of agreement between the parties and not as a completed partition deed and even though unregistered could under these circumstances be admitted in evidence to prove the terms agreed to. In *James R. R. Skinner v. R. H. Skinner*⁵ it was held that an agreement for the sale of immoveable property is a transaction affecting the property within the meaning of S. 17 of the Registration Act inasmuch as, if carried out, it will bring about a change of ownership and that to allow a document which does itself create such an interest to be used as the foundation of a suit for specific performance appeared to be little more than an evasion of the Act. This case was strongly relied upon by the learned Advocate-General in support of his argument but when the agreement for sale is examined it will be seen that it on the face of it affected the property. In it clause 8 reads as follows:—

"The said vendor confirms this to be a complete and conclusive sale binding on the said vendor and on all his heirs or assigns, etc., in favour of the said vendee and if the vendee should ever consider necessary to execute a registered sale-deed vendor or his heirs, assigns, etc., will always be ready to execute and register the same at the expenses of the vendee."

It will be seen that this clearly purports to transfer the vendor's interest in immoveable property. In *Gnanamuthu Nadan v. Veilukanda Nqadathi*⁷ Odgers and Hughes, JJ., held that a partition list containing a list of the properties which fell to each sharer on a partition did not require registration even though signed by all the co-sharers and attested when it contained no words which could be construed as creating a partition of status. In this case *Gopayya v. Kristnayya*⁵ was followed. This decision strongly supports the contention of Mr. Varadachari on behalf of the respondents that the document is not one required to be registered. In Referred Case No. 5 of 1883, *A reference under S. 49 of the Stamp Act*⁸ it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that a document signed by the members of a Hindu family and attested by witnesses, which purported to be an account or list of the share of one member of the family in the family property and in which it was recited that the parents of the family were to enjoy certain lands and that the outstanding debts should be divided at a future date was not liable to stamp duty as a partition deed. In Ramaswami Aiyar v. Thirupathi Naik,⁹ a case relied upon by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the appellants, it was stated that the criterion for purposes of registration is what is expressed on the face of the documents, not what incidents may be annexed by custom to a grant of the kind. This case was relied upon by the appellants because it was there held that the document must be taken to be an agreement to lease, and in consequence subject to the provisions of the Registration Act as if it were a lease.

Subbarao
v.
Mahalaksh-

Beasley, C. J.

On a consideration of these cases I have come to the conclusion, although not without some hesitation, that this document cannot be said to be merely the minutes of a previous oral agreement to divide. The fact that it is of the same date as the alleged oral agreement to divide is of importance, but it does not necessarily follow that the proper conclusion to be drawn from that is that it is an agreement to partition and I am not basing my conclusion merely upon that fact because it seems to me that the document being signed and the other document (not produced) which is its counter-part also being signed indicates that it was intended that this document and the other should be the evidence of the partition. It must be borne in mind that no partition deed is effected without some previous discussion of its terms and it is not rendered any the less a partition deed on that account and although this case is not very dissimilar to Gnanamuthu Nadan v. Veilukanda Nadathi,² for the reasons already given, Exhibit VIII, in my view, required to be registered and not having been so it is not admissible in evidence for the purpose required. But even though inadmissible in evidence to prove a partition, I am of the view that it could be used in evidence not for what it contains but as evidence of a division in status. As Jackson, J., stated in *Veerappan v. Mylai Udayan*³ it would be evidence of intention to divide, and as Spencer, J., stated in *Saraswatamma v. Paddayya*⁴, being unregistered it could be used to prove a division in status. In *Ramu Chetty v. Panchammal*⁵ it was held by Kumaraswami Sastri and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ., that a division of status can be proved even if the deed of partition is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration and that an unregistered document may be used to determine the nature of the possession held by a party and that where a deed of partition is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration the terms of the partition cannot be proved except by the document itself but if it is unnecessary to decide the terms of partition, it is open to a Court to infer from the conduct and dealings of the parties that there was a division in status. On page 1029 Kumaraswami Sastri, J., states as follows:—

v.
Mahalaksh-

Beasley, C. J.

"So far as the division of status is concerned, a recent decision of the Privy Council in *Rajangam Aiyar v. Rajangam Aiyar*¹¹ is clear to the effect that a division of status can be proved even though the document has not been registered. It has also been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that an unregistered document may be used to determine the nature of the possession held by a party. The Subordinate Judge has not relied upon any unregistered partition deed. For the purpose of coming to the conclusion he has arrived at, he takes the conduct of the parties into consideration and comes to the conclusion that not only has the division of status been proved but all the properties claimed have been enjoyed by the defendant's husband in his own right. I do not see why the evidence as regards the conduct of the parties in their dealings with each other and with regard to specific items of property should not, coupled with the finding of a division of status, be used and relied upon to show that certain properties which the plaintiff claims are not in wrongful possession of the defendant but belonged to the defendant's husband. I do not think that on the facts of the case, S. 92 of the Evidence Act is necessary to be invoked by any of the parties. The plaintiff comes into Court and says that he is the absolute owner of the property, because he is a member of an undivided family."

I may pause here and say that that is what the plaintiffs in this suit base their claim upon.

"The defendant says that her husband was not a member of an undivided family, that he was divided in status, and that he enjoyed certain properties separately, as a divided member of the family."

that is what the 1st and 2nd defendants say in this suit.

"This is not a case when a claim is made by the defendant to any property on the allegation that it came to her by virtue of a deed of partition which is unregistered and so inoperative. The plaintiff's claim as a member of the joint family could not be sustained."

Although the correctness of Kumaraswami Sastri, J.'s opinion in stating the effect of the decision in *Rajangam Aiyar v. Rajangam Aiyar*¹¹ has been questioned, his judgment in other respects is a very strong one in support of the respondent's contention here. Another case relied upon by the respondents is *Chhotalal Aditram v. Bai Mahakore*¹². There it was held that the fact of partition may be proved by oral evidence although the deed embodying the terms of partition cannot be proved for want of registration. In the course of the judgment paragraph 405 of Taylor on Evidence (10th Edition) was quoted. It is as follows:—

"The fact of the existence of a particular relationship may be shown by parol evidence, though the terms which govern such relationship appear to be in writing The fact of partnership may be proved by parol evidence of the acts of the parties without producing the deed."

In *Ahobilachariar v. Tulasi Ammal*¹³ Ramesam, J., took the same view. In *Subramania Aiyar v. Savitri Ammal*¹⁴ Sankaran Nair, J., held that a partition deed not registered is admissible in evidence to prove the status of the members but is inadmissible in evidence to prove the transaction so far as it affects immoveable properties and Pinhey, J., held that such a partition deed cannot affect any immoveable property comprised therein nor be received in evidence of any transaction affecting such property but is admissible to prove the fact of a partition having been effected. In *Sikhamani Pandithar v. Ammani Ammal*¹⁵ Spencer and Phillips, JJ., held that a document which effects a partition by itself where there has been no prior partition is not admissible in evidence to prove a unilateral declaration or division in status but if such declaration has taken place prior to the document it can be received as evidence of that division in status. There is no doubt now that an unequivocal declaration by a member of an undivided family of his intention to be divided in status is sufficient to effect a partition and in *Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj*¹⁶ it was held that a letter by a member of a Hindu family indicating his intention to separate himself and enjoy his share in severalty coupled with a suit for partition was as unequivocal and clearly expressed an intention as could be made and that it amounted to a separation with all its legal consequences. The case referred to by Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in *Ramu Chetty v. Panchammal*¹⁰ is Rajangam Aiyar v. Rajangam Aiyar,¹¹ and his opinion as to the effect of this judgment has been doubted as before stated and, in my view, it does no more than decide that the document in that case not being a document by itself creating, assigning, limiting or extinguishing any right or interest in immoveable property and not therefore requiring registration was admissible in evidence so far as it went. It did not decide that a document which did require to be registered could yet be used in evidence to prove a division in status although cases since that time, namely, Gnanamuthu Nadan v. Veilukanda Nadathi,⁷ *Ramu Chetty v. Panchammal*¹⁰ and Mahalakshamma v. Suryanarayana,¹⁷ have clearly laid down that a document required to be registered as effecting a partition can be used as evidence of a division in status. The latter case is reported in Mahalakshamma v. Suryanarayana.¹⁷ On page 990 Reilly, J., states:

"The effect of the ruling of the Privy Council in *Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal*¹⁸ is that, while such a document cannot be used to prove such a transaction, it can be used to prove a different fact relating to the property even though that fact is intimately connected with the transaction," and on page 991 dealing with the unregistered document he states:

"But the opinion has been expressed—and I venture to think rightly—that it can be used to prove a division in status, which we can dissociate from, and which does not necessarily imply, a division of property."

In *Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal*¹⁸ there was a document reciting a gift and it was not registered and it was held that the gift was invalid and that the recitals in the document could not be used as evidence of a gift but might be referred to as explaining the nature and character of the possession thenceforth held by the person to whom the gift had been made. On page 251 Viscount Cave in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council states:—

"It should be added that, although the petitions of 1895 and the change of names made in the register in consequence of those petitions are not admissible to prove a gift, they may nevertheless be referred to as explaining the nature and character of the possession thenceforth held by Duraisani."

A consideration of these cases leads me to the conclusion that Exhibit VIII was admissible in evidence to prove a division in status but could not be used as evidence of how the property was divided; and furthermore in my opinion it was not necessary even to refer to Exhibit VIII at all for purposes of proving a division in status as such division could be proved by evidence as to the conduct of Sambayya and Ramayya. When that conduct is considered it seems to me clear that there was a division in status between them.

I see no reason for thinking that the will, Exhibit VII, is not genuine or for believing that Ramayya did not know what it contained. That being so, he acquiesced in the position taken up by Sambayya, namely, that of a divided brother. This, coupled with his own statement in Exhibit I, is sufficient evidence that he and Sambayya were at least divided in status. This disposes of the appellants' contention that they are entitled to the whole of Sambayya's property by right of survivorship. It is quite true that Exhibit VIII cannot be referred to in order to say what properties fell to the share of Sambayya and I do not think that the will can be referred to for that purpose either. The fact remains that he had a power of disposition over his half share in each of the joint family properties. It is quite clear from the evidence already referred to that Sambayya took Koti Reddi in adoption. But the respondents' case is that the appellants are not entitled to any share in Ramayya's property because the 2nd defendant was his illatom son-in-law and by survivorship he is entitled to the whole of that property. It lies upon the defendants to prove this relationship and it must be proved very clearly and must not be left a matter of speculation at all. I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother Curgenven, J., and entirely agree with the conclusions he has arrived at with regard to the alleged illatom relationship between the 2nd defendant and Ramayya both on the facts and upon the law, and I also agree with him in his opinion as to the effects of an illatom relationship if proved on the shares in the property. With regard to the rice mill, I am satisfied that it was the self-acquired property of Sambayya and as this question has been fully dealt with in the judgment of my learned brother I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything further upon this point.

Beasley, C. J.

The appeal is allowed in part. In modification of the decree of the lower court we declare that the late Pamireddi Sambayya and Ramayya died divided in status from each other, that the plaintiffs 2 to 7 and the 1st and 3rd defendants are entitled to the right and enjoyment of the 1st plaintiff's half share of items 1 to 51 of the plaint A schedule and to be placed in joint possession of the same along with defendants 1 and 2 as co-owners in respect of the said items and that items 52 and 53 of the said A schedule were the self-acquired properties of the late Sambayya to which the plaintiffs have no right; and we further order that except as to the declaration before granted in respect of items 1 to 51 of plaint A schedule, the decree of the lower court is confirmed and that each party do bear his own costs throughout.

Curgenven, J.—The main facts of this case have been summarised in the judgment which My Lord has just delivered. The question of fact first arising is whether the partition deed, Exhibit VIII, and the will, Exhibit VII, purporting to have been executed by Sambayya, are genuine. As to this there can, I think, be no two opinions, so that it is unnecessary to go at great length into the evidence.

Curgenven, J.

It has next to be considered whether Exhibit VIII is admissible in evidence to prove the partition. The document opens thus:—

Subbarao
v.
Mahalaksh-

Chirgenven, J.

"Particulars of the immoveable properties which fell to the share of Pamireddi Sambayya in the division of the family properties, effected on 9th November, 1924, between the sons of Pamireddi Lakshman (1) Sambayya, and (2) Pamireddi Ramanna's adopted son Ramayya, residents of Dokiparru village."

Then follows a list of the items of property comprising Sambayya's share. The circumstances in which this document and the corresponding document setting out Ramayya's share, which is not now forthcoming, were executed are narrated by the writer of them, D. W. 3. Sambayya gave him rough drafts and he wrote the fair copies from them in the presence of the two brothers, Sambayya himself dictating the particulars from the drafts. The deeds were then signed and attested. We have to consider whether in the terms of S. 17 of the Registration Act, Exhibit VIII "purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest in immoveable property," and the first test to apply is whether the document formed an essential part of the process of dividing the property or whether there is ground to suppose that the partition had already taken place, perhaps by oral arrangement, and was complete when the document was executed. It appears to me that the circumstances narrated by the writer show that this was not a case of an oral partition completed and done with, and lists separately and subsequently drawn up. I think that if ever a partition deed can be regarded as an integral part of the partition, Exhibit VIII was such a deed. The importance attached to it is shown by the previous preparation of a rough draft and by the employment of a draftsman, and its formal and binding character is apparent from its being signed by both the brothers and attested by witnesses. So far then as intention can be gathered from the course taken, it was not merely to prepare a list or memorandum but to execute a legally valid deed. In point of fact it affords virtually the only evidence relied upon in proof of the partition in this case, although it so happens that other incidental evidence of the fact of partition is forthcoming.

It is then necessary to see whether Exhibit VIII can be said to purport or operate to affect immoveable property within the meaning of S. 17. We have had a variety of other cases relating to partition documents brought to our attention but no very useful purpose will be served by discussing them in detail as each document must be dealt with according to its terms. An instance of a somewhat extreme view is afforded by *Jivan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal*¹⁹, which dealt not with a partition document but with a receipt for money paid under a mortgage bond. The contention was that the document pro tanto extinguished the mortgage debt and accordingly should be registered. I only refer to the case because Edge, C.J., who delivered the leading judgment, expressed the view that the strictest construction must be placed upon the provisions of the Registration Act and it must be clear that the document objected to comes within the four corners of those provisions. An alternative view is that the Court should ensure that the provisions of the Act are not evaded by any mere informality in the language, so long as the document was intended to operate and does operate in the manner laid down in S. 17. In *Reference under S. 49 of the Stamp Act*⁸ a Full Bench had to consider on a reference under S. 49 of the Stamp Act whether the referred document was a partition deed, but in that case I think the terms of the document, which were bare of any operative words, led without difficulty to the conclusion that it was "a note that a certain property had on partition been allotted for the maintenance of parents and a memorandum of the particulars of property which had on partition fallen to the share of one of the brothers." So too the document in *Gnanamuthu Nadan v. Veilukanda Nadathi*⁷ was a mere list of property headed with the name of the sharer to whom it fell, and although it was signed and attested, it was held to be admissible in evidence. Of a different character was the partition deed in *Pothi Naicken v. Naganna Naicker*¹, which contained the recital "As we have in the presence of the undermentioned panchayatdars divided. . . ." and which was held actually to effect a division and so to be inadmissible for want of registration. No doubt the legal character and effect of Exhibit VIII would be clearer if it contained some such formal declaration as "we hereby divide," but mere informality of language should not, in my view, be allowed to defeat the provisions of the Registration Act. The document says "Particulars of the immoveable property which fell to the share of Pamireddi Sambayya in the division of the family properties effected on 9th November, 1924." If it had said "we hereby declare that the following are the particulars of immoveable property, etc.," no doubt could be entertained as to its nature; and since it is, in substance and intention a declaration to that effect, it must, I think, be deemed to operate within the meaning of S. 17. Indeed, had it been a registered document and tendered in proof of Sambayya's title to his share in the property, I have no doubt that any Court would accept it as such. In these circumstances I am clearly of opinion that under S. 49 of the Registration Act it must be excluded in so far as it is evidence of a transaction affecting immoveable property.

Assuming then that the deed is inadmissible to show what disposition of the family property was made at the division, the point next arising is whether it is admissible to prove a division of status. Mr. Varadachari has endeavoured to show, I think successfully, that upon this question judicial opinion, as revealed by the decisions of this Court, has gradually but unmistakably settled to the view that a partition deed, otherwise inadmissible, may be received in evidence of a division of status. As an instance of the earlier view that such a document is in all respects inadmissible may be cited the judgment of Oldfield, J., in *Pothi Naicken v. Naganna Naicker*²⁰. The learned Judge held that a division in status alone necessarily converted the joint tenancy of a co-parcener into a tenancy-in-common, and this change extinguished one kind of right in the property and created another within the meaning of S. 17 of the Registration Act. The other member of the Bench, Sankaran Nair, J., took the different view that a document merely creating a separation in status did not fall within the provisions of the Registration Act because the consequential change in the tenure of the property was by operation of rules of Hindu law and not by virtue of the instrument. In the Letters Patent Appeal from these judgments reported as *Pothi Naicken v. Naganna Naicker*¹ the view was taken that the document must be treated as a whole, and as a whole was inadmissible, notwithstanding that it dealt with moveables as well as immoveables. *Ayyakutti Mankondan v. Periaswami Koundan*³ is another Letters Patent Appeal from differing judgments of two learned Judges, Spencer and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ. Spencer, J., thought that the document did not require registration at all, so that the further question did not arise; Sadasiva Aiyar, J., took the opposite view and considered further that the division of status created by it could not logically or properly be separated from the extinction of joint rights in immoveable property effected by the same document, which is the same view as Oldfield, J., took in *Pothi Naicken v. Naganna Naicker*²⁰. We find this opinion adopted again by Spencer and Phillips, JJ., in Sikhamani Pandithar v. Ammani

*Ammal*²¹. Two judgments of their Lordships of the Privy Council appear to have contributed more than anything else to an alteration of opinion. One is the well-known case of *Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj*¹⁶ which held that an unequivocal expression of intention on the part of a co-parcener was sufficient to effect a division of status. The other was *Rajangam Aiyar v. Rajangam Aiyar*¹¹ which dealt with the admissibility of a document drawn up in certain partition proceedings. Admittedly the document in the latter case effected a division of status, and although their Lordships did not refer to or discuss any of the Madras decisions upon this point, the only conclusion compatible with their judgment is that a document declaring a division of status does not require registration on the ground that such a division must necessarily affect the family property within the meaning of S. 49 of the Registration Act. In *Saraswatamma v. Paddayya*⁴ a partition deed which was inadmissible to prove particulars of partition was accepted to prove an intention to be divided in status, the learned Judges relying much on *Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj*¹⁶ in coming to this conclusion. *Ramu Chetty v. Panchammal*²² is another decision to the same effect; and the principle was accepted by Kumaraswami Sastri and Reilly, JJ., in *Mahalakshmanamma v. Suryanarayana*¹⁷. I think accordingly that, following the current of recent judicial opinion, there is no question but that we may look into Exhibit VIII to decide whether the brothers were joint or several in status. Even if the current course were to exclude the document altogether, there is ample authority for the view that evidence of division may be received from other sources. Direct authority for this proposition is furnished by *Chhotalal Aditram v. Bai Mahakore*¹² where it is explained that S. 91 of the Evidence Act does not preclude proof by parol evidence of a fact which is not a term of the document; and the fact of division is not such a term any more than would be, for instance, the fact of relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee or of landlord and tenant. A case of this Court dealing with same matter is *Ramu Chetty v. Panchammal*²². The evidence in order not to offend against S. 91 of the Evidence Act must be restricted to the fact that a partition has taken place and must not extend to the particulars of the division, as, for instance, the items which fell to Sambayya's share. That apart from the recital in Exhibit VIII there is ample evidence of the fact of a partition cannot be disputed. It is unnecessary I think to go further than the will Exhibit VII itself, attested as it is by Ramayya. Therein it is stated that Sambayya and his younger brother remained joint for a very long time and recently became divided. Exhibit I, Ramayya's petition to the Deputy Collector, contains an express admission to the same effect. The finding that Exhibit VIII is inadmissible to show what property fell to each brother's share must result in the conclusion that each enjoyed an undivided share in each item of property, a conclusion which must necessarily involve an alteration in the decree which has been passed in this suit.

The next question is whether the 2nd defendant has succeeded in proving his relationship as illatom son-in-law to Ramayya. He is a son of a sister, Machamma, of Ramayya and Sambayya and evidence is adduced to show that he was brought into the house in which the brothers were jointly residing when he was 14 or 15 years old, and married to Sambayya's daughter, Suramma. This girl, it is said, was brought up by Ramayya who gave her away in marriage to the 2nd defendant. In this way, it is explained, his illatom relationship to Ramayya originated. The proof which is offered of it consists, firstly, in some oral evidence as to what took place at the marriage, and what then and subsequently the brothers said; and, secondly, in Ramayya's admissions contained in the applications, already referred to, for the village munsif's post. In weighing this evidence, it will be well to bear in mind with what difficulties the 2nd defendant is confronted. An illatom relationship to a father-in-law may or may not be rare in the community to which the parties belong but there can be no question that such a relationship to a father-in-law's brother is quite unusual, so that it is unlikely on a priori grounds that such an expedient would be resorted to; nor is it easy to see with what motive or intention an undivided brother would adopt such a course. It is said that he brought up Suramma as he was living with her father in a state of jointness. It is difficult to see what this means, and what practical difference it would make in Suramma's position in the family. If it was desired to bring the 2nd defendant into the house, the obvious course would have been for Sambayya himself, who had no son, to take him as illatom. [After discussing the documentary evidence in the case, His Lordship observed that there "was no scrap of paper" to prove alleged relationship of the second defendant as the illatom son-in-law of Ramayya.]

As has been observed by a Bench of this Court, Panda Patayya v. Panda Venkamma,²³ claims of this nature should be very carefully scrutinised, as an ordinary son-in-law may be tempted to get possession of his father-in-law's property by such means. In the present case, the 2nd defendant's claim is to an estate of about half a lakh in value and he seeks to displace persons whose title is otherwise unimpeachable. Allowing all due weight to the admissions made by Ramayya, it cannot be gainsaid that they occur at a very late stage, and that there is no record to show that on any previous occasion the illatom relationship was asserted. On the contrary, such documents as bear upon the matter rather run counter to the theory. Thus the oral evidence has a very heavy burden thrown upon it. It is unnecessary, I think, to hold that the witnesses are consciously misrepresenting the truth in order to arrive at the conclusion that it would be unsafe to act upon their statements. They are reporting observations made in conversation for the most part a good many years ago, and there is probable source of confusion arising from the identification of Ramayya with his undivided brother's concerns. He might quite naturally have said—as indeed he appears to have said to the Deputy Tahsildar in Exhibit II—"We have taken Krishna Reddi as illatom son-in-law." It may even be that, of his brother's daughters, he bestowed his affection and care specially upon Suramma—no other meaning has been suggested to the statements that he "brought her up"—and if so he would naturally take a particular interest in her husband, and may have gone so far as to say that he was going to make him his heir. However that may be, the oral evidence does not in my view establish the status, and differing from the trial Court, which appears to regard as proved an unqualified agreement by Ramayya to make the 2nd defendant his heir, I am unable to accept the fact of illatom.

Even if the illatom relationship had been established, I do not think that the learned advocate for the respondents has succeeded in demonstrating that a father-in-law who takes a son-in-law in illatom thereby deprives himself of the right to devise his property, much less to alienate any portion of it while still alive. It is not disputed that in the Reddi community to which the parties belong the custom is to be found of taking a son-in-law into the family, especially where there is no son. This may be done, it seems, without the execution of any document or the performance of any ceremony, though it cannot be inferred that every son-in-law, who becomes an inmate of his wife's family house thereby acquires the status of illatom son-in-law. The practice is a departure from ordinary Hindu law, and accordingly it lies upon the party claiming by virtue of the status to override the provisions of that law to substantiate his claim. This cannot in general be done, as for instance can be done in a case of adoption, by appeal to settled rules of law, because the practice of illatom, being of rare occurrence and confined to certain castes, has never become crystallised into fixed rules of law by a long course of judicial decisions. Thus we frequently find that, when some legal consequence of the relationship has had to be decided, the Court has found it necessary to base its finding upon evidence specially recorded for the purpose. Upon the question now before us, no such evidence is available, and Mr. Varadachari has had to depend upon the available case-law as the only means whereby to demonstrate his proposition.

Unfortunately little if any direct authority for it or against it has been found. There are cases where the question arose as to the right of an illatom son-in-law, compared with that of a natural-born son, as, for instance, *Hanumantamma v. Rami Reddi*²⁴, where the procedure I have already alluded to, that of taking evidence ad hoc, was resorted to, and the trial Court returned a finding that the illatom takes the same share as would be taken by an adopted son, while the High Court held that upon the evidence he should take an equal share with a natural-born son, a difference of view which shows how doubtful may be the incidents of this custom. In the same case, the power of an illatom to demand partition was a question raised but not decided; and this same question was in *Chinna Obayya v. Sura Reddi*²⁵ held to depend upon custom and to be determinable only upon evidence. The case was remanded for evidence to be taken, but what the result was has not been discovered. In *Chenchamma v. Subbayya*²⁶ the status of an illatom arose for consideration, and it was held that he was not a co-parcener with an after-born son, nor a joint tenant, but a tenant-in-common. It has not been seriously contended that a co-parcenary exists between the illatom and his father-in-law, and there is authority, as, for instance, in Emi Sooramma v.

*Varabati Varahalu*²⁷ that on the father-in-law's death he gets no right of survivorship. It is not possible, I think, to deduce from these decisions, even were they capable, which they are not, of universal application, that the illatom has, during the father-in-law's life-time, such an interest in the latter's property as would give him a right to interdict alienation and devise. Mr. Varadachari admits that the interest enjoyed is of a peculiar kind, which he would define as vested but variable. It would certainly be a very strong thing to hold that a father-in-law debars himself from disposing of any property thenceforward, and, indeed, the learned advocate only goes to the length of suggesting that alienation for the purpose of defeating the illatom rights would be invalid as against it. It would be more reasonable to impose a limit upon the father-in-law's power of devise, although whether this should be total or partial would need to be decided by reference to evidence of usage. On the whole, later cases appear to me not to be in conflict with the earliest cited to us, *Challa Papi Reddi v. Challa Koti Reddi*²⁸. The finding in that case was that the defendant's father obtained his rights in pursuance of a special custom which entitled his father-in-law to select a son-in-law who should take his property as if a son. Holloway, J. (with whom Innes, J., agreed) held that the son-in-law did not become a joint tenant, and the father-in-law had no such restrictions imposed upon his powers of alienation as the existence of a son would entail. He goes on: "The power of complete disposition, as against both a widow and daughters, has, rightly or wrongly, been upheld, and there would be great difficulty in saying that the son-in-law, so affiliated, could be in a better position. . . . There is nothing illogical in saying that the person so affiliated shall inherit all of which the affiliator died possessed, but that he does not and cannot stand in the same position as one who became a joint tenant at the instant of birth."

So far as I can see, it is only by reference to a special agreement that this conclusion can be successfully resisted. In the present case, even if the evidence is relied upon to the full, I do not think that more could be derived from it than that Ramayya agreed to take the 2nd defendant as illatom, subject to what were known or understood to be the incidents of that status. As was held by the Judicial Committee in *Narain Das v. Ramamji Dayal*²⁹ a promise to make a person one's heir may while giving rise to an expectation fall short of a contract.

Near the conclusion of the arguments, Mr. Raghava Rao for the appellants drew our attention to an unreported case of this Court, A.S. No. 206 of 1912, where the very question which now engages us arose. The learned Judges found the evidence available for the decision of the point so unsatisfactory that they called for a finding upon fresh evidence; and the District Judge, after examining numerous witnesses on each side, returned a finding that the father-in-law was not precluded from disposing of his property either inter vivos or by will, which was accepted by the Bench. The case came from the Kurnool District, and while it may not be permissible to import the conclusion, as partly a conclusion of fact, into this case, yet the procedure adopted is only one further illustration of the correct method of settling a disputed question of usage. It lay heavily upon the 2nd defendant, in my view, to show that by specific customary law overriding the general Hindu Law he had a preferential right to the rights of Ramayya's alienees, and in this respect too I think that his case fails.

A question that remains is whether the mill and godown, items 52 and 53, were owned jointly by the brothers or were the separate property of Sambayya.

It is impossible to suppose that Ramayya would have signified his assent to this arrangement if the mill had in fact been joint property and accordingly, in spite of one or two earlier indications to the contrary, I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in regarding this last piece of evidence as conclusive of Sambayya's separate ownership.

These are all the questions that have been argued in this appeal, and, agreeing with My Lord as to the answers which should be given to them, I agree also as to the practical consequences which should follow, and the orders which should be passed.

A decree directed that the plaintiff was to take possession of certain lands on payment of an amount to be ascertained as compensation for improvements effected by the defendants. The plaintiff put in his execution petition on 15th December, 1919. After the amount was ascertained in 1920, the payment not being made by the plaintiff, the execution was adjourned from time to time. In 1921 the plaintiff put in a petition for extension of time and was granted. But even then he did not pay and the execution petition was dismissed on the 16th of August, 1921. On the 6th of August, 1924, the plaintiff put in an execution petition for delivery of property on his paying the amount for compensation. Objection was taken that it was time-barred since more than three years had elapsed after the previous application for execution was put in.

Held, (i) that the application by the plaintiff asking for extension of time to make the payment was not a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act,

(ii) that, having regard to the way in which the decree was drawn, the fixing of the amounts by the learned District Judge was the final settling of the decree, and from that date the plaintiff was at liberty to make his payment and his right to apply within the meaning of Art. 181 accrued on that date, and

(iii) that section 48 of the Code only provides for the dismissal of execution petitions which come in after the period of 12 years. It has no application to execution petitions put in at an earlier date and does not purport to deal with them.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of North Arcot, dated 25th October, 1926 and made in E.P. No. 26 of 1924 in O.S. No. 10 of 1914.

Reilly, J.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. Reilly, J.—In this case a decree was made that the plaintiff should recover certain property from the defendants and that he should pay to certain of the defendants amounts for improvements. Grammatically those might be two separate provisions in the decree; but I think there is no doubt that the intention of the decree was that on the payment of those amounts the plaintiff should be entitled to recover possession. The learned District Judge adopted a rather curious course in making his decree in respect of those amounts to be paid for improvements. He fixed them provisionally. He provided in the decree that they were subject to revision on the report of a commissioner to be appointed by the Court. There was an appeal against the decree; but it was dismissed by this Court in December, 1918. On the 15th of December, 1919, the plaintiff put in an execution petition, in which he prayed for the appointment of a commissioner to fix the amounts to be paid for improvements and for possession of the property. Eventually the commissioner made his report, and the District Judge after considering it adopted the amounts suggested by the commissioner on the 12th of November, 1920 and ordered that the plaintiff should pay those amounts into Court by the 17th of December, 1920. The amounts were not paid by that date, and the execution petition was adjourned from time to time; and eventually on the 8th of August, 1921, the plaintiff put in an application that further time might be granted to him for payment, and time was granted to him up to the 16th of August, 1921. On that date the money had not been paid and the execution petition was dismissed. Then on the 6th of August, 1924, the plaintiff put in E.P. No. 26 of 1924 for delivery of the property on payment of the amounts fixed. Objection was taken by some of the defendants that that petition was time-barred, because it was put in more than three years after the previous execution petition. The plaintiff contended that the bar of limitation was saved by his application of the 8th of August, 1921, for the adjournment of the previous execution petition in order to allow him time to make the payments. The learned District Judge decided against that contention and dismissed the second execution petition. The present appeal is against that order of dismissal.

Mr. Rajah Aiyar, who appears for the plaintiff, has first contended that the application for extended time for payment, which was made on the 8th of August, 1921, was a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act. He has first referred us to *Sankara Nainar v. Thangamma*¹ in which it was held that an application made by a mortgagor for extension of the time allowed him for payment in a decree for redemption was a step-in-aid of execution. With very great respect I am not able to understand that decision. The application of the mortgagor in that case appears to me to have been an application to extend the time fixed in the original decree, that is an application to vary the original decree. There are provisions for making such applications in respect of redemption decrees. I do not myself understand how such an application could be treated as coming within the words "step-in-aid of execution" in Art. 182 of the Limitation Act. But that, as I have said, was a decision in a mortgage suit and so perhaps may be regarded as not exactly applicable to the present case. What appears to be of more use to the plaintiff in this case is the decision in Abdul Kader Rowther v. Krishnan Malaval Nair,² in which an application for time to get an encumbrance certificate for the purpose of a sale in execution was regarded as a step-in-aid of execution. Mr. Justice Ayling in *Masilamani Mudaliar v. Sethuswami Aiyar*³ expressed dissent from that view; and it has to be noticed that there is a decision directly in conflict with it in Ramaswami v. Veeranna.⁴ But Mr. Rajah Aiyar has brought to our notice two cases of the Bombay High Court, *Haridas Nanabhai v. Vithaldas Kisanadas*⁵ and Seshadasacharya v. Bhimacharya,⁶ in which applications for time for getting copies of decrees or other documents were held to be steps-in-aid of execution, and has also quoted Pitam Singh v. Tota Singh,⁷ Bhairon Prasad v. Aminia Begam,⁸ and Raghunath Prasad Singh v. Lachmi Narain Singh,⁹ which are to the same effect. But, even if to ask for time to get from other persons documents necessary for execution proceedings can properly be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution, in my opinion to defer, or to ask time for, doing something which concerns the decree-holder himself cannot properly be regarded as aiding execution. It is rather in my opinion postponing execution. To say that it is aiding execution to ask for extended time for payment, because the decree-holder, if he gets time, may be able to earn or borrow or otherwise raise money, appears to me unreasonable; and no decision has been brought to our notice in which an application for time for that purpose has been held to be a step-in-aid of execution. The payment of the money may well be a step-in-aid of execution; but the means and the opportunity of the decree-holder for raising it appear to me to be entirely unconnected with execution. In my opinion, therefore, the application of the plaintiff for further time to make the payment was not a step-in-aid of execution.

But Mr. Rajah Aiyar has contended alternatively that Art. 182 of the Act has no relation to this case, because in the decree no time was fixed for the payment of the amounts for improvements and they could not have been paid on the date of the decree as they had not then been determined. That appears to me to be a good argument, and, if it is so, then we must turn to Art. 181. If we do that, we find that the period of limitation is three years from the date when the right to apply accrues. Mr. Rajah Aiyar indeed goes further and has contended that, as no time was fixed for payment in the decree, the plaintiff might have paid at any time up to the end of the twelve years, and in support of that he has quoted *Rukmina Kuar v. Sheo Dat Rai*¹⁰ and Chhedi v. Lahu.¹¹ Neither of those cases appears to me to support that contention as each turned upon the interpretation of the particular words of the decree concerned. In the first case the decree-holder was at liberty to pay the amount at any time in a certain month in any year. In the second case, which was one of pre-emption, time was held to run from the date of the payment of the pre-emption amount within the period allowed in the decree. Neither of those cases, I think, can help the plaintiff. The appropriate article appears to me to be Art. 181, and we have only to determine the date when the right to apply accrued. In this case the accrual could not be a continuing thing; the right must have accrued on some particular date. Now, as I have said, the District Judge left the amounts to be paid for improvements unsettled in the decree, and under the decree they were to be fixed later on the report of a commissioner. A commissioner was appointed, and on his report the District Judge fixed the amounts on the 12th of November, 1920. In my opinion the effect of that was that those amounts were fixed upon that day and then became part of the decree. If there was anything irregular in the learned District Judge's procedure in arriving at his decree in that way, the plaintiff or any one else concerned had his right to appeal; but that is not a question to be decided in execution. The amounts were fixed on the 12th November, 1920, and the order then made was that they should be paid by the 17th of December, 1920. But, as I have mentioned, they were not paid, and that execution petition was eventually dismissed on the 16th of August, 1921. Mr. Rajah Aiyar contends that, even if we are to take the amounts as brought into the decree when the District Judge eventually fixed them in November, 1920, yet, because the execution petition was not disposed of until the 16th of August, 1921, his right to apply within the meaning of Art. 181 did not arise until the dismissal of the petition on the 16th of August, 1921. That appears to me an untenable contention. The suggestion is that the fixing of the amounts on the 12th of November, 1920, was merely an interlocutory matter, which did not really take effect until the execution petition was finally disposed of in August, 1921. But, if we look upon the fixing of the amounts as an interlocutory matter incidental to the execution petition, when that petition was dismissed, the order fixing the amounts went with it. I do not think that is the proper way to regard the matter. If we remember the way in which this decree was drawn, the fixing of the amounts by the learned District Judge on the 12th of November, 1920, appears to me to have been the final settling of the decree, and from that date the plaintiff was at liberty to make his payment and his right to apply within the meaning of Art. 181 accrued.

Mr. Rajah Aiyar has raised one more contention, viz., that even apart from the facts that no date for payment was fixed in the decree and payment could not be made on the date of the decree, Art. 181 of the Limitation Act does not apply to this case, but only S. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which gives the decree-holder 12 years from the date of his decree for his application. That contention depends upon the wording of Art. 181. The wording is "applications for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule or by S. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908." Mr. Rajah Aiyar suggests that S. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure does provide a period of limitation, 12 years for all decrees other than decrees for injunction, and that, if we exclude from Art. 181 all applications which are provided for in other articles of the Limitation Act and also decrees (other than decrees for injunction) which are provided for in S. 48 of the Code, there is very little left for Art. 181 and certainly not enough to cover this case. That is a curious result of what at first sight might be taken to be the grammatical meaning of Art. 181. If we look at Art. 182, we find that the wording on the face of it may present almost the same difficulty. It runs:

"For the execution of a decree or order not provided for by Art. 183 or by S. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908."

Literally, according to Mr. Rajah Aiyar's interpretation, that would mean that Art. 182 first excludes decrees included within Art. 183 and then excludes every decree which comes within S. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Then to what decrees other than decrees for injunction would Art. 182 apply? I think those conundrums arise only from a superficial view of the wording of Arts. 181 and 182. Those articles like the rest of Schedule I of the Limitation Act must be read with S. 3 of the Act. S. 3 of the Act provides that suits, appeals and applications made after the periods of limitation prescribed in the first schedule shall be dismissed, that is, these periods of limitation set out in the different articles of Schedule I of the Act are only to be taken in reference to the question of dismissal. Then we come to Art. 182. If we read it, as I think we ought to, "for the execution of a decree or order not provided for as regards dismissal by Art. 183 or by S. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure," there is no difficulty about it, because S. 48 of the Code only provides for the dismissal of execution petitions which come in after the period of 12 years. It has no application to execution petitions put in at an earlier date and does not purport to deal with them. And in the same way, if we read Art. 181, as "application for which no period of limitation for the purpose of dismissal is provided elsewhere in this schedule or by S. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure," there is no difficulty about it, and in fact the universally recognised interpretation of those articles is the right one, not the curious interpretation which Mr. Rajah Aiyar suggests from his view of the grammatical language of the articles, which is perhaps not very happy.

Mr. Rajah Aiyar's last contention, therefore, that neither Art. 181 nor Art. 182 applies to this case, but only S. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in my opinion also fails.

In my opinion this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

v.

Letchmanan
Chettiar.

The plaintiff presented a sale-deed for registration before the Sub-Registrar on the 28th September, 1926. That officer declined to register the document on the 18th October as the executant failed to appear before him to admit registration. The Sub-Registrar's order was despatched to the plaintiff and he received it on the 19th October. Thereupon he made an application under S. 73 (1) of the Registration Act to the District Registrar to establish his rights to have the document registered. The District Registrar held that the application was out of time and rejected it on the 16th December. This order was communicated to the plaintiff on the 20th December, 1926. Thereupon he filed a suit under S. 77 of the Act on the 19th January, 1927. It was contended by the defendants that the suit having been instituted more than thirty days from the date of the order of the District Registrar was barred by limitation.

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, time should be calculated only from the date when the order was communicated to the party, and consequently both the application to the Registrar under S. 73 (1) and the suit under S. 77 were not time-barred.

Distinction between cases where the order of refusal is passed in the presence of the party and cases where it is made in his absence and without notice pointed out.

Held, further, that an order dismissing a petition on the ground that it is time-barred is as much an "order of refusal" within the meaning of S. 77 (1) as an order dismissing the petition on the ground that it has no merits.

Appeal against the order, dated 2nd August, 1928, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga in Appeal Suit No. 7 of 1928, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Sivaganga in Original Suit No. 45 of 1927.

Venkatasubba
Rao, J.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The question we have to decide is, what is the meaning of the expression “making of the order” in Ss. 73 and 77 of the Indian Registration Act? The plaintiff on 28th September, 1926, presented, to the Sub-Registrar for registration, Ex. A, the sale deed executed in his favour by the 1st defendant. The latter, in spite of notices served upon him, failed to appear before the officer in question, and, on the 16th of October the plaintiff filed a statement requesting the Sub-Registrar to make an order refusing registration. After making an order to that effect on the 18th of October, the Sub-Registrar sent a post-card, Ex. B, to the plaintiff informing him of the order and it reached him on the 19th of October. The plaintiff on the 18th of November applied to the Registrar under S. 73 to establish his right to have the document registered. That section enacts that the application should be made within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal by the Sub-Registrar. If the terminus a quo is the date when the order was communicated to the plaintiff, the application is in time; but if the thirty days should be computed from the date of the order, the application is a day too late.

The District Registrar rejected the application on the ground that it was barred by time. He made his order on the 16th of December and forwarded it to the plaintiff on the 20th and it reached him on the 23rd. The plaintiff filed the suit from which the present appeal arises on the 19th of January, 1927. S. 77 enacts that the party desiring to impeach the order of the Registrar should file a suit within thirty days after the making of an order of refusal. If the starting point is the date of the District Registrar's order, the suit is out of time by four days; if it is the date when the order reached the plaintiff, the suit is well within time. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that it is time-barred. The lower appellate Court took the opposite view and remanded the suit for further trial.

I shall now notice briefly the various sections that have a bearing on the point to be considered. S. 35 provides that if any person by whom the document purports to be executed denies its execution, the Sub-Registrar shall refuse to register the document. It is conceded that failure of the executant to appear amounts to a denial of execution by him. See *Sivarama Pattar Kariakar v. Krishna Aiyar*¹ and Chhotey Lal v. Collector of Moradabad.²

1. (1914) 26 M.L.J. 307.

S. 71 says that when the Sub-Registrar so refuses, he shall make an order of refusal and record his reasons for such order in his Book No. 2 and endorse the words "Registration refused" on the document.

S. 73 (1) enacts that when a Sub-Registrar has refused to register a document on the ground that the alleged executant denies its execution, the person against whom the order is made, may, within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal, apply to the Registrar in order to establish his right to have the document registered.

S. 76 says that every Registrar refusing to direct the registration of a document shall make an order of refusal.

Lastly, S. 77 enacts that any person claiming under such a document may, within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal, institute a suit for a decree directing the document to be registered.

I have now referred to the relevant sections of the Act and shall proceed to consider the points raised. Apart from authority, it seems to me that there can be no valid order unless it is made after notice to the parties affected by it; or it is communicated to them in the absence of such notice. To take a contrary view seems opposed to reason and principle. The learned Advocate-General for the defence contends that we must have regard to the express wording of the Act and that the words "making of the order" are too distinct to admit of any liberal construction. The answer is that no two constructions are possible, the meaning I have suggested being the only reasonable construction of the words. The very word "order" by necessary implication means, in law, that the party affected has had reasonable notice of it. Not a single case in India has been brought to our notice which takes a different view. On the contrary, every decision on the point seems to recognise the principle I have stated. That any particular ruling proceeds on the special provisions of any Act makes, in my opinion, no difference. *Abdul Ali v. Mirja Khan*³ is a case under S. 77 of the Indian Registration Act and is directly in point. The same rule has been laid down without equivocation in Annammalai v. Cloete,⁴ Seshamma v. Sankara,⁵ *The Secretary of State for India v. Gopiseti Narayanaswami Naidu*⁶ and Mahipat v. Lakshman.⁷ The essence of the rule is that the decision should be passed in such circumstances that the parties should have reasonable notice of it. If when a petition is presented or a case is heard, the order is then and there made in the presence of the parties, no further question arises; if the making of the order is postponed, the parties should be given notice of the adjourned date, so that they may be present and hear the decision when passed. If, in these two cases, the party owing to his own fault, does not become aware of the order, it nevertheless takes effect at once. If an order is made without previous notice, it does not become operative until it is communicated. These, in my opinion, are rules which are in conformity with justice and common sense.

In the present case, the allegation in the plaint has not been challenged, that the Sub-Registrar neither fixed a date for pronouncing his order, nor gave notice of any day having been fixed. The same remark applies to the order made by the District Registrar.

The learned Advocate-General for the defence relies upon certain English cases; but, if properly examined, they support my view rather than establish the contrary. The first case relied on is The King v. The Justices of Staffordshire.⁸ Lord Ellenborough in that case no doubt says:

"It is, however, a case of great grievance and hardship where the interests of parties are thus invaded by an order made behind their backs; and may be a good ground to apply to Parliament for a revision of the clause of appeal; but we cannot remedy the abuse."

These observations are apt to mislead if regard be not had to the facts of the case. Under the statute, any resident of the locality aggrieved by the order had a right of appeal. The party that preferred the appeal was a member of the public and was not a person directly concerned with the proceeding. It was such a party that urged that he had no notice of the order. In refuting his contention, Le Blanc, J., points out that, if the right of appeal were to depend, in the case of a public highway in which all the King's subjects are interested, on personal notice of the order in respect of each subject, there never would be an end of the time for appealing. This case, therefore, does not support the view urged for the defence.

The next case relied on by the learned Advocate-General is The Queen v. The Justices of Derbyshire.⁹ This does not help him, as there is nothing in it to show that the surveyor referred to in the judgment did not have an opportunity of knowing the order, when it was made.

8. (1802) 3 East 151: 102 E.R. 554.

9. (1845) 7 Q.B. 193: 115 E.R. 461.

*The Queen v. Barnet Sanitary Authority*¹⁰ is a very instructive case on the point. Under the Act, a rate as well as an order may form a subject of appeal. In the former case, the time counts from the date when the party has notice of the rate; in the latter, from the date when the order itself is made. Why is this distinction made? Blackburn, J., points out, that a person may be rated behind his back, but prima facie, an order is not so made. Mellor, J., even more pointedly observes:

"The local authority had, under the Act, an opportunity to show cause and unless they chose not to appear, the order could not have been made in their absence."

I may lastly refer to Ex parte Johnson,¹¹ which recognises the anomaly involved in the position, that a party is bound by an order which he had no reasonable opportunity of knowing. It is, therefore, clear that the view contended for by the learned Advocate-General is opposed to the English and the Indian cases alike.

A feeble attempt has next been made to show that the order of the District Registrar rejecting the application as time-barred is not an order of refusal under S. 77. This contention is clearly opposed to section 76, which makes no distinction between one kind of refusal and another. Whatever be the ground of his decision, the order is one of refusal. What significance can possibly attach to the fact that the ground of refusal was that the application was barred? No case has held that rejection of an application on the ground that it is barred is not an order of refusal. Before a party can come to a Civil Court, he is bound as a condition precedent, to apply to the Registrar within a stated time. If the Registrar rightly holds that the application made to him is barred, it is obvious that the condition precedent has not been fulfilled. The civil suit in such a case is clearly incompetent. This, and no more, is the effect of the cases to which we have been referred, namely, Kunhimmu v. Viyyathamma,¹² Edun v. Mahomed Siddik,¹³ *Gangadhara v. Sambasiva*¹⁴ and Udit Upadhia v. Imam Bandi Bibi.¹⁵

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with the costs of the first respondent.

Madhavan
Nair, J.

Madhavan Nair, J.—This Civil Miscellaneous Appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act for getting a decree directing the sale deed, dated 4th January, 1926, executed to him by the 1st defendant, to be registered in the Sub-Registrar's office at Sivaganga.

The facts are briefly these: The plaintiff presented the sale deed for registration before the Sub-Registrar of Sivaganga on the 28th September, 1926. That officer declined to register the document on the 18th October, 1926, as the executant failed to appear before him to admit registration. It is conceded that his failure to appear amounts to "denial of execution" under S. 35 of the Registration Act; see Radhakissen Rowra Dakna v. Chooneeloll Dutt,¹⁶ Sivarama Pattar Kariakar v. Krishna Aiyar,¹ Ezekiel v. Amada,¹⁷ and Chhotey Lal v. Collector of Moradabad.² The Sub-Registrar's order was despatched to the plaintiff and he received it on the 19th October, 1926. Thereupon he made an application under S. 73 (1) of the Indian Registration Act to the District Registrar at Ramnad to establish his rights to have the document registered. Applications to the Registrar under this section should be made "within 30 days after the making of the order of refusal" by the Sub-Registrar. The plaintiff's application was presented on 18th November, 1926, i.e., after 30 days from the date of the order of refusal by the Sub-Registrar on 18th October, 1926, but within 30 days after the order was communicated to him. The District Registrar held that the application was out of time and rejected it on 16th December, 1926. This order was communicated to the plaintiff on 20th December, 1926. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted this suit under S. 77 of the Registration Act. A suit under this section should be instituted "within 30 days after the making of the order of refusal" by the District Registrar. The plaint in the present suit was filed on 19th January, 1927, i.e., after 30 days from the date of the order of the District Registrar but within 30 days after it was communicated to him.

It was contended by the defendants (1) that the suit having been presented more than 30 days from the date of the order of the District Registrar rejecting the application, was barred by limitation, and (2) that the plaintiff has no right to institute the suit under S. 77 of the Registration Act, as it was not brought on any "order of refusal" by the Registrar, as the application to the Registrar was thrown out as time-barred. The District Munsif upheld these contentions and dismissed the suit without going into the merits. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge overruled them and remanded the suit to the Lower Court for disposal. This appeal is by the defendants against the order of remand and the above contentions urged by them before the Lower Courts are again pressed before us with great force by the learned Advocate-General.

Swaminathan

Letchmanan
Chettiar.Madhavan
Nair, J.

The provisions of sections 73 (1) and 77 (1) of the Indian Registration Act are as follows:—

Section 73 (1).—"When a Sub-Registrar has refused to register a document on the ground that any person by whom it purports to be executed, or his representative or assign, denies its execution, any person claiming under such document, or his representative, assign or agent authorised as aforesaid, may, within 30 days after the making of the order of refusal, apply to the Registrar to whom such Sub-Registrar is subordinate in order to establish his right to have the document registered."

Section 77 (1).—"Where the Registrar refuses to order the document to be registered, under S. 72 or S. 76, any person claiming under such document, or his representative, assign or agent, may, within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal, institute in the Civil Court, within the local limits of whose original jurisdiction is situate the office in which the document is sought to be registered, a suit for a decree directing the document to be registered in such office if it be duly presented for registration within thirty days after the passing of such decree."

The first question for consideration is whether the suit is time-barred under S. 77 of the Registration Act. As already observed, a suit under this section will be within time, if it is instituted "within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal" by the District Registrar." It is argued, on one side, that the expression "making the order of refusal" in S. 77 of the Registration Act means only recording the order of refusal in writing, and that the time should be calculated from the date of the "order of refusal," in which case the plaintiff's suit will be out of time; while, on the other side, it is contended that the expression means not merely the recording of the order in writing by the Registrar but communicating it to the party concerned, and that, in this case, time should be calculated from the date when the order was communicated to the plaintiff, in which case, his suit will be in time. The answer to the question must depend on the special circumstances of each case. If the order of refusal is pronounced in the presence of the parties immediately after inquiry by the Registrar, so that the person concerned knows that his request has been refused, then there can be no doubt that time should be calculated from the date of the order; but if the order was not so pronounced, and the person concerned does not know that his request has been refused, then it would not be just to hold that time should be calculated from the date of the order. How is an aggrieved party to take any action unless he knows that an adverse order has been passed by the Registrar? If the construction contended for by the appellant is accepted, then it is clear that in cases of this kind the party aggrieved may be altogether deprived of the privilege of taking proceedings under S. 73 (1) and S. 77 of the Act. It is not contended that the Sub-Registrar and the Registrar pronounced their orders in the presence of the parties after the inquiry was over, or that those officers fixed any day for pronouncing their orders, or gave notice fixing any date for pronouncing them. In these circumstances, it seems to me that, in this case, time should be calculated only from the date when the order was communicated to the parties. An order to be valid under S. 77 of the Act should be passed in the presence of the parties; or after notice to them; if no notice has been given, then it should be communicated to them; in other words, the order to be a valid one must be brought to the knowledge of the party against whom it has been passed. It is conceded that there is no provision in the Act for communicating the orders of the Registrar and Sub-Registrar to the parties concerned. It seems to me, therefore, that the intention of the Act is that the officers should pronounce their orders in the presence of the parties after the inquiry is over, or should do so, after giving the parties notice.

This very question arose for decision in the Bombay High Court in *Abdul Ali v. Mirja Khan*³ and it was held in that case by Chandavarkar and Ashton, JJ., that the expression "making an order" in S. 77 of the Indian Registration Act (III of 1877) means not merely the recording of the order of refusal in writing but communicating it to the party concerned so as to bind him by it. The Punjab Chief Court also decided the question in the same way following *Abdul Ali v. Mirja Khan*³; see Kirpa Ram v. Asa Singh.¹⁸ In our own Court, this particular point has not been considered in any case under the Registration Act, but attention may be drawn to cases under the Madras Survey and Boundaries Acts (XXVIII of 1860 and IV of 1897), which contain an analogous provision limiting the period allowed for the institution of suits in which it has been held that time does not begin to run until the date on which the decision sought to be set aside is communicated to the parties. Madhavan
Nair, J.

"A decision cannot properly be said to be passed until it is in some way pronounced or published under such circumstances that the parties affected by it have a reasonable opportunity of knowing what it contains. Till then, though it may be written out, signed and dated, it is nothing but the decision which the officer intends to pass. It is not passed so long as it is open to him to tear up what he has written and write something else."

In support of his contention that the time for the suit should be computed from the date of the order, the learned Advocate-General mainly relied on three English cases, The King v. The Justices of Staffordshire,⁸ *The Queen v. The Justices of Derbyshire*⁹ and The Queen v. Barnet Sanitary Authority.¹⁰ These cases appear at first sight to support his contention, but, when read in the light of their circumstances, these will not be found to be inconsistent with the view which I have expressed above.

In *The King v. The Justices of Staffordshire*⁸ an order was made under 13 Geo. III, c. 78 for turning part of a highway. By section 29 of that statute, an appeal is given to "the party grieved by any such order or proceeding at the next Quarter Sessions after such order made or proceeding had, etc." It was held that the appeal must be made to the Quarter Sessions next after the order made, without reference to any notice received by such appellant. The reason why the learned Judges arrived at this conclusion appears in the following observations of Le Blanc, J.:—

"In the case of a public highway, all the King's subjects may be said to be interested, and to have a right to appeal against an order for stopping it up: and therefore if the right of appeal were to depend on personal notice of the order to the appellant, there never would be an end of the time for appealing."

In commenting on this case in The Queen v. The Justices of Derbyshire,⁹ which will be referred to presently, the learned Judges refer to these remarks of Le Blanc, J. From this we may infer that the literal construction, contended for, was put upon the words of the statute, as there would be no end of appealing, if such a construction was not adopted. observations, which give the reason for this decision, I do not think the case can be understood as laying down any general rule of interpretation.

In *The Queen v. The Justices of Derbyshire*⁹ an order was made, under 4 and 5 Vic., c. 59, requiring a surveyor of highways to pay money out of the highway rates in aid of turnpike funds. By S. 3 of that statute a right of appeal is given to the person aggrieved "within six days after such order shall be made or given." It was held that the time for appeal runs from the making of the order, not from the service. It may be gathered, from the following remarks of Lord Denman, C.J., appearing in the judgment that, in cases under the statute, the parties interested would have opportunities to know about the order at the time when it is made. The learned Judge says:

"We may add that the Act provides some means for giving notoriety to the proceeding at the Petty Sessions, and even notice to the parties directly interested in opposing such an order."

It would appear (see Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, 7th Ed., page 7) that the order appealed against in this case must have been verbally pronounced by the Justices. If so, we may presume that it was pronounced either in their presence or after notice to them.

In *The Queen v. Barnet Sanitary Authority*¹⁰ it is clear from the report of the arguments that the order was made in the presence of the person affected by it. It also appears from the judgments of Blackburn, J. and Mellor, J., that the persons affected by the "order" or "conviction" in such cases always have opportunity of being present at the time when the orders affecting them are made. Blackburn, J., observes thus:

"Where the appeal is against a rate, the 'cause of appeal' would prima facie be upon notice of the rate, but where the appeal is from any order or conviction, one would certainly, prima facie, say that as soon as the order is made the party has a right to appeal, and is not bound to wait until the order is served."

The point is more explicitly stated by Mellor, J., who observes thus:

"Here the local authority had, under the Act, an opportunity to show cause, and unless, they chose not to appear, the order could not have been made in their absence. . . . The cause of appeal begins from the time the order is pronounced. The order is not required to be in writing, it may be a verbal and informal decision, and the party convicted either does know or ought to know the grounds on which the Justices have proceeded."

In this view, this case also does not support the appellant's contention. Attention may also be drawn to the decision in

9. (1845) 7 Q.B. 193: 115 E.R. 461.

Ex parte Johnson,¹¹ where it was held that under 7 and 8 Vic. c. 101, section 4, which enacts that "within 24 hours after the adjudication and making of any order" in bastardy, the putative father may give notice of appeal to the Quarter Sessions, that the time must be counted from the oral adjudication of the Justices in Petty Sessions and not from the time when the formal order is signed by them. On the whole, I do not think that these English cases compel us to hold that the time for instituting the suit under S. 77 of the Registration Act must always be calculated from the date of the order of the refusal made by the Registrar, irrespective of the question whether the party concerned had notice of the order or not.

It follows from what I have said that, since the plaint in this case was filed within 30 days after the order of refusal by the Registrar was communicated to him, this suit under S. 77 of the Registration Act is not time-barred. For the same reasons, I must hold that the application to the Registrar under S. 73 (1) of the Act was also made in time and that the rejection of it by the Registrar as time-barred was wrong.

The next argument of the appellant is that the suit is not maintainable, as the Registrar rejected the plaintiff's petition on the ground that it is time-barred without going into the merits. It is argued that such orders are not "orders of refusal" as contemplated by the section. I do not think that this contention is well founded. No authority has been cited in support of it. An order dismissing a petition on the ground that it is time-barred is as much an "order of refusal" within the meaning of the section as an order dismissing the petition on the ground that it has no merits. The Act does not make any distinction between those two kinds of orders. One of the conditions that should be complied with by a person instituting a suit under S. 77 of the Registration Act is that he must show that he applied to the Registrar within the time allowed by law. If the Registrar rightly rejects the petition on the ground that it is time-barred, then it means, that the plaintiff did not comply with this condition precedent to the maintenance of the suit under the section; and a suit under S. 77 of the Act will not therefore lie. This was all that was decided by the Allahabad High Court in Udit Upadhia v. Imam Bandi Bibi,¹⁵ where it was held that the Registrar's order in that case rejecting the application as filed beyond time could not be considered as a "refusal to register" within the meaning of the Act. The other decisions referred to by the appellant, Kunhimmu v. Viyyathamma,¹² *Edun v. Mahomed Siddik*¹³ and Gangadhara v. Sambasiva,¹⁴ do not advance his case any further. In this case, I have shown that the Registrar's order rejecting the application made by the plaintiff as time-barred is wrong, i.e., that the application was made in time; in other words, that the plaintiff has complied with the condition precedent to the maintenance of the suit. It, therefore, follows that the plaintiff's suit is maintainable.

In the case of wills executed outside Madras, probate need be taken of them only in so far as they relate to immoveable properties within Madras. A suit for a pecuniary legacy, unconnected with any such property that may be dealt with by the will, is maintainable without probate.

An executor who has entered upon his duties as such is estopped from pleading immunity from his obligation as executor, on the ground no probate has been taken out by him.

Under section 307 of the Succession Act, an executor has, no doubt, the power to dispose of the property for all purposes binding upon the estate and even where the executor deals with the property for purposes not strictly binding on the estate, the alienations cannot be questioned so as to defeat the bona fide alienee who had no notice of the fact that the executor was using his powers for purposes not binding upon the estate. But where the alienation is made for purposes not binding on the estate and the alienee has notice of the fact, the principle does not apply.

JUDGMENTS. Ramesam, J.—These appeals arise out of a suit, C.S. No. 300 of 1927, filed by one Namberumal Chettiar against four defendants. The 1st defendant is Veeraperumal Pillai, nephew and executor of the estate of P. Appasami Pillai, who died on the 4th of October, 1921. The 2nd defendant is Kanthammal, the illegitimate daughter of Appasami Pillai. The 3rd defendant is the Official Assignee in whom the property of the 1st defendant is now vested on account of insolvency. The 4th defendant is Mr. S. G. Satagopa Mudaliar, an Advocate of this Court, who was in 1923 the Receiver of another estate which was the subject of a litigation and who in the capacity of such Receiver advanced a loan of 2½ lakhs to the 1st defendant-executor on a deed of mortgage, dated the 10th of April, 1923; and he is impleaded in this suit as such mortgagee.

The suit was for the administration of the estate of the deceased Appasami Pillai and for the recovery of the balance of legacy of Rs. 15,000 with further interest and of a sum of Rs. 15,000 due on a promissory note with further interest. The suit came on for trial before Beasley, J., as he then was, and he dismissed the suit for the legacy but gave a decree for the balance of the money due on the promissory note after crediting the admitted payments towards that note, the decree being executable against the assets, if any, of the deceased Appasami Pillai now in the hands of the 1st defendant personally. The plaintiff files these two appeals separately, one in respect of the legacy and the other in respect of the promissory note.

The further facts necessary for understanding the points arising in these appeals are as follows:—

Appasami Pillai was for nearly thirty years before his death keeping one Aparanji Ammal and she was living with him in his house as his wife. He had by her a daughter Kanthammal, 2nd defendant, already mentioned. On the 11th of August, 1915, he executed a will, Ex. A-5, under which he devised two of his properties (items 9 and 10) to his elder brother's son-in-law, Srinivasa Pillai, and all the rest of his properties to his elder brother's son, Veeraperumal Pillai, 1st defendant in the suit, whom he named as executor to the will. About a year before his death, that is on the 19th of October, 1920, he addressed to his nephew (1st defendant) a letter Ex. A-6 containing testamentary dispositions. This letter shows that it was written at his residence known as "Winning Post" near the Guindy Race Course, Guindy, outside the Original Side Jurisdiction of Madras. In this letter he says:

"If I should depart this life you will pay to my beloved second wife M. Aparanji Ammal the sum of Rs. 15,000 and you will take the whole of my property both moveable and immoveable I am possessed of."

Three days afterwards, that is, on the 22nd of October, he and the executor, that is, the 1st defendant, executed a promissory note, Ex. A-1, for Rs. 15,000 in favour of the said Aparanji Ammal with interest at 4 per cent. per annum. He died, as I have already mentioned, in October, 1921. In December, 1921, the executor applied for a probate of the will, Ex. A-5 and of the letter; Ex. A-6. This application was numbered as T.O.S. No. 1 of 1922, the affidavit of assets filed with it, dated the 1st of December, 1921, being Ex. A-4. A brother of the 1st defendant, named Sethurama Pillai, filed a caveat; but probate was ordered. There was an appeal by Sethurama Pillai (O.S.A. No. 67 of 1922). The matter was compromised. The 1st defendant promised to pay Rs. 50,000 to Sethurama Pillai and the latter withdrew his appeal. Soon after the withdrawal, the 1st defendant applied for a loan of 2½ lakhs to the 4th defendant. Ex. A-3 is the deed of mortgage for the amount. It recites that the purpose of the mortgage was to pay off the following sums of money:—(1) a sum of Rs. 29,015 due to Shah Agarchand Manmal on two mortgage deeds of 1921 executed by the testator and renewed by the 1st defendant after his death, (2) a sum of Rs. 41,600 due to the Secretary of the Sri Madhava Mohanji Temple on a mortgage executed by the testator, (3) a sum of Rs. 15,000 directed to be paid to Aparanji Ammal under the will, (4) the cost of taking out probate, etc., estimated at Rs. 15,000, (5) a sum of Rs. 38,773-14-6 due from the 1st defendant to Messrs. Gillanders Arbuthnot & Co. in connection with his timber trade and (6) a sum of Rs. 1,05,000 due to Kannailal on a deed of mortgage, dated the 2nd of March, 1922, executed by the 1st defendant for himself and on behalf of his minor son. The total of these items come to about Rs. 2,44,000. It will be seen from the above description that two of the items amounting to about Rs. 1,43,000 representing the private and personal debts of the mortgagors, the 1st defendant and his son, and the small balance of Rs. 6,000 was also utilised by them personally. The other four items amounting to Rs. 1,00,615 represent debts for purposes binding on the estate. It will be observed that the 1st defendant in executing the above mortgage apparently thought that the will, Ex. A-5, and the letter, Ex. A-6, both refer to the same sum of Rs. 15,000 and that he has only to pay a sum of Rs. 15,000 to Aparanji Ammal. It is true that he does not say so in so many words. But as he does not provide for the payment of Rs. 30,000 to Aparanji Ammal, that must have been his understanding of the transactions. The probate was never taken. Some years afterwards the 1st defendant became an insolvent. Immediately after the mortgage, Rs. 2,000 was paid to Aparanji Ammal. Five months afterwards another Rs. 1,000 was paid. In September, 1924, a sum of Rs. 1,000 was paid. In September, 1924, a sum of Rs. 600 and in June, 1925, another Rs. 400 was paid to Kanthammal, daughter of Aparanji Ammal, who must have died some time before September, 1924. Kanthammal, who succeeded to Aparanji Ammal's right to the legacy and in the promissory note as her daughter assigned her right to the present plaintiff, Namberumal Chetti. He filed the suit on the 30th of May, 1927. The learned Trial Judge held that, as no probate was actually taken of Exhibits A-5 and A-6, the plaintiff's claim to the legacy fails, that the consideration for the promissory note was 30 years' past cohabitation of Aparanji Ammal with the testator, it was not illegal and bad consideration as it was for past immoral services. He, therefore, gave judgment for the balance due on the promissory note.

One of the questions argued in appeal is whether Ex. A-6 should be called a will or codicil and whether the plaintiff's claim cannot be established unless a probate is taken out for it. As will be seen, the first part of this question is really immaterial. It matters little whether you call Ex. A-6 an independent will or codicil. Seeing that, between Exs. A-5 and A-6, items 9 and 10 originally mentioned in Ex. A-5 have ceased to be the testator's property, there could be no legacy of these items to Srinivasa Pillai; and as the disposition of the rest of the property to the 1st defendant was repeated in Ex. A-6, it seems to me that Ex. A-6 is a complete and independent will by itself. The only need to refer to Ex. A-5 is to find out the executor of the deceased's estate. Ex. A-6 may, therefore, be regarded as a complete will and not supplemental to some other will which it adds to or modified. But it is unnecessary to pursue this question any further. As to which or any of these two documents requires a probate, the law is contained in sections 57 and 213 of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) as amended by Act XXXVII of 1926. The provisions of Part VI, that is from section 57 to section 191, apply (1) to all Hindu wills executed in Bengal and within the local limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Courts of Judicature at Madras and Bombay, and (2) to all wills and codicils made outside these territories and limits so far as relates to immoveable property situate within those territories or limits. When we remember that section 57 is a re-enactment of the Hindu Wills Act of 1870, section 57 (1) shows that, in the case of wills executed outside Madras, probate must be taken of them only in so far as they relate to immoveable properties situated within Madras. Ex. A-6 was written at Guindy, that is outside Madras; and, though part of it relates to immoveable property situated within Madras, so far as the legacy of Rs. 15,000 given to Aparanji Ammal is concerned, that disposition does not relate to immoveable property within Madras. To that extent Part VI of the Succession Act does not apply to the will and therefore no probate has to be taken. Clause (2) of section 57 shows that, even in respect of such Hindu wills, the provisions of section 63 apply showing that in the case of wills executed outside Madras, some provisions of Part VI do not apply. If the contention of Mr. Radhakrishnayya for the respondents that probate must be taken for the whole of Ex. A-6 is correct, sub-clause (b) would have been worded "to all wills and codicils made outside those territories containing any disposition of immoveable property situated within those limits". The words "so far as" are limiting words, cutting down what is indefinite to definite limits.

I am of opinion that in so far as the plaintiff has got to establish a right to the legacy of Rs. 15,000 no probate need be taken of Ex. A-6 whether we regard it as a separate or independent will or whether it be regarded as a codicil supplementary to the will, Ex. A-5. In either case, to the extent that the plaintiff's right to the legacy is sought to be established no probate need be taken of it. From the point of view of the executor, what is now sought is not to establish any right of his but only to fix an obligation on him. Vide Williams on Executors, page 219. It must be remembered that the 1st defendant actually entered upon his duties as executor, applied for probate and got an order in his favour but for some reasons did not actually take out a probate. He would now be estopped from saying that he is not under any obligation as executor, vide Munisami Chetti v. Maruthammal,¹ which applies the principle of Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkata Varada Aiyangar.²

The next question is whether the plaintiff has any rights over the estate of the deceased Appaswami Pillai. On this part of the case the contesting defendant is the 4th defendant. He has got a mortgage for 2½ lakhs and he claims priority in respect of his mortgage over the plaintiff's legacy. It must be observed that the mortgage was, as already pointed out, so far as the items binding on the estate and amounting to Rs. 1,00,615 are concerned, is a mortgage properly executed by the executor and binding on the estate and, therefore, binding on the legatees also. The question is, whether, in respect of the other items, the mortgage has priority over the plaintiff's legacy. It is true that under section 307 of the Act an executor has power to dispose of the property for all purposes binding upon the estate and, even where the executor deals with the property for purposes not strictly binding on the estate, the alienations such as a sale or mortgage cannot be questioned so as to defeat the bona fide alienee who had no notice of the fact that the executor was using his powers for purposes not binding upon the estate. This principle has been well established and it is clear from Lord Thurlow's oft-quoted dictum. Vide Williams on Executors, pages 697 and 698; but where the alienation is made for purposes not binding on the estate and the alienee has notice of the fact, the principle does not apply. See footnote (n) in Williams on Executors, page 697 and Bank of Bombay v. Suleiman Somji.³ In this last case their Lordships of the Privy Council after distinguishing the English cases of *Graham v. Drummond*⁴ and *Taylor v. Hawkins*⁵ held that an alienee with notice of the fact that the executor was using it for his own purposes will not be protected. We think that the decision applies to the present case. The decision in *Henson In re; Chester v. Henson*⁶ does not help the respondent. That decision only shows that the purchaser or mortgagee is not bound to see to the application of the mortgage money and that the executor need not expressly describe himself as executor in the instrument. This is perfectly true; but in this case the purpose for which the document was executed was partly not for the benefit of the estate and on the face of the document this was known to the mortgagee. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount of the legacy from the estate subject to the mortgage, Ex. A-3, to the extent of Rs. 1,00,615 and its interest and but without being subject to the mortgage for the rest of the amount.

The next question that arises is whether the plaintiff can recover any amount on the promissory note. It is said that the promissory note is for an immoral consideration. On this point I am inclined to agree with the view of the Trial Judge and not with the Bombay cases such as *Husseinali v. Dinbai*⁷ and *Kisondas v. Dhondur*⁸ relied on by Mr. Radhakrishnayya. In the English Law past immoral consideration is good consideration if the document is under seal not because of the immorality but because in English Law past consideration is no consideration. In Indian Law past consideration is good consideration and as there is nothing immoral in remunerating a woman who has rendered services for such past services, the consideration is good. Vide Lakshminarayana Reddiar v. Subhadri Ammal,⁹ per Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., with whose judgment I agree. I am unable to agree with the judgment of Sundaram Chetty, J., in Ganapati Chetti v. Sundararaja Pillai.¹⁰ Whether such consideration can act as a motive both for legacy and for any number of promises may perhaps be doubted; but it is unnecessary to pursue this matter further as I am of opinion that in the circumstances of this case that the promissory note was not intended to give an additional sum of Rs. 15,000 besides the sum of Rs. 15,000 given by the letter, Ex. A-6, Mr. Varadachariar, the learned Advocate for the appellant, relied on Horlock v. Wiggins; Wiggins v. Horlock.¹¹ In that case the first deed was recited in the will as the argument of Mr. Stokes shows. The facts of the present case are different. It looks as if the promissory note was executed by the testator with a view to make the executor also a consenting party so that he might not afterwards throw obstacles in the way of the legatee. The whole evidence shows that the 1st defendant never borrowed from Aparanji Ammal. Paragraph 3 of the written statement raised the question that the promissory note has no consideration and issue 2, though it is clumsily framed, relates to this point. It cannot be said, therefore, that the question was not raised. The evidence is very clear and in the circumstances I think that the promissory note was not intended to give an additional sum of Rs. 15,000. It is true that sections 177 and 179 do not apply to this will, but the principles of these sections as embodying the general equitable principles may apply. Vide Hassonally Moledina v. Popatlal Parbhudas.¹² But even if so, we have nothing to do with section 177 in this case, nor can section 179 help the appellant for nobody suggests that the bequest adeemed. It is conceded that the legacy stands. The only question is whether the promissory note is valid as for another additional sum. On the facts we find that it has no consideration and from the surrounding circumstances we think it refers to the same sum as the legacy. So that, even if sections 177 and 179 are actually applicable they do not help the appellant. The result is that in modification of the decree the plaintiff's suit so far as it relates to the promissory note and Appeal No. 125 of 1928 are dismissed as against 4th defendant with his proportionate costs but the decree as against the 1st defendant and Official Assignee will stand as it has not been appealed against. In Appeal No. 66 of 1928 a decree will be given as indicated above with interest at 6 per cent. which is the interest provided for in the Act. The plaintiff will have proportionate costs in the suit and in appeal on the amount decreed.

In A.S. No. 66 there will be a preliminary decree for administration on the above lines and this Court will as far as possible try to satisfy the claim of plaintiff out of properties not included in the mortgage of the 4th defendant.

Cornish, J.

Cornish, J.—There can, I think, be no doubt that the letter, Ex. A-6, is a testamentary instrument. It says:

“My dear Doray, My present state of health seems to me uncertain, if I should depart this life you will pay to my beloved second wife M. Aparanji Ammal the sum of Rupees Fifteen thousand and you will take the whole of my property both moveable and immoveable I am possessed of.”

The words are informal but they clearly express the writer's wishes as to the disposal of his property on the event of his death. It has been contended that as the testator gives the whole of his property to defendant 1, the “Doray” to whom Ex. A-6 is written, the direction with regard to the payment of Rs. 15,000 to Aparanji Ammal cannot be read as giving her a legacy. But if the testator's intention was to make a bequest to her, as I think it was, it cannot signify whether the testator instead of giving the bequest of Rs. 15,000 directly to Aparanji directed the defendant, his executor, to pay this sum to her. The question, then, is whether Ex. A-6 is to be regarded as a codicil to the earlier will, Ex. A-5, which the testator made in Madras on the 11th August, 1915, and of which defendant 1 was the executor and residuary legatee. “Codicil” is defined by section 2 (b), Indian Succession Act, as meaning “an instrument made in relation to a will and explaining, altering or adding to its disposition and is considered as forming an additional part of the will.” Ex. A-6 does not in terms refer to the will, but is addressed to the person who was appointed executor of the will; it directs him to pay a legacy which had not been given by the will, and it confirms the residuary bequest made to him by the will. It revokes nothing in the will. The legacy given to M. Srinivasa Pillai by the earlier will appears to have been adeemed; at all events, the properties bequeathed to Srinivasa Pillai no longer formed part of the testator's estate at the time of his death. In these circumstances I am of opinion that Ex. A-6 must be regarded as “an instrument made in relation to a will and adding to its disposition” and consequently a codicil to the will. It is also to be noted that the testator's signature to the document is attested by two witnesses in conformity with the requirements of a valid will governed by the Indian Succession Act.

The codicil was made at Guindy, outside the limits of the High Court's Original Civil Jurisdiction and, in addition to the pecuniary legacy given to Aparanji, it confirmed by repetition the residuary bequest given to defendant 1 by the will comprising immoveable property within the High Court limits.

The executor (defendant 1) applied for probate of the will and codicil, and a grant was ordered, but no grant has been issued because the executor has not paid the appropriate Court-fee for the grant. Does the failure to produce probate prevent the plaintiff, who derives his title to the legacy as administrator of Aparanji's estate, from establishing his claim to the legacy?

Section 213 (1), Indian Succession Act, 1925, says:

"No right as executor or legatee can be established in any Court of Justice, unless a Court of competent jurisdiction in British India has granted probate of the will under which the right is claimed."

But sub-section (2) provides:

"This section shall not apply in the case of wills made by . . . any Hindu . . . where such wills are of the class specified in section 57."

Now, the class of the will specified in section 57 (1) comprises (a) all wills and codicils made by any Hindu on or after September 1, 1870, within the local limits of the High Court's Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, and (b) all such wills and codicils made outside those limits "so far as relates to immoveable property situate within those limits." The classification is taken from the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) now repealed. This Act applied to these classes of wills and codicils certain sections of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, corresponding to the sections set out in Schedule III of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, which have now been made applicable to such wills and codicils. The purpose, as explained in the preamble to the Hindu Wills Act, was "to provide rules for the execution, attestation, revocation, revival, interpretation and probate of the wills of Hindus within the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and in the towns of Madras and Bombay." By a later amendment of Act XXI of 1870, section 187 of the 1865 Act (which corresponds with section 213 (1) of the 1925 Act) was made applicable to these classes of wills and codicils. Section 187 adopts the English rule that the probate is the only legal evidence of the will in any question respecting a right to property under the will, or, as it has been said, it is only when the will has been proved that the Court has the legal optics through which to look at it: Johnson v. Warwick.¹³ As a general rule, no doubt, if probate of a will is necessary, any codicil is included in the probate, because the codicil is part of the will. But it is obvious from the classification of wills and codicils in section 57 (1), clauses (a) and (b), that a will and codicil may have to be treated as separate instruments for the purpose of the application of section 213 (1) and the other relevant sections of the Indian Succession Act. A will or a codicil made within the prescribed limits comes within clause (a) and is governed by the applied sections of the Indian Succession Act, but a will or a codicil made outside the prescribed limits comes within clause (b) and is governed by those sections "so far as relates to immoveable property situate within those limits." The plain meaning of these words is that in respect of a will or of a codicil coming within clause (b), section 213 (1) applies only to the extent of the will or codicil disposing of immoveable property within the prescribed limits, but does not otherwise apply to the instrument. There is nothing very strange in such an exception being made when it is remembered that in England formerly, the Court of Probate had no jurisdiction to authenticate a will so far as it related to real estate and that the probate was no evidence at all of the validity or contents of a will as to such property. (See Williams on Executors, Vol. I, page 440, (10th Edition), and Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. IV, pp. 332, 335). Upon this construction, probate of a will or of a codicil within the category of section 57 (1), clause (b) of the Indian Succession Act, is not required as evidence of the will or codicil so far as any right to moveable property is concerned. It follows that the plaintiff's claim to the pecuniary legacy under the codicil was maintainable without probate.

The next question is whether the plaintiff can claim, in addition to the legacy, a sum of Rs. 15,000 due under a promissory note jointly executed in favour of Aparanji by the testator and the executor. The date of the codicil is 19th October, 1920, and the date of the pro-note is the 22nd October, 1920. The two instruments are, therefore, practically contemporaneous. Reference has been made to Horlock v. Wiggins; *Wiggins v. Horlock*¹¹ where a husband by a separation deed, dated 7th September, 1844, covenanted that his executors or administrators should, on his decease, pay to his wife £100 if she survived him; and by his will executed on the 9th September, 1844, he gave his wife £100 after payment of all his just debts. In holding that there was no presumption that one gift was intended to be in satisfaction of the other, Cotton, L.J., said:

"In my opinion no such presumption arises in this case. The direction to pay the legacy is given after payment of all the testator's just debts, and the instrument creating an obligation to pay the £100, which would be a debt, is so nearly connected in point of time with the execution of the will that they must be treated as contemporaneous. I do not say that in no case can a presumption of satisfaction arise where the documents are contemporaneous."

And Bowen, L.J., said:

"Then, again, the two documents, as regarded the testator's mind, were contemporaneous, which is a circumstance to be considered, for the presumption arises not on the will, but on the circumstances of the case."

Looking at the circumstances in which the pronote was executed and particularly to the fact that the note was executed by the testator and his executor, the latter being under no obligation of any sort to Aparanji when he executed the note, it seems to me that the proper inference is that the note was intended to be no more than an additional security to Aparanji for the payment of the legacy, and the testator did not intend her to have both the legacy and the amount covered by the pronote. In this view it becomes unnecessary to consider the question whether the note is supported by consideration. The result is the same as that arrived at by the learned Trial Judge except that the plaintiff is entitled to the balance of Rs. 15,000 as legacy and not as payable under the pronote. The rate of interest payable on a legacy when the testator is a Hindu is fixed by section 353, Indian Succession Act, at 6 per cent. and under section 351 interest begins to run from the expiration of one year from the testator's death. I agree, for the reasons given by my learned brother, that the mortgage in favour of 4th defendant to the extent to which it was raised for paying off the testator's liabilities has priority over payment of the legacy, but that the legacy has priority over the mortgage to the extent of the amount borrowed by defendant 1 for the satisfaction of his present debts.

Under the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, having regard to the provisions of Ss. 65 and 67, a decree for arrears of rent which includes interest not due, and not recoverable as rent, is not a proper rent decree which can be executed by a sale of the tenure under Chapter XIV.

Under the Act of 1885 (differing, in this respect, from the previous law), a transferee of a tenure is not bound by a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the landlord against the recorded tenant whose interest in the tenure had then in fact ceased, and an effective rent decree can only be obtained against the transferee when he is impleaded as a party-defendant in the suit for such rent.

In the case of a transfer of a permanent tenure, whether voluntarily or in execution of a decree, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the procedure laid down by Ss. 12 and 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was duly followed, and that the proper statutory notice was given, through the Collector, to the landlord.

A suit by the transferee of a tenure for a declaration of his title and that the defendant-landlord has no right to have it sold in execution of an alleged rent decree, and for an injunction restraining him from so selling, is within Art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and the "right to sue," within the meaning of that Article, accrues when the landlord first applies for the sale of the tenure, and not at the date of the passing of the rent decree.

The effect of S. 170 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is only that there can be no investigation, in execution proceedings held under Chap. XIV of the Act, of claims by third parties to an interest in the tenure, but it does not bar a substantive suit by the transferee of a tenure for a declaration of title and exemption from execution, nor can the section be invoked where the landlord seeks to utilise the machinery of Chap. XIV for the recovery of something that is not rent at all.

Appeal No. 109 of 1928 from a judgment and decree, dated the 25th March, 1926, of the High Court, Calcutta, which reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 24th December, 1923, of the Subordinate Judge of Khulna.

The defendants-appellants were landlords of a permanent Darganti tenure, and they obtained three decrees in suits: (1) No. 8 of 1911, (2) No. 26 of 1915, and (3) No. 11 of 1919. The High Court held, differing from the Subordinate Judge, that the said decrees were not decrees for rent, and could not be executed under the provisions of Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, and they gave the plaintiffs-respondents the declaratory relief as prayed for.

Against the said decree, the defendants appealed to His Majesty in Council.

De Gruyther, K. C. and Parikh for appellants.

Dunne, K. C. and Dube for respondents.

De Gruyther, K. C., for appellants.—The decree in question is a rent decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act and can be executed against the tenure. The only person I am obliged to sue is the registered tenant, and if I sue the registered tenant, the decree binds the tenure.

Sections 12 et seq of the Act of 1885 show that if there is any transfer by the tenant, the landlord shall be notified. Before the Act of 1885, notice was given to the landlord directly. Now it has to be given through the Collector. I submit that if no notice is given to the landlord, he is not bound to recognise anybody as a tenant except the person recorded in his register.

The proposition I submit is this: If the landlord gets a decree for rent against any person who is recorded as tenant in the landlord's roll of tenants, the decree is binding on all persons who claim through such tenant, or have an interest in the tenure (*Shamchand Kundu v. Brojonath Pal Chowdhry*¹, *Rash Behary Bundopadhya v. Peary Mohun Mookerjee*², *Panyé Chunder Sircar v. Hurchunder Chowdhry*³, *Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad*⁴ and *Fakir Chunder Dutt v. Ram Kumar Chatterjee*⁵).

There is no decision laying down that when a subsequent purchaser is not impleaded as a party-defendant the decree for rent is vitiated. The tenure is bound if the landlord obtains a decree against persons who are recorded as tenants in his sherista.

As the tenure was created before the Act of 1885 came into force, the stipulation as to interest at 75 per cent. could be given effect to: Ss. 67 and 178 and *Madhu Mala v. Alfazuddi Kazi*⁶. The judgment of Jenkins, C.J., in this case shows that the mere fact that interest at 75 per cent. is included does not prove that it is not a rent decree.

We submit, further, that the suit is time-barred. The plaintiff's right to sue accrued, under Article 120 of the Limitation Act, at the date when the rent decrees were passed, and not when an application was made to execute them.

Dunne, K.C., for respondents.—Under the Act of 1885 the landlord is bound to sue the person who is the transferee of the tenure. The landlord had to bring the suit against me as transferee. If he did not choose to make me a party, I am not bound.

The decisions under the new Act lay down that a transfer is valid, irrespective of the question whether the⁹ landlord had notice of it or not. Under the Act there is no obligation on the transferee to give notice of transfer to the landlord. The system which existed prior to 1885 does not survive under the new Act: *Kristo Bulluv Ghose v. Ram Narayan Mukerji*¹¹ and *Baistab Charan Chowdhury v. Akhil Chandra Chowdhury*¹². The transfer is now complete as soon as the document is registered: *Kristo Bulluv Ghose v. Kristo Lal Singh*⁷.

It is admitted that all the heirs of the deceased tenants were not made parties to the rent suits. To have a valid decree for arrears of rent under the Act, the landlord must join all the heirs of the tenant as parties to the action: *Srimati Faijunnessa v. Ramtaran Chowdhury*¹³, *Kailash Chandra Mitra v. Brojendra K. Chakravarti*¹⁴ and *Abinath Chandra Roy v. Fulchand Chaudhuri*¹⁵.

On the question of interest at 75 per cent. there has been a vital change in this respect under the Act of 1885. S. 67 lays down in terms a statutory rate of interest on arrears of rent, and nothing in excess of the rate is recoverable under the Act.

SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.—The appellants are the owners of a - ganti tenure known as Dahar Nalbunia in the Khulna District. On the 26th January, 1885, shortly before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) the predecessor-in-title of the appellants created a dar-ganti or under-tenure in favour of three ladies (hereinafter referred to as the dar-gantidars) at an annual rent of Rs. 629-11-0 payable in four kists or instalments. By the terms of the kabuliyat then executed by the dar-gantidars this tenure was non-transferable, and provision was made for default as follows:—

"In case of default in payment of any kist we shall pay the whole amount of the kist together with half of it by way of interest within the period from the date following the date of the kist, up to the 30th Chaitra of the same year. Besides the rent, we shall pay along with it all existing and future Government cesses, etc., according to the aforesaid Kistibundi, and in case of default of any kist we shall without any objection pay interest thereon in the way as stipulated above. If the rent for a year be not paid within the year, then we shall cease to have any right to or concern with the property on the 1st day of Baisakh of the next year. You will be entitled to take Khas possession of the same without instituting any suit and without giving any notice, and the arrears of rent with interest for the year, together with interest on the same at the rate of 1 anna per rupee per month from the 1st day of Baisakh of the following year up to the date of realisation of the same shall be recovered from our other moveable and immoveable properties and from our persons."

The effect of this was that upon any instalment of the rent being in arrear interest at the rate of 50 per cent. would be payable up to the end of the year, and that if a year's rent was unpaid the landlord would be entitled to re-enter, and the arrears and interest then due would carry further interest at 75 per cent. per annum recoverable from the dar-gantidars personally.

These terms, however, were in effect modified by the operation of the Tenancy Act which came into force in November, 1885. The dar-ganti which, it is now admitted, was heritable, was a "permanent tenure" within the meaning of the Act, and therefore became under S. 11 transferable; and by S. 65 the dar-gantidars ceased to be liable to ejectment for arrears of rent, but their tenure was liable to be sold in execution of a rent decree, and the rent was made a first charge thereon. It was also provided by S. 67 that arrears of rent should bear simple interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum which was raised by a later Act to 12½ per cent.

From 1899 onwards the dar-gantidars appear to have been in difficulties. They incumbered the tenure: the rent was not paid: rent suits were filed against them and decrees were passed. None of these suits seem to have been defended and the decree in each case included, in addition to the 50 per cent. interest on arrears, interest upon the aggregate sum due at 75 per cent. which was clearly chargeable only in the event of re-entry—an event which had not, and could not under the provisions of the new Act, have taken place.

It is with the last three of these decrees dated respectively, the 14th June, 1911, the 18th August, 1915, and the 7th November, 1919, that this appeal is concerned. After 1899 the dar-gantidars practically disappear from the scene, though their names, or as one or other of them died, the names of some of their heirs continued to be recorded in the landlord's sherista, and they figured as defendants in the regularly recurring suits for the rent. In the case of the earlier decrees prior to 1911 the decretal amount was paid, apparently without demur, by one or other of the incumbrancers, and a maze of proceedings resulted which are detailed in the judgments of the Indian Courts, but need not be further referred to here. It is sufficient to state that by 1911 the dar-gantidars and their heirs had ceased to have any interest in the tenure which it is now admitted eventually vested in the respondents, subject to a charge in favour of one Hiramati who was not a party to the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen.

The three decrees now in question were obtained against the one survivor of the dar-gantidars and such of the heirs of the other two as were known to the appellants, and included (as stated above) interest upon the arrears at 75 per cent. None of the incumbrancers or execution purchasers to whom the real interest in the tenure had passed were at any time entered in the landlord's sherista, nor were they made parties to any of the suits, or recognised in any way by the appellants who contended, relying upon the terms of the kabuliyat, that the tenure was not transferable. This contention was maintained by them in the earlier stages of the present proceedings, though in view of the provisions of the Act of 1885 it has not been supported before this Board.

In the case of the later decrees from 1911 onwards no payment was made, and apart from keeping them alive it does not appear that any effective step towards realisation was taken by the appellants until April, 1921, when they applied for execution by attachment and sale of the tenure. This brought the respondents into action, and in November of the same year they filed the suit out of which this appeal has arisen in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Khulna. The prayer of their plaint was for a declaration of their title to the tenure, and that the appellants had no right to have it sold in execution of the decrees above referred to, and for an injunction restraining them from selling. The appellants defended the suit, their principal contentions being that the tenure was not transferable, that the decrees were good rent decrees binding on the tenure which could therefore be brought to sale in execution, and that the suit was out of time. The Trial Judge decided the first two points in the appellants' favour, and holding that the respondents had no title dismissed the suit. He did not think it necessary to come to any conclusion on the question of limitation.

The High Court on appeal reversed his decree, the main ground of the decision being that the decrees were not rent decrees which could be executed by sale of the tenure inasmuch as the 75 per cent. interest which was included in them was not due, and could not be recovered, as rent. The learned Judges held that the respondents had acquired by purchase a right in the tenure though they thought it unnecessary to define its exact nature, and they granted the respondents a declaration to that effect and that the tenure could not be sold in execution, and an injunction as prayed.

Before their Lordships it has not been seriously disputed that the inclusion in the decrees of the 75 per cent. interest, which was payable only on re-entry by the landlord, was wrong, and that this amount could not properly be charged on the tenure. But the argument for the appellants has been that they were entitled to bring their suits against the tenants recorded in their rent rolls, disregarding any transfer of their interests, and that having obtained decrees against them in rent suits filed under the Act of 1885 they had a statutory right to bring the tenure to sale, which could not be resisted by third parties whatever their interest in the tenure might be, and that no such third party could impugn the propriety of the decrees so passed.

Their Lordships find themselves unable to accede to this argument. Before the Act of 1885 came into force the duty was laid specifically upon the transferee of a tenure to see that his name was recorded in the landlord's sherista, and it may well have been that, if he failed without good reason to do this, he could not be heard to object to a decree passed against the recorded tenants, even though their interest in the tenure had in fact ceased. But the Act of 1885 made a radical change in this respect. Instead of the transferee being bound to go to the landlord to get his name recorded, it was provided that a voluntary transfer must be by a registered instrument, and that before registration a fee was to be paid by the transferee and notice given by the registration office, through the Collector, to the landlord, or in the case of an execution sale by the executing court. In this state of the law their Lordships can see no foundation for the contention that a landlord can ignore all transfers of the tenure and rely upon decrees obtained by him against persons whom he chooses for his own purposes still to record as his tenants, though he knows, or must be taken to know, that their interest in the tenure has ceased.

In the present case their Lordships have no doubt that the landlord had notice of the other interests which had come into existence. There is uncontradicted evidence to this effect in the record, and in the case of the earlier decrees the predecessor-in-title of the appellants accepted payment from persons whom she must have known were incumbrancers. But apart from this their Lordships have no hesitation in presuming, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the procedure laid down by Ss. 12 and 13 of the Act was duly followed, and that the proper statutory notice was given of the various incumbrances and execution sales from which the respondents' title has evolved. That the appellants did not choose to record the names of the transferees is neither here nor there; the reason for their not doing so was almost obviously that they were unwilling to recognise the transferability of the tenure. If it was, as is now admitted, statutorily transferable, their Lordships know of no principle of law, nor have they been referred to any provision of the Act, which justifies the contention of the appellants. It would, indeed, appear from the decision of the Board in *Surapati Roy v. Ram Narayan Mukerji*¹¹ and other cases decided in India (see, for instance, *Chintamani Dutt v. Rash Behari Mondul*⁹) that the original tenure-holders would no longer be liable for the rent, and that an effective decree, therefore, could only be obtained against the transferees. But, in the present case, it being clear to their Lordships that the decrees which the appellants claim to execute by the sale of the tenure were not, for the reasons assigned by the High Court, proper rent decrees, they think it is impossible to hold that the respondents are bound by them.

Reliance has been placed by counsel for the appellants upon S. 170 (1) of the Tenancy Act, which made Ss. 278 to 283 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 (now O. 21, rr. 58 to 63 of the Code of 1908) inapplicable to a tenure attached in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. The effect of this provision is that there can be no investigation in execution proceedings held under Chap. XIV of the Tenancy Act, of claims by third parties to an interest in the tenure, but it does not, in their Lordships' opinion, bar a substantive suit such as that filed by the respondents. In their Lordships' view it is only arrears of rent that are charged by S. 65 upon the tenure, and it is only such arrears that can be realised in execution by the sale of the tenure. Chap. XIV of the Act does not purport to enlarge or restrict the exercise of this right, but only provides the machinery for working it out. If a landlord seeks to use this machinery for the recovery of something that is not rent, to the prejudice of a third party on whom the decree is not binding, it would be a manifest injustice to deny him the right to object, and it would require very clear words in the Act to induce their Lordships to impose this penalty upon him.

It only remains to deal with the question of limitation. The contention of the appellants is that the suit, not having been brought within six years of the passing of the first two of the three decrees in question, is barred in respect of them by Art. 120 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908). The respondents admit that this article governs the suit, but say that their "right to sue," which defines the starting point of the period, only accrued in April, 1921, when the appellants first applied for the sale of the tenure, and their suit was brought in November of that year. The Trial Judge (as already stated) made no pronouncement upon this issue. The learned Judges of the High Court agreed with the respondents' contention, and their Lordships have no doubt that they were right for the reasons given in their judgment.

Their Lordships think that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

after death of that person and without his consent—Validity—Consent, if a condition precedent—Motives for adoption—Official translation of documents.

The fundamental rules as to the construction of documents are the same in England and in India. While the Court must, no doubt, have regard to the surrounding circumstances, and, in the case of a document executed by an Indian, to the fact that his surroundings, his manners, etc., are often different from those of an Englishman, the duty of the Court is to ascertain the real intention of the executant from the words used by him in the document itself. In short, the Court is bound to carry out the intention as expressed and no other: Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Parthasarathy Appa Row, (1913) L.R. 41 I.A. 51 at 70, 71 and 72: I.L.R. 37 M. 199: 26 M.L.J. 411 (P.C.), referred to.

The ordinary rule as to the construction of powers which prevails in England (as, for instance, that when a power is given to be executed with the consent of a person, and that person dies before the power is executed, the power comes to an end), is generally applicable to the construction of an Anumatipatra executed in India.

Authority given to a wife to adopt has to be strictly pursued: Chowdury Pudum Singh v. Koer Oodey Singh, (1869) 12 Moo. I.A. 350 at 356 and Surendrakeshav Roy v. Doorgasundari Dasse, (1891) L.R. 19 I.A. 108 at 122: I.L.R. 19 C. 513 (P.C.), relied on.

Religious grounds, namely, to secure his spiritual benefits, are not the only motives which actuate a husband to empower his wife to adopt a son to him. There may be secular motives, as, for instance, to continue his line of ancestors and to inherit his property and keep up his own name. Generally both motives induce the husband to empower the wife to adopt a son to him, and whether the paramount intention is religious or secular has to be ascertained from the language of the Anumatipatra: Mayne's Hindu Law, 6th Ed., p. 134 (7th Ed., para. 106), referred to.

One Ram Prosad, a Kayastha Bengali Hindu, governed by the Dayabhaga Law, executed, on the 16th February, 1869, a power in favour of his wife to adopt a son to him. He died on the same day. The Anumatipatra stated that his widow was to adopt "my father's youngest son, Chema If there be any obstacle to take him in adoption according to the Shastras, then she may adopt any one else whom she wants, with the permission of my father." The father died in 1873, and the widow, in 1885, adopted one Krishna Prosad.

Held, that, on the true construction of the Anumatipatra, that the words "with the permission of my father" in the Anumatipatra created a condition precedent to the exercise of the power of adoption, and therefore on the death of the father in 1873 the power to adopt given to the widow came to an end, and consequently the adoption of Krishna Prosad by the widow in 1885 was invalid. Observations of Lord Hobhouse in Amrito Lal Dutt v. Surnomoye Dasi, (1900) L.R. 27 I.A. 128 at 134: I.L.R. 27 C. 996 (P.C.), relied on.

The practice of their Lordships' Board is to accept official translations of documents as correct: Sasiman Chowdhurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury, (1921) L.R. 49 I.A. 25 at 31: I.L.R. 1 Pat. 305 at 311: 42 M.L.J. 492 (P.C.), followed.

Judgment of the High Court, Patna, reversed.

Appeal No. 112 of 1929 from the decree of the High Court, Patna, dated the 16th December, 1927, which affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge at Cuttack, dated the 6th August, 1923, and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The material facts of the case, as well as the pedigree of the parties concerned, are set out in their Lordships' judgment.

From the said decree of the High Court, Patna, the present appeal was preferred by the plaintiffs in forma pauperis by special leave to His Majesty in Council.

26th June, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by SIR BINOD MITTER.—This is an appeal from the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, dated the 16th December, 1927, which affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge at Cuttack, dated the 6th August, 1923, and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

The following is the genealogical table of the family of Ram Prosad Bose, and the parties to the litigation claim to be his heirs:—

Unamoyee = Golak Prosad (died 26th October, 1873) = Alhadini Dasi (1st wife)		(2nd wife).
Ram Prosad Bose = Alhadini alias Gangamoni (died 16th Feb., 1869)		(died 7th Sept., 1920)
Gobinda Prosad (decd. plff. No. 1)	Sananda Prosad (plff. No. 2).	Binode Prosad (plff. No. 3).	Sonaton Prosad (deceased).
Rajendra (plff. No. 1).

Ram Prosad Bose executed a will and also an Anumatipatra in favour of his wife Alhadini Dasi on the 16th February, 1869.

Alhadini Dasi, the widow, adopted one Krishna Prosad in the year 1885, and he died in 1909 leaving the respondent his only heir in possession of the properties claimed by the appellants. Alhadini died on the 7th September, 1920, and the present suit was instituted by the appellants against the respondent on the 25th April, 1921, praying for a declaration that the adoption of Krishna Prosad was invalid, and for the recovery of the properties in possession of the respondent and other incidental reliefs.

There is no dispute now about the valid execution of the will or the Anumatipatra, nor is there any dispute that Krishna Prosad was in fact adopted, and that all necessary and proper ceremonies were performed at his adoption.

Ram Prosad belonged to a Kayastha family, and was governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law, and the widow therefore could only adopt in terms of the Anumatipatra, provided the same remained effective at the date of the adoption.

The following is the official translation of the Anumatipatra:—

“Anumatipatra executed by Ram Prosad Bose in favour of Alhadini Dasi.

“This Anumatipatra is executed by Ram Prosad Bose of Bhogmadhab, Ph. Jajpur, District Cuttack, at present of Bichargunj, Ph. Sunhat, District Balasore, to the effect following:—

“That as I was taken ill with purging and vomiting yesterday, I found that it was not likely that I should live. In the circumstances I find that it is necessary that I should have an adopted son or a Snehaputra, (to inherit) the Zemindaries, etc., the moveable and immoveable properties, which I have in Balasore and Cuttack. Hence in sound mind and out of my own free will I execute this Anumatipatra in favour of my wife Alhadini, alias Gangamoni Dasi, to the effect that she will take an adopted son, that is, she will adopt my father's youngest son. At present he is called by the name of Chema. She will take him in adoption and deliver him possession of the aforesaid property on my death. If there be any obstacle to take him in adoption according to the Shastras, then he will be made a Snehaputra or she may adopt anyone else whom she wants, with the permission of my father, and deliver him possession as written above. To the above effect I execute this Anumatipatra that it may be of use when necessary. Dated 16th February, 1869, corresponding to 7th Falgun, 1276.”

The learned Subordinate Judge, in his judgment, translated the vernacular word “matanusara” as “according to the opinion or advice,” but the official translation of the aforesaid word is “with the permission.”

Mr. Justice Ross, in his judgment, accepted the official translation in its entirety, and the other learned Judge substantially did the same. The practice of their Lordships' Board is to accept the official translation as correct (*Sasiman Chowdhurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury*¹) and their Lordships must decide this appeal on the official translation.

Both the Courts below have held that there was an obstacle to take Chema, the testator's step-brother, in adoption, and their Lordships see no reason to differ from that view.

The substantial question before their Lordships for decision is whether on the true construction of the Anumatipatra, on the death of Golak Prosad,* the power to adopt given to the widow by Ram Prosad came to an end.

In England, as also in India, even where a document is executed in vernacular, the fundamental rule of construction is the same. The duty of the Court is to ascertain the intention

1. (1921) L.R. 49 I.A. 25 at 31; I.L.R. 1 Pat. 305; 42 M.L.J. 492 (P.C.).

*Golak Prosad, the testator's father, died in 1873, and in 1885 the widow adopted Krishna Prosad, father of the present defendant.—K.J.R.

from the words used in the document. The Court is entitled and bound to bear in mind surrounding circumstances, but the Court does that only to ascertain the real intention of the executant from the words used by him. The surroundings of an Indian, his manners, his outlook proceeding from different religion and social customs, are often different from those of an Englishman. Ordinarily documents executed by an Indian in his own language, particularly without any professional aid, are often expressed in loose and inaccurate language. All these considerations have to be borne in mind, and sometimes by reason of these aforesaid circumstances a more extended or restricted meaning may have to be given to particular words than their exact literal meaning permits, provided always that the context justifies it. In short, the Court is entitled to "put itself into the testator's armchair." Once the construction is settled, the Court is bound to carry out the intention as expressed and no other. The rules of construction were clearly laid down by the Board in Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Parthasarathy Appa Row.²

It is true that the paramount intention that often actuates a husband to empower his wife to adopt a son to him is religious, for, according to Hindu religion, the adopted son is able to confer on him at stated intervals spiritual benefits in a much higher degree than his brothers or any other near agnatic relations. On the other hand, sometimes a husband mainly from secular motives empowers his wife to adopt a son or sons to continue his line of ancestors and to inherit his property and keep up his own name (see Mayne's Hindu Law, 6th Ed., p. 134).

Generally both motives induce the husband to empower the wife to adopt a son to him, and whether the paramount intention is religious or secular has to be ascertained from the language of the Anumatipatra, bearing in mind the various facts to which their Lordships have referred.

It is well-established law in England that when a power is given to be executed with the consent of a person, and that person dies before the power is executed, the power comes to an end.

Their Lordships see no reason why, subject to what they have said, the ordinary rule as to construction of powers which prevails in England should not be applicable to the construction of an Anumatipatra executed in India. Their Lordships are fortified in their view by the observations of the Board in the case of Amrito Lal Dutt v. Surnomoye Dasi.³ Their Lordships find from the document that the paramount intention was to have an adopted son to inherit the Zemindaries. Instructions were given that the properties not disposed of by the will should be made over to the adopted son. The Anumatipatra nowhere suggests that the adoption was to secure the spiritual benefit of Ram Prosad.

It is important to bear in mind that Ram Prosad could not have been married many years before the Anumatipatra was executed, and his wife was then only 13 or 14 years of age. It is unlikely that he could ever have wished that his girl wife should have an unrestricted choice in the selection of his adopted son to the extent of allowing her to bring a stranger to inherit his property.

In their Lordships' opinion the words "with the permission of my father" created a condition precedent to the exercise of the power of adoption certainly during the lifetime of the father, and there is no reason for holding that the words are to have a different effect after the death of Golak. It is well-established law in India that authority given to a wife to adopt has to be strictly pursued. (*Chowdhury Pudum Singh v. Koer Oodey Singh*⁴ and *Surendrakeshav Roy v. Doorgasundari Dassee*⁵).

Their Lordships therefore hold that on the death of Golak the power to adopt came to an end.

Counsel for the respondent argued that in order to give effect to the true intention of Ram Prosad the words "if possible" should be added after the words "with the permission" in the Anumatipatra. Their Lordships are unable to accept this contention, and they are of opinion that the appeal should be allowed, and there should be a decree for ejectment against the respondent with mesne profits from the death of Alhadini to the date when possession is delivered to the appellants. The plaintiffs are also entitled to the declaration that Krishna Prosad was not the adopted son of Ram Prosad.

The appellants were unsuccessful in most of the issues raised by them, and in their Lordships' opinion each party should

Mt. Koklan.

In construing the will of a Hindu testator, while it is no doubt legitimate to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary motives and wishes of a Hindu with respect to the devolution of his property, the primary duty of a Court of construction is to give to the words of the will their plain and natural meaning. In other words, even in the case of a Hindu will, where the language is specific and unambiguous, the Court must construe the words as they find them and give effect to the intention of the testator as expressed in the will itself.

Under Art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, the terminus a quo is, "when the right to sue accrues"; and there can be no "right to sue" until there is an accrual of the right asserted in the suit and its infringement or at least a clear and unequivocal threat to infringe that right by the defendant against whom the suit is instituted.

A Hindu widow, who under the terms of her deceased husband's will, became entitled absolutely to a moiety of his property on the death of her son in 1918, brought this suit in 1927 for partition and possession against the son's widow.

Held: (1) That if Art. 123 or 127 of the Limitation Act (12 years' limitation) was applicable, the suit was clearly within time.

(2) That even, if Art. 120 (six years' limitation) applied as regards the claim to the moveable properties, the suit was within time, inasmuch as though the plaintiff's right to the property arose on the death of her son, there was (on the finding of fact of the Court below), no infringement of, or any clear and unequivocal threat to, her rights till within six years before suit.

Appeal and cross-appeal (No. 106 of 1929) from a judgment and decree, dated the 12th October, 1928, of the learned

*P.C. Appeal No. 106 of 1929.

v.
Mt. Koklan.

Judicial Commissioners, North-West Frontier Province, Peshawar, which set aside the decree, dated the 31st January, 1928, of the District Judge, Peshawar, and granted the plaintiff, Mt. Koklan, a decree for possession by partition of one-quarter of the property in the suit as a limited owner.

The main questions in the appeal of Mt. Bolo (the contesting defendant) and in the cross-appeal of Mt. Koklan (the plaintiff) were the same:

(a) Whether, on the true construction of the will, dated the 27th May, 1896, of one Kanhaya Lal, an Arora Hindu of Peshawar City, who died in September, 1899, and in the events which happened, his widow, Mt. Koklan (the plaintiff), was given any separate or independent share of his property, either as a joint tenant or tenant-in-common with her minor son, Tara Chand, and either absolutely or for life, and what was the extent of such share; and

(b) whether, if she was given any such share, her claim to possession by partition thereof was barred by limitation, the suit having been brought on the 13th July, 1927, more than six years after the death of her son Tara Chand in 1918.

The material passages from the will, as translated, are set out in their Lordships' judgment.

The District Judge held that the plaintiff, Mt. Koklan, never became owner under the terms of the will, but that she only acquired an interest contingent on the death of her son Tara Chand during minority and without issue. The learned Judicial Commissioners, on appeal, took a different view. In their opinion, "the effect of the will was to confer an absolute estate on the son (Tara Chand) and a limited estate on the widow (Mt. Koklan)". They, therefore, held that "the plaintiff is entitled to hold one-quarter of the property as a limited owner, and that as such she is entitled to separate that share by partition."

The plaintiff (Mt. Koklan) as well as the defendant (Mt. Bolo) appealed to His Majesty in Council against the said decree of the Appellate Court.

Dunne, K.C. and Joseph Nissim for appellant.

De Gruyther, K.C. and Dube for respondents.

Dunne, K.C., for appellant (Mt. Bolo).—On a true construction of the will, Tara Chand, minor, having survived the testator, the half share in question was given to the minor son as owner absolutely in conjunction with the customary right to suitable maintenance of the Hindu widow. This right was a charge on the estate and vested in Mt. Koklan, the plaintiff. In the events which happened, she did not become owner of any separate or independent share of the property in suit and has no right to claim partition or possession. *Jamna Das v. Ramautar*¹ and *Sasiman Chowdhurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury*² referred to.

In any case, the suit is time-barred. Art. 123 is inapplicable. That article is restricted to a suit in which a plaintiff seeks to obtain his legacy or share from a person who, either as an executor, administrator, or otherwise, represents the estate of a deceased person, and is under a legal obligation to pay legacies and distribute shares to those entitled to them. *Sithamma v. Narayana*³, *Issar Chunder Doss v. Juggut Chunder Shaha*⁴, Keshav Jagannath v. Narayan Sakharan,⁵ *Khadersa Hajee Bappu v. Puthen Veetil Ayissa Unmah*⁶ and Mahomed Riasat Ali v. Mt. Hasin Ramu.⁷ The decision in *Shirinbai v. Ratanbai*⁸ (at pp. 857, 858, 860) is based on a misunderstanding of the ruling of the Privy Council in *Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit*⁹. That is no authority for the broad proposition that Art. 123 applies to every suit in which the plaintiff seeks to recover, from any one in possession of the estate, an undistributed share of the estate of an intestate. Art. 123 is restricted to suits against executors, administrators and other persons who rightly represent the estate, as laid down in the earlier decisions of the High Courts in India, prior to the pronouncement of the Board in *Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit*⁹. If Art. 123 is inapplicable, the other article applicable is 120 and the suit is barred. Refers to *Nuridin Najbudin v. Bu Umrao*¹⁰ and *Rajah Parthasarathy Appa Rao v. Rajah Venkatadri Appa Rao*¹¹. The ruling in *Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit*⁹ is distinguishable; there Art. 123 was applied because the lady represented the estate.

De Gruyther, K.C. for respondent, Mt. Koklan (plaintiff).—The suit is for a declaration of title and partition. It is extremely difficult to say what the Legislature contemplated by the words "right to sue" in Art. 120, assuming that article to be applicable. Refers to Mitra's Limitation, Tagore Lectures, Vol. II, p. 1051. Directly the right is denied, the right to sue accrues. Refers to section 42, Specific Relief Act. Nobody is compelled to sue for a declaration, until his right is denied; and from the moment of denial, the party has six years within which he can bring his suit.

As regards Art. 123, the earlier decisions, for instance, in *Issur Chunder Doss v. Juggut Chunder Shaha*⁴ and *Keshav Jagannath v. Narayan Sakharam*⁵, took one view and the more recent decisions another view. The suit here is clearly for a share of the residue and comes under Art. 123.

The third alternative is Art. 127. Also in the case of joint tenants, no period of limitation applies and time would run only when the plaintiff's rights are infringed. "Exclusion" has not here been made out against the plaintiff. Reference was also made to *Jitendra Nath Ghose v. Monmohan Ghose*¹² in which the right to sue was held to accrue only when execution was taken out by the sale of the tenure being applied for, and not when the rent decree was passed.

SIR BINOD MITTER.—These are two consolidated appeals, one by the plaintiff, Mt. Koklan, and the other by the defendant, Mt. Bolo, from a judgment and decree, dated the 12th October, 1928, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, North-West Frontier Province, Peshawar, which reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 31st January, 1928, of the District Judge of Peshawar, and made a decree partly allowing the plaintiff's claim and partly dismissing it.

Kanhaya Lal executed his last will and testament on the 27th May, 1896, and died in the year 1899, leaving surviving his sole widow the plaintiff, Mt. Koklan, his infant son Tara Chand, and his great nephew Mohan Lal, as will appear from the following pedigree:—

5. (1889) I.L.R. 14 B. 236.

The properties left by Kanhaya Lal consisted of movables and immovables. They were self-acquired and were not ancestral.

Two questions are before their Lordships for their decision in this appeal:

(1) What is the interest of the plaintiff and the defendant Mt. Bolo in the property left by Kanhaya Lal?

(2) Is the claim of the plaintiff in this suit barred by limitation?*

The important clause in the will is the 4th, and it runs as follows:—

"If I die, my real son, Tara Chand, minor, aged 2 years, may be held and considered as proprietor of half of the whole property specified in the will, jointly with Mt. Koklan, his mother. If, God forbid, the mother of the said Tara Chand, minor, dies before him, then the said Tara Chand shall become the owner of the said half share and in case Tara Chand, minor, dies before his mother, then the latter shall be held and considered to be the owner of the said minor's half share in the entire property. Mt. Koklan shall act as guardian of the person and property of Tara Chand during his minority. It is further noted here that if Tara Chand is not present, i.e., if he dies, then Mt. Koklan shall be competent in every respect to alienate the said half share in the property by way of Dharam Khata, etc. (i.e., charitable purposes, etc.) but she shall have no power to alienate by gift or by other way any portion of the said property either to her parents or relations on her mother's side.

"As regards the remaining one-half share of the property noted in the will, it shall go to Mohan Lal, son of Narinjan Das, caste Arora (by profession a physician) of Mohallah Kocchi Khan ilaqa Dabgari gate, Tahsil Peshawar, who is the son of my brother's daughter, and after his death his children shall succeed to this half share of the property."

Tara Chand died in 1918, leaving him surviving his sole widow Mt. Bolo and an infant son Mehr Chand. The question for decision is whether on Tara Chand's death his mother, Mt. Koklan, became entitled absolutely to a moiety of the estate left by Kanhaya Lal and, if not, then what on the construction of Kanhaya Lal's will is the interest of Mt. Koklan or of Mt. Bolo.

Counsel for Mt. Bolo submitted that the testator by the words "In case Tara Chand, minor, dies before his mother, then the latter shall be held and considered to be the owner of the said minor's half share in the entire property" intended that the interest which Tara Chand was to acquire under the will would go over to his mother only if Tara Chand died before the testator or if he died during his minority, but not otherwise.

He further submitted that in construing this will, which is the will of a Hindu, it is proper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary motives and wishes of a Hindu with respect to the devolution of his property, and that a Hindu, except in rare cases, would not deprive his sons or grandsons of their rights of inheritance, or even curtail the same, for the benefit of his widow.

No doubt the submission of the learned Counsel is perfectly legitimate and proper, but the primary duty of a Court of construction is to give to the words of the will their plain and natural meaning, and the words of this will are specific. Their Lordships think that, whilst they must give due weight to the submission of the learned Counsel, they must construe the words as they find them. They, therefore, hold that the intention of the testator as expressed was that the defeasance clause would come into operation on the death of Tara Chand, if the same happened during the lifetime of his mother, and cannot be restricted in the way that Counsel suggested. The answer to the first question propounded is, therefore, that on the death of Tara Chand Mt. Koklan became entitled to a moiety of the property left by Kanhaya Lal and that Mt. Bolo has no interest therein.

"When Kanhaya Lal died, Mohan Lal managed the property. On his death Surjan Das managed it and a year or two later Tara Chand also took part in the management. On the death of Surjan Das and Tara Chand, agents were appointed under registered powers of attorney by Mts. Sarani and Bolo, the mothers of the minors Sant Ram, Hari Ram and Mehr Chand, to manage the property and that arrangement has been continuing up to date. The account books of the property show that the income has been credited half and half to the two branches of Sultan Singh's descendants: an allowance of Rs. 20 per mensem has been made to Mt. Koklan and it has been debited all along first to Tara Chand's account and later to Mehr Chand's. Since the death of Surjan Das and Tara Chand the mothers of the minors have been receiving from the property a sum of about Rs. 400 a month for their various expenses. Kanhaya Lal's widow and descendants continued to live jointly until 4 or 5 years ago when Mts. Koklan and Bolo began to live separately."

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner did not come to any different finding and their Lordships accept the finding of the learned District Judge as correct.

A suit was filed on the 11th July, 1922, on behalf of the infant Mehr Chand by his mother Mt. Bolo against the two minor sons of Surjan Das through their mother for partition and possession of the properties left by Kanhaya Lal in equal shares. Mt. Koklan petitioned to be added as defendant, denying that her minor grandson had any right at all and claiming under the will to be the absolute owner of the half share in suit. The suit was subsequently withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

On these facts the question arises whether the claim of the plaintiff is barred by limitation.

Learned counsel for Mt. Bolo argued that Art. 120 applies to this suit in respect of the movable properties, and that when Tara Chand died the right to sue accrued to the plaintiff and the suit as regards the movable properties is therefore barred by limitation.

Learned counsel for the plaintiff, Mt. Koklan, also submitted that Art. 120 of the Limitation Act is applicable, but that the right to sue did not accrue until Mehr Chand on the 11th July, 1922, instituted the suit which was subsequently withdrawn. He further submitted that if Art. 120 did not apply, then Art. 127 or 123 is applicable. If Art. 127 or 123 is applicable, then the suit is clearly within time, but even if Art. 120 applies to this suit, then their Lordships are of opinion that the suit is within time.

Art. 120 is as follows:—

Suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this Schedule.	Six years.	When the right to sue accrues.
--	------------	--------------------------------

There can be no "right to sue" until there is an accrual of the right asserted in the suit and its infringement or at least a clear and unequivocal threat to infringe that right by the defendant against whom the suit is instituted.

No doubt Mt. Koklan's right to the property arose on the death of Tara Chand, but in the circumstances of this case their Lordships are of opinion that there was no infringement of, or any clear and unequivocal threat to, her rights till the year 1922, when the suit, as stated above, was instituted.

Mt. Koklan was living as a member of a joint family, consisting of herself, her infant grandson, and daughter-in-law, and they constituted Kanhaya Lal's branch of the family of Sultan Singh.

The grant of powers-of-attorney by Mts. Sarani and Bolo to a manager to manage the joint property, and the method in which the account books were kept, show the way in which the joint properties were managed. Such methods of management are not uncommon amongst Hindus.

Their Lordships, therefore, hold that the suit is not barred by limitation. They are of opinion that the appeal of Mt. Bolo should be dismissed and that of Mt. Koklan allowed, and that the following declaration should be made: That on the true construction of the will the plaintiff is entitled to an absolute interest in the one-half share in which she and Tara Chand were interested at the time of the latter's death, but this declaration is without prejudice to the question whether any, and if so to what extent, the restriction on alienation imposed by the will of Kanhaya Lal is valid.

It follows, therefore, that Mt. Koklan is entitled to a decree for partition and that this suit should be remitted to the learned District Judge to carry out the directions of their Lordships. The appellant, Mt. Bolo, must pay the costs of Mt. Koklan before this Board. There will be no order for costs in the Courts below and any costs paid under any order should be returned to each other respectively. The costs of partition would be dealt with by the learned District Judge.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Insolvency—Articles entrusted to insolvent for sale—Suit by insolvent to recover them or their value from third person—Suit filed as bailee—Maintainability—Doctrine of reputed ownership if applicable.

The plaintiff, who was a goldsmith, was entrusted in the ordinary course of his business by a certain person with some emeralds in order to have them sold. He handed them over to the defendant for sale and the latter not having returned the articles, or their value, he sued to recover the same. The plaintiff was on the date of suit an undischarged insolvent. He sought to recover from the defendant not only the value of the articles as payable to the owner, but also an additional sum of money alleged to be due to him by way of commission. The latter claim was, however, negatived by all the Courts and the suit resolved itself into one for recovering the value of the articles on behalf of the owner. An objection having been taken to the maintainability of the suit,

Held, that the property in the articles entrusted did not vest in the insolvent so as to pass to the Official Receiver and the suit, being one filed by the plaintiff in his capacity as bailee, was not rendered unsustainable because of his insolvency.

Held, further, that it could not be said, under the circumstances, that the emeralds or their value were the reputed property of the insolvent.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.—The plaintiff and defendant are goldsmiths. The plaintiff is an undischarged insolvent. The plaintiff alleged that he got emeralds from one Sita Lakshmi Ammal for sale and that he gave it to the defendant for sale. The price was fixed at Rs. 1,000 and it was agreed that the excess realised by the defendant by the sale should be shared equally between the plaintiff and the defendant.

The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,000 the price of the emeralds and for Rs. 250 being the plaintiff's share of the profits made by the defendant, on the allegation that the defendant sold the emeralds for Rs. 1,500. The plaintiff asked for the return of the emeralds in case they were not sold by the defendant.

Among other contentions the defendant raised the plea that the plaintiff was an undischarged insolvent and was consequently not entitled to sue. Issue 6 raised the question "Is the plaintiff an undischarged insolvent not entitled to sue?" The first Court found that the plaintiff was an undischarged insolvent but that he could maintain an action for recovery of the articles bailed. The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 1,000. On appeal the Lower Appellate Court found that the defendant's story of the loss of the emeralds at the railway station was not proved, and fixing the value of the emeralds at Rs. 800 gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 800 only. I heard the appeal on the merits and was about to deliver judgment on the merits of the case, when it was brought to my notice that the question whether an undischarged insolvent could maintain a suit with reference to after-acquired properties was referred to a Full Bench in Letters Patent Appeal No. 204 of 1925. I accordingly adjourned the case till the Opinion of the Full Bench is delivered. I am now informed that the Letters Patent Appeal abated since the legal representative of some deceased party was not brought on record, and consequently the Letters Patent Appeal was dismissed, the question not being decided by the Full Bench.

The suit was brought, not simply to recover the value of the emeralds but to recover Rs. 250 also being the plaintiff's share of the alleged profits. The Official Receiver would be interested in prosecuting the claim as regards the profits, since it would be to the benefit of the estate of the creditors. The present is not, therefore, a suit brought for the recovery of articles bailed, but the question of the insolvent being entitled to certain profits in connection with the transaction has also been raised in the suit. The case, therefore, in my opinion involves the insolvent's right to after-acquired property. The appellant has raised the question that the suit as framed is not maintainable by the plaintiff who is admittedly an undischarged insolvent.

The question whether the undischarged insolvent could maintain a suit regarding his after-acquired properties subject to the right of the Official Receiver to intervene in such suit was referred to the decision of a Full Bench by the late learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair in L.P.A. No. 204 of 1925. As that appeal was not proceeded with on the death of one of the parties, the Full Bench had not to consider the question nor give an opinion. As the question arises in the present second appeal, and as the matter is one of general importance, and for reasons stated in the order of reference to the Full Bench made in the above Letters Patent Appeal where the case-law on the point including the latest observations by the Privy Council in *Kala Chand Banerjee v. Jagannath Marwari*¹ is discussed, it seems to me that this Second Appeal should be placed before the learned Chief Justice for consideration under R. 6 of the Appellate Side Rules whether the question should be referred for decision by a Full Bench. In case the learned Chief Justice should so order, the question that arises for the decision of a Full Bench is the following:—

“Is it open to an undischarged insolvent to maintain a suit regarding his after-acquired properties, subject to the right of the Official Receiver to intervene in such proceedings?”

G. T. Ramamujachari for appellant.

R. Krishnaswami Aiyangar and K. Venkateswaram for respondent.

The Court expressed the following OPINION. The Chief Justice.—The question referred to us for decision is—

“Is it open to an undischarged insolvent to maintain a suit regarding his after-acquired properties subject to the right of the Official Receiver to intervene in such proceedings?”

In our view, upon the facts of this case this question does not arise and we are not disposed to enter into any further discussion of this question which is purely one of academic interest.

The facts of the case may be quite shortly stated. The insolvent was the plaintiff in the District Munsif's Court. He was also an undischarged insolvent. His case as set out in the plaint was that he got emeralds from one Sita Lakshmi Ammal for sale and that he gave them to the defendant in the suit for sale. The value of the emeralds was fixed, so he alleges, at Rs. 1,000 and it was agreed that the excess realised by the defendant by the sale should be shared equally between the plaintiff and the defendant. He sued to recover the emeralds or Rs. 1,000 the price of the emeralds and for Rs. 250 being his share, as he alleged, of the profits made by the defendant on the allegation that the defendant sold the emeralds for Rs. 1,500 and he asked for the return of the emeralds in case they were not sold by the defendant. Amongst other contentions the defendant raised the plea that the plaintiff was an undischarged insolvent and was consequently not entitled to sue. An issue was taken upon that contention and the District Munsif found that the plaintiff was an undischarged insolvent, but that he could maintain the suit for recovery of the articles bailed. I wish to draw particular attention to the fact that the articles were described by the District Munsif as articles bailed. Then there was an appeal and the first Appellate Court fixed the value of the emeralds at Rs. 800 and gave the plaintiff a decree for that amount only. The case came up on second appeal to this Court and the question of the maintainability of a suit by an insolvent with reference to after-acquired property was raised and in view of the fact that a Letters Patent Appeal raising this very point was then pending decision by a Full Bench, our learned brother Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., adjourned the case until the Opinion of the Full Bench was delivered. The Letters Patent Appeal, however, abated and the matter again came before our learned brother who, in view of what appears to be a difference of view in a case decided by Krishnan and Odgers, JJ., in *Ramanatha Aiyar v. Nagendra Aiyar*² and a later decision of the Privy Council in *Kala Chand Banerjee v. Jagannath Marwari*¹ referred the case to us.

Upon the facts of this case the plaintiff's suit was divided into two parts: (1) relating to his commission of Rs. 250—that claim has been held against, and (2) for the return of or the value of the emeralds which he handed over to the defendant for sale. In our view, the first essential in the appellant's case is that the emeralds themselves or their cash value should vest in the Receiver as the after-acquired property of the insolvent under S. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. That section deals both with the actual property of an insolvent at the time of his adjudication and property which may pass into his possession after the adjudication. In the case of property coming into his possession after adjudication—it is after-acquired property—that shall forthwith vest in the Receiver. There is another class of property dealt with in that section and that is the reputed property of the insolvent. Upon the facts of this case the value of the emeralds can in no sense of the word be described as the property of the insolvent. His own case was that this property was given to him by Sita Lakshmi Ammal for sale. He was a jeweller and goldsmith and so was the defendant. So that in the ordinary course of business, according to his own case, these emeralds were entrusted to him for sale. That statement in his case completely negatives any position occupied by him other than as a bailee of goods for sale and it is important to remember that this statement that there had been an entrustment to the insolvent of these emeralds as a bailee is not controverted anywhere in the written statement of the defendant. Clearly the emeralds were not the property of the insolvent but it has been urged before us that although they are not the property of the insolvent, they may yet be his reputed property.

Where goods, precious stones and such like things are given into the hands of a goldsmith or a jeweller either for the purpose of being converted into ornaments or for sale, they are given to him in the ordinary way of his business; and assuming that at the time of his adjudication he is in possession of those jewels, clearly they are not his jewels at all but they are the jewels of the bailor and as such, being easily identifiable, do not pass to the Receiver in the insolvency. The further question arises as to what is to happen if he has recovered the proceeds of the sale. Here again if those proceeds have not been inter-mixed with the money belonging to the creditors and can easily be identified, the money does not vest in the Receiver but this case is a stronger one from the respondent's point of view because the jewels had been parted with and the insolvent had no money in his possession which he had received in respect of the sale. He claims in his suit to get that money from the defendant. If he succeeds, no one, I think, would contest that that money is clearly ear-marked as money belonging to the real owner of the jewels, namely, Sita Lakshmi Ammal up to the extent of the agreed value Rs. 1,000 and is not available at all for distribution by the Receiver amongst the creditors in the insolvency. This matter, I think, is made perfectly clear by the notes to S. 38, which is the vesting section, in the English Bankruptcy Act of Williams on "Bankruptcy," 13th Ed., p. 229. The marginal note is "Trusts arising from employment of bankrupt," and the note says:

"Lastly, then, there is the third class of trusts where the bankrupt has not the general, but only a special property, e.g., where property is vested in the bankrupt as an agent, such as a factor, etc. Such property, so long as it or its proceeds remain distinguishable from the mass of the bankrupt's property, will not pass to the trustee of the creditors."

Then again at page 230 it is stated:

"It is always to be remembered that, although goods in the hands of an agent may be easily distinguishable, they may, yet, on the bankruptcy of the agent, pass to his trustee if the principal has permitted the agent to have a possession not consistent with the ordinary usages of trade, and raising a reputation of ownership in the bankrupt."

Here the case for the plaintiff uncontradicted by the defendant in his written statement is that there was no entrustment at all which was not consistent with the ordinary usages of trade. As before stated, the insolvent was a jeweller and goldsmith and he himself says that the emeralds were entrusted to him for sale—that is what a jeweller and goldsmith does—and it cannot be said that the emeralds or their value were the reputed property of the insolvent. Under these circumstances and upon the facts of this case the question before us really does not arise. It would arise if the property were property which vested in the Official Assignee or the Receiver as the case may be. Therefore we decline to decide the question. We need express no opinion upon what would happen had the property been the after-acquired property of the insolvent. With regard to the claim for Rs. 250 no question arises with regard to that because that claim has been disallowed in all the Courts.

The case must, therefore, be dealt with by the referring Judge in the light of these observations.

Sinnammal..

The plaintiff who was a money-decree-holder against the judgment-debtor-mortgagor attached the mortgaged property in execution of his decree. Pending the attachment, the defendant-mortgagee filed a suit upon his mortgage and obtained a preliminary decree. To this suit, however, the plaintiff was not made a party. Subsequently, the plaintiff brought the property to sale in pursuance of the attachment and purchased it himself. The defendant thereupon proceeded to obtain a final decree, and purchased the same property at the sale held by Court in execution of that decree. The plaintiff filed a suit alleging that the defendant was in unlawful possession of the property and claimed that he was entitled to redeem the property from the mortgage in favour of the defendant. The District Munsif decreed redemption by the plaintiff on payment of a certain sum of money to the defendant. The plaintiff having appealed on the ground that the sum he was ordered to pay was too large, the Subordinate Judge allowed the defendant at the hearing to raise the plea that the suit itself was not maintainable and dismissed the suit in toto. The judgment of the Appellate Court having been affirmed in second appeal, and the plaintiff having preferred a Letters Patent Appeal, Held (by Coutts Trotter, C.J., Beasley and Madhavan Nair, JJ.) that the Lower Appellate Court had jurisdiction to exercise its discretionary powers under O. 41, R. 33, Civil Procedure Code, in favour of the respondent by dismissing the plaintiff's suit in toto, though the respondent did not prefer a cross-appeal or memorandum of objections challenging the decree passed by the first Court. In such cases the question whether the interference by the Appellate Court was justified or not should be decided on the circumstances of each case.

Held, further, (by Beasley, C.J., Anantakrishna Aiyar and Curgenvén, JJ.) that the plaintiff was not a necessary party to the mortgage suit within the meaning of O. 34, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code, and that the right to redeem conferred on him as attaching creditor under section 91 (f), Transfer of Property Act, ceased to be available to him after the property had been sold in execution of his decree.

The Court (Sir Murray Coutts Trotter, C.J., and Ananta-krishna Aiyar, J.) made the following krishna

Aiyar, J.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.—Ananta-krishna Aiyar, J.—Plaintiff is the appellant in this appeal. In execution of a money-decree obtained by the plaintiff against Subbiah Pillai in O.S. No. 650 of 1910, the plaintiff attached the suit properties in October, 1913. Subsequently the plaintiff himself purchased the property in Court-auction on 9th March, 1914. The sale was confirmed on 9th April, 1914 and the plaintiff got delivery of property in enforcement of the sale certificate on 2nd December, 1914. The sale to the plaintiff was subject to a hypothecation in favour of Peria Ravutha Goundar for Rs. 200 over the suit property.

Peria Ravutha Goundar filed a suit (O.S. No. 537 of 1913) on 19th November, 1913, to recover money due on his hypothecation bond, making Subbiah Pillai party-defendant. The present plaintiff, however, was not made a party to that suit. The defendant, after obtaining the preliminary and final decrees in Suit No. 537 of 1913, himself purchased the properties in Court-auction on 27th March, 1916.

On the allegation that the defendant got into possession of the properties by trespass in May, 1916, the plaintiff filed the present suit on 2nd February, 1917, against Peria Ravutha Goundar for redemption of the defendant's mortgage for Rs. 200, dated 11th August, 1905, mentioned above. The defendant pleaded that he was the owner of the properties and that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem.

The Court of First Instance decreed redemption by the plaintiff on payment of Rs. 830-8-5 to the defendant.

The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the Lower Appellate Court on the ground that the amount he was directed to pay for redemption was too large and that he was entitled to redeem on payment of a smaller amount. At the hearing of the appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not entitled to any right of redemption at all, and consequently not only dismissed the plaintiff's appeal but reversed the decree of the first Court in plaintiff's favour and dismissed the suit in toto.

Two questions of law have been raised in the appeal to the High Court, one relating to the plaintiff's right to redeem and the other whether the Lower Appellate Court had jurisdiction in an appeal preferred by the plaintiff, not only to dismiss the plaintiff's appeal but further to reverse the decree passed in plaintiff's favour by the first Court, even though the respondent had not preferred any memorandum of objections or an independent appeal questioning the decree of the first Court.

To appreciate the first question it is necessary to state that the first Court relying on the decision reported in *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*¹ decided that a money decree-holder who had attached the mortgaged properties ought to have been made a party to the suit subsequently filed by the mortgagee to recover money due on the mortgage and that such attaching decree-holder was entitled to redeem the mortgage. It would appear that a later decision of the High Court dissenting from the view taken in *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*² was reported in the Law Reports [*Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*²] shortly before the appeal was heard by the Lower Appellate Court. Consequently according to the later ruling of the High Court, the plaintiff could not claim any right of redemption and consequently his suit for redemption ought to have been dismissed.

But the defendant had not preferred any independent appeal nor filed any memorandum of objections in the plaintiff's appeal questioning that portion of the decree passed by the District Munsif upholding the plaintiff's right to redeem. The Lower Appellate Court however was of opinion that under Order 41, Rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, the Appellate Court had jurisdiction to reverse even that portion of the first Court's decree though it had not been appealed against; and having regard to the circumstances of the case, it held that a case was made out for the exercise by it of the jurisdiction conferred by Order 41, Rule 33, Civil Procedure Code. Accordingly the Appellate Court not only dismissed the plaintiff's appeal but proceeded further and reversed the first Court's decree and dismissed the plaintiff's suit altogether.

It was argued before us that there is a conflict between the decision in *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*¹ and the decision in *Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*² on the question whether the right of redemption subsists in the plaintiff in such cases.

On the question of the power of the Appellate Court to interfere even with the portion of the decree not appealed against even if it thought that decision erroneous. in the absence of an appeal or memorandum of objections, various cases were quoted before us. The question relates to a matter of practice as regards jurisdiction and powers of Appellate Courts. It is essentially necessary and expedient that the law on such a point should be definitely and authoritatively laid down.

Having regard to the two questions of law aforesaid arising in this case, and for the reasons mentioned already, we think that this appeal should be decided by a Full Bench and we accordingly refer the whole case for the decision of a Full Bench.

On this reference the Letters Patent Appeal came on for hearing in the first instance before Sir Murray Coutts Trotter, C.J., Beasley (as he then was) and Madhavan Nair, JJ.

T. L. Venkatarama Aiyar for appellants.

The Court delivered the following

Madhavan
 Nair, J.

JUDGMENTS. Madhavan Nair, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant in the Letters Patent Appeal. He obtained a money-decree against Subbiah Pillai and one of his sons in O.S. No. 650 of 1910 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Madura. In execution of that decree he attached the suit property in October, 1913. Subsequently he himself purchased it in Court auction on 9th March, 1914. The plaintiff's purchase of the property was subject to a hypothecation in favour of the defendant for Rs. 200, dated 11th August, 1905. The sale was confirmed on 9th April, 1914, and in the enforcement of the sale certificate he obtained delivery of the property on 2nd December, 1914. In the meanwhile, the defendant filed a suit (O.S. No. 537 of 1913) on his hypothecation on 19th November, 1913 and got a decree on 18th December, 1913. To this suit the present plaintiff was not made a party. In execution of his decree, the defendant purchased the property on 27th March, 1916. Alleging that the defendant is in unlawful possession of the land the plaintiff filed the present suit against him for the redemption of his mortgage for Rs. 200. The defendant pleaded that he was the owner of the property and that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem. The first issue in the case was "whether the plaintiff has the right to redeem." When the case came on for trial, the defendant conceded this point in favour of the plaintiff as under the ruling in *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*¹ an attaching creditor has a right to redeem. The District Munsif passed a decree for redemption in favour of the plaintiff on payment of Rs. 830-8-5 to the defendant.

The plaintiff then preferred an appeal to the Lower Appellate Court on the ground that the sum he was ordered to pay was too large and that he should have been allowed to redeem on payment of a smaller amount. At the hearing of the appeal the defendant's vakil contended that the plaintiff's suit for redemption itself was not maintainable; and he represented that it was in view of the decision in *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*¹ that an attaching creditor has a right to redeem, that he conceded before the Lower Court the plaintiff's right to redeem but that the decision in *Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*² has now negatived such a right on the part of the attaching creditor. In the circumstances, the learned Subordinate Judge allowed the defendant to raise the contention under O. 41, R. 33, Civil Procedure Code; and though there was no cross-appeal or memorandum of objections by him, he upheld his contention and not only dismissed the plaintiff's appeal but reversed the decree of the first Court in plaintiff's favour and dismissed his suit in toto.

Against the above decree of the Lower Appellate Court the plaintiff preferred Second Appeal No. 88 of 1922, and urged before Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiff had no right to redeem and that he had no jurisdiction under O. 41, R. 33, Civil Procedure Code, to allow the respondent to raise this new plea. The learned Judge overruled both arguments and dismissed the second appeal. The present Letters Patent Appeal is against the judgment and decree of the learned Judge.

The same arguments have been addressed to us. It is first contended that the learned Judge erred in holding that the Lower Appellate Court had jurisdiction to dismiss the plaintiff's suit under O. 41, R. 33, Civil Procedure Code, when the respondent had filed neither an appeal nor a memorandum of cross-objections challenging the decree for redemption passed by the District Munsif and the provision of this rule should be read as subject to rule 22 of the said order, the Court Fees Act and the Limitation Act, etc. In support of this contention reliance is placed upon the true scope and meaning of O. 41, R. 33, as illustrated by the decisions in *Rangam Lal v. Jhandu*³, *Gangadhar v. Banabashi*⁴, *Abjal Majhi v. Intu Bepari*⁵, *Ramalingam Chettiar v. Subramania Chettiar*⁶ and Chockalingam Chetty v. Seethai Achi.⁷

“The Appellate Court shall have power to pass any decree and make any order which ought to have been passed or made and to pass or make such further or other decree or order as the case may require, and this power may be exercised by the Court notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree and may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, although such respondents or parties may not have filed any appeal or objection.

Illustration.

A claims a sum of money as due to him from X or Y, and in a suit against both obtains a decree against X. X appeals and A and Y are respondents. The Appellate Court decides in favour of X. It has power to pass a decree against Y.”

The rule has been newly introduced in the Code of 1908. Its object is clearly to enable the Court to do complete justice between the parties. Its terms are very wide and in a proper case it gives the Appellate Court ample discretion to pass any decree or make any order to prevent ends of justice from being defeated. By the very terms of the order, involving as it does an exercise of judicial discretion, the question whether the Appellate Court should exercise the powers conferred by them in a particular case would no doubt depend upon the special facts and circumstances of that case. The illustration to the rule is a type of one class of cases, which calls for the exercise of the powers conferred by R. 33; but it does not by any means exhaust the class of cases in which the powers of the Appellate Court under this rule may be invoked. Having regard to the wide language of the rule it is inexpedient to lay down any hard and fast rule regarding the true scope of this provision. In a proper case the Courts should not hesitate to use the powers conferred upon it by this rule.

The basis for the rule may be found in O. 58, R. 4 of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England. *The Attorney-General v. Simpson*⁸ is an instance of another class of cases justifying action under this rule. In that case, an action was brought by the Attorney-General on behalf of the public for two reliefs: (1) for a declaration that the public were entitled to the right of passage along a river including the locks without the payment of tolls; and (2) that the defendant was under an obligation to maintain the locks in an efficient state by repair. In the first Court a decree was passed declaring that the public were entitled to use the locks without payment of tolls, but it was also declared that the defendant was under no obligation to repair the locks. The defendant preferred an appeal against this decree. The plaintiff did not file either a cross-appeal or a memorandum of objections. The Court of Appeal found that the public were not entitled to use the locks without payment of tolls to the defendant; at the same time the Court expressed the opinion that the defendant was under an obligation to repair the locks, and passed a decree to that effect. The learned Judges pointed out that under O. 58, R. 4, they were entitled to make this declaration notwithstanding the fact that there was no appeal by the plaintiff "against so much of the judgment which declared that the defendant was not bound to repair and maintain the works".

In none of the cases brought to our notice has it been laid down that in an appeal preferred by the plaintiff against a portion of the decree, the Appellate Court has no jurisdiction in the absence of a cross-appeal or cross-objection to dismiss the whole suit and that the utmost that the Appellate Court is competent to do is to dismiss the appeal. No doubt, the learned Judges have remarked that the provision embodied in this rule should be used with care and caution; but that does not mean that the Appellate Court has jurisdiction under it to dismiss the plaintiff's suit in toto. The Court is not bound to interfere in every case in which it has the power to do so; it is in this connection that the question of judicial discretion comes in. There may no doubt be cases where no excuse or justification could be found for a party not having preferred an appeal or a memorandum of objections, in which cases justice may not require the exercise of powers under Order 41, Rule 33, and the Appellate Court will be well advised in not exercising such powers.

The decision in *Rangam Lal v. Jhandu*³ does not support the extreme contention urged by the appellant. In that case, the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant for rent of a holding and obtained a decree for a portion of his claim. The plaintiff then appealed with respect to the portion of his claim dismissed by the first Court. The defendant submitted to the order in so far as it was against him and neither filed a cross-appeal nor took objections under Order 41, Rule 22, Civil Procedure Code. The District Judge remitted certain issues to the first Court and on return of the findings dismissed the entire suit of the plaintiff holding that he had power to do so under Order 41, Rule 33, even though the defendant had not appealed against that part of the decree which was against him. On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned Judges held that it was not competent to the Appellate Court acting under Order 41, Rule 33, to interfere with the decree obtained by the plaintiff in so far as it had not been challenged by the defendant.

The true purport of that decision is explained in *Jawahar Bano v. Shujaat Husain Beg*⁴ in these words:—

“The Full Bench in that case held that, although the words of Order 41, Rule 33, were very wide and the Judge, strictly speaking, had jurisdiction to pass the decree which he had made (the italics are ours), still there was not a proper exercise of jurisdiction by him in that case. It was pointed out that in a case where there is no sufficient reason for a respondent neglecting either to appeal or to file objections, the Court will hesitate before allowing him to object at the hearing of the appeal.”

Distinguishing the case in *Rangam Lal v. Jhandu*³ with these remarks, the learned Judges upheld in *Jawahar Bano v. Shujaat Husain Beg*⁴ the exercise of power by the Appellate Court under O. 41, R. 33, Civil Procedure Code. In that case, a decree was passed for varying amounts against three defendants, of whom two only appealed, the third not being made a party to the appeal. It was held that it was competent to the Appellate Court to modify the decree in favour of the defendant who had not appealed by decreeing the whole sum due to the plaintiffs against the defendants who had.

The decisions in *Gangadhar v. Banabashi*⁴ and *Abjal Majhi v. Intu Bepari*⁵ also do not in our opinion support the extreme contention urged by the appellant. The learned Judges while pointing out that “ordinarily the power contained in Rule 33 should be limited to those cases where, as the result of the Appellate Court’s interference with the decree in favour of the appellants further interference is required in order to adjust the rights of the parties in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience," do not deny the Appellate Court's jurisdiction to interfere in a proper case. Jenkins, C.J., says in *Gangadhar v. Banabashi*⁴:

"There is no doubt that the words of that rule are widely expressed, but they must be applied with discretion."

And later on, the learned Judge adds:

"No hard and fast rule can be laid down."

A similar opinion is expressed by Mukerjee, J., in *Abjal Majhi v. Intu Bepari*⁵. It would thus appear that the statement of the learned Judges in *Ramalingam Chettiar v. Subramania Chettiar*⁶ that the two Calcutta decisions just now mentioned laid down that the exercise of the rules should be limited to cases where the Court has interfered in favour of the appellants and further interference is required to adjust the rights of parties, is not—with all deference to the learned Judges—quite accurate. There is no warrant for limiting the very wide terms of the rule only to this class of cases, though ordinarily it may be that it is in those cases occasions arise for exercising powers under the rule.

The decision in *Debendra Narain Sinha v. Narendra Narain Sinha*⁷ recognises the extensive jurisdiction of the Court under R. 33 of O. 41, Civil Procedure Code. The latest decision of the Calcutta High Court in *Jogendra Kishore Roy v. Nasimuddin Sardar*¹¹ shows unmistakably the view of that Court on this matter. The facts of that case are thus summarised in the headnote:—

"In a suit for the rent of a holding the first Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for a proportionate amount of the rent payable in respect of the land included in the plaint, on the ground that the holding covered more lands than were included in the plaint. There was no appeal (or cross-objection) by the defendant, but on an appeal by the plaintiff the Appellate Court held that having regard to the manner in which the suit had been framed, the plaintiff would be entitled to no relief and accordingly dismissed the entire suit of the plaintiff."

The High Court held—

"that having regard to the very wide powers given to an Appellate Court under O. 41, R. 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the decision of the Appellate Court dismissing the whole of the plaintiff's suit, in the absence of a cross-appeal or cross-objection by the defendant, was not without jurisdiction."

The following observation appearing in the judgment gives a complete reply to the arguments urged by the appellant before us:—

“There can be no doubt that the wording of R. 33 is very general and in this respect gives very wide powers to the Court of Appeal. But the learned vakil for the appellant, however, urges in reply that R. 33 is controlled by R. 22 and that the wide powers given by R. 33 can only be exercised in case the whole matter is brought into controversy before the Appellate Court by a cross-appeal or a cross-objection filed under R. 22. I am not satisfied that this is a correct view of the scope of R. 33.”

Our own Court has not dealt with this question except in the decision reported in *Ramalingam Chettiar v. Subramania Chettiar*⁶ already referred to. In *Gopala Aiyangar v. Mummachi Reddiar*¹² the learned Judges, “to be consistent,” gave relief to a defendant though he had not appealed or joined in the memorandum of objections filed by some of the respondents. The Privy Council in *Chockalingam Chetty v. Seethai Achi*⁷ observes that under O. 41, R. 33, Civil Procedure Code, the Appellate Court is empowered, in a proper case, to add a defendant as respondent to the appeal for the purpose of passing a decree against him though their Lordships “saw no sufficient reason for interfering with the refusal of the Appellate Court to do so” in that instance. On the whole, we are satisfied that in a proper case the Lower Appellate Court has jurisdiction to exercise its powers in favour of the respondent by dismissing the plaintiff’s case in toto though the respondent did not prefer a cross-appeal or memorandum of objections challenging the decree passed by the first Court.

As already stated whether interference was justified or not would depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. In the case before us, the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that at the time when the appeal was filed the law that prevailed in Madras with regard to the plaintiff’s right to redeem was what was laid down in *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*¹ and that therefore the respondent could not take exception to the District Munsif’s decree by preferring an appeal or cross-appeal. But by the time the appeal came on for hearing before him, the report of a decision of this Court refusing to follow *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*¹ appeared in Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama

*Aiyar*². Relying on this decision respondent raised the question before the Lower Appellate Court. In these circumstances the Subordinate Judge held that there was sufficient excuse or justification for the respondent not having preferred an appeal or a memorandum of objections. With this view Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., also agreed. If, therefore, the Subordinate Judge's decision that the case in *Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*² really has overruled the decision in *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*¹ is correct, then we cannot say that he was wrong in exercising his discretion under O. 41, R. 33, and dismissing the plaintiff's suit in toto, though the respondent had not filed an appeal or a memorandum of cross-objections. The question for decision in this Letters Patent Appeal therefore reduces itself to this: Has the plaintiff-appellant in this case no right to redeem in view of the decision in *Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*²? As already indicated this question was decided against him both by the Lower Appellate Court and by the learned Judge whose decision is now under appeal.

The case will be posted for further hearing on this point.

Sir Murray Coutts-Trotter, C.J.—I agree.

Beasley, J.—I agree.

The Letters Patent Appeal came on for further hearing before Beasley, C.J., Anantakrishna Aiyar and Curgenvén, JJ.

T. L. Venkatarama Aiyar for appellants.—An attachment confers on the creditor a right to redeem. After the decision in *Soobhul Chunder Paul v. Nitye Churn Bysack*¹³ the legislature advisedly includes attaching creditor in S. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act. The attaching creditor ought to have been made a party to the mortgage suit.

[ANANTAKRISHNA AIYAR, J.—If he has a right to redeem, why is he not a necessary party?]

Under S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act the attaching creditor was a necessary party. See *Ghulam Husain v. Dina Nath*¹⁴ and *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*¹. Order 34, Rule 1; Civil Procedure Code, does not modify the law in this respect. An attaching creditor is "a person having an interest in the right of redemption" within the meaning of that section. Reference was made to *Lakshpat Rai v. Fakhr-ud-din*¹⁵ and *Shananda Chandra Pal v. Sri Nath Ray Choudury*¹⁶. The right of the attaching creditor is the same as that of puisne mortgagees who have been held to be necessary parties. The result of non-joinder of a necessary party is stated in Mulla Vittil Seethi v. Achuthan Nair.¹⁷ The decision in *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*¹ gives effect to the provisions of S. 91(f) while the other decisions in *Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan*¹⁸ and *Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*² render them nugatory. Not having been made a party to the mortgage suit the attaching creditor is not bound by the sale and is entitled to redeem.

P. R. Srinivasan for respondents.—There is a distinction between the right to redeem given by S. 91, Transfer of Property Act, and the proper constitution of a mortgage suit which is governed by O. 34, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code. It is one thing to say that the attaching creditor can intervene before the sale in order to exercise his right to redeem, another thing that the suit is bad because of non-joinder. Refers to O. 1, R. 9, Civil Procedure Code.

It is well settled that an attachment confers no interest in the property attached. Section 91 (f) merely confers on the attaching creditor a privilege to institute a suit for redemption. Section 91 enumerates the persons entitled to redeem. In the first two clauses persons having a legal interest, that is, an interest in the property, are enumerated. The subsequent clauses mention persons who for special reasons are given a personal right to redeem. There is a distinction between the two categories. The interest under clauses (a) and (b) is one in the property which can be created only by a registered instrument.

Order 34, Rule 1 makes it obligatory to implead only those persons having an interest in the mortgage property or right of redemption specified in clauses (a) and (b) of S. 91, Transfer of Property Act.

The second argument is that the right of the attaching creditor to redeem is extinguished by reason of the Court sale. If he purchases the property he loses the right to redeem qua attaching decree-holder but becomes entitled to redeem as owner of the mortgaged property under clause (b) of S. 91.

18. (1919) I.L.R. 43 M. 696; 39 M.L.J. 456.

In either case the judgment-debtor's interest having gone the attachment also goes. The right to redeem is conferred on the attaching creditor simply to work out his rights under the attachment and have the property sold for the best possible price. *Venkata Seetharamayya v. Venkataramayya*¹ is a case where the question was raised before the sale. Once the sale is held the right of redemption specially conferred on the attaching creditor is extinguished. Reference was made to *Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan*¹⁸ and *Chaniyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*². Further, the plaintiff having purchased the mortgaged property pendente lite, the proceeding in the mortgage suit will be binding on him, and his right of redemption will be extinguished by the sale in execution of the mortgage decree.

T. L. Venkatarama Aiyar replied.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.—This Letters Patent Appeal raised two important questions of law, one turning on the construction to be placed upon O. 41, R. 33, Civil Procedure Code, and the other on S. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act read with O. 34, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code.

The first question has been answered in favour of the respondents and against the appellant by a Full Bench of this Court at an earlier stage of this Letters Patent Appeal.

The only other question that remains for decision is whether the plaintiff, on the facts stated in the Order of Reference, is entitled to redeem the 1st defendant's mortgage. The plaintiff was a money decree-holder against the judgment-debtor, the mortgagor, and in execution of his money-decree he attached the mortgaged properties. Pending the attachment, the 1st defendant, the mortgagee, filed a suit to recover the money due upon his mortgage but he failed to make the plaintiff who was then the attaching decree-holder a party to his suit on the mortgage. In course of time the plaintiff became purchaser in Court-auction in execution of his money-decree and obtained possession. The mortgagee, the plaintiff in the other suit, also became purchaser in execution of the decree passed on the foot of his mortgage. The question that arises in the present suit is whether the plaintiff, the attaching decree-holder who subsequently became also the auction-purchaser in execution of the money-decree, has got the right to redeem the mortgage on the ground that S. 91 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act gives him such a right to redeem since he was not made a party to the mortgage suit.

∴ The first point that arises for consideration in this connection is as to the exact scope of the expressions appearing in S. 91 (a) and (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, namely, "a person having any interest in or charge upon the property" and "any person having any interest in or charge upon the right to redeem the property" read along with O. 34, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code, "all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption." I am clear that the cases contemplated by S. 91 (a) and (b) exhaust the class of cases contemplated by O. 34, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code, and that it is only persons interested in the mortgage security or in the equity of redemption that have necessarily to be made parties to a suit under O. 34, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code. This is the view that has been taken in *Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*² and in *Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan*¹⁸. It is also clear that attachment in execution of a money-decree does not itself create any interest in or charge over the properties which are the subject-matter of the attachment. This has been decided by the Privy Council in *Moti Lal v. Karrabuldin*¹⁹ and is not open to question. Having regard to the construction placed on S. 91 (a) and (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, and to the view taken regarding the scope of O. 34, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code, it seems to me that it could not be said that a person in the position of the plaintiff, namely, an attaching decree-holder in execution of a money-decree against the mortgagor is a necessary party to a suit under O. 34, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code.

The question then arises whether the plaintiff, simply because under clause (f) of S. 91 he is given a right to redeem, as an attaching decree-holder, is entitled in the circumstances that have happened in this case to claim redemption. It has been held by Oldfield, J., in *Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan*¹⁸ that any rights he might have qua attaching decree-holder are not available to him when the properties have been sold in execution through Court; and that view has been accepted by two learned Judges of this Court, Sir John Wallis, C.J., and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in *Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*². It was argued that, if under clause (f) an attaching decree-holder has been given a right to redeem, then, whatever might be the exact category under which the right could be placed, not having been a party to the mortgagee's suit, his rights could not vanish. The answer to this is furnished in the judgment of Oldfield, J., and the other learned Judge in *Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan*¹⁸. The Legislature evidently saw the impropriety of retaining clause (f) of S. 91 after the Priy' Council made it clear that an attachment as such does not create any title to, or interest or charge on, the properties attached in favour of the attaching decree-holder, and has accordingly omitted clauses (f) and (g) from the section in the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929. The case is not consequently of any general importance and could not arise under the present law; and I am not prepared in the circumstances to reconsider the point decided by the three learned Judges of this Court in *Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan*¹⁸ and *Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar*² whose observations I have already referred to and I respectfully follow their opinion on this point. It follows that this contention raised by the learned Advocate for the appellant should fail. The Letters Patent Appeal should, for these reasons, be dismissed.

But having regard to the fact that the Lower Appellate Court exercised the rather extraordinary jurisdiction that Courts have under O. 41, R. 33, Civil Procedure Code, and granted a decree in favour of the respondents though the respondents had not preferred an appeal to it, and for that reason directed that they should have no costs of the litigation, I think that this Letters Patent Appeal should, in the circumstances, be dismissed without costs.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

PRESENT:—MR. JUSTICE REILLY AND MR. JUSTICE CORNISH.

V. M. Raghavalu Naidu and Son

(Plaintiffs)

v.

The Corporation of Madras

.. Respondent
(Defendant).Raghavalu
Naidu
v.
Corporation
of Madras.

Madras City Municipal Act (IV of 1919), Ss. 98, 129, Sub-Ss. (1) and (3), 349 (2) and (29)—Bye-laws made under—Validity—Misquotation of authority—Effect of—Rule requiring application for refund to be made 48 hours before export—Abrogation of the statutory right of refund—Penalty of forfeiture—No express power to impose—Ultra vires.

Subsidiary legislation by bye-law, if it is to be valid, must come clearly within the powers given to the body making it by their controlling statute.

A rule framed by a rule-making authority is not ultra vires merely because the provisions of the statute under which the authority purported to act do not in fact confer any such power, provided it had such power under some other provision of law. Misquoting their authority by oversight or mistake does not take away any power or authority conferred by law.

Rajam Chetty v. Seshayya, (1895) I.L.R. 18 M. 236: 5 M.L.J. 114 (F.B.) and Secretary of State for India in Council v. Appa Rao, (1923) 45 M.L.J. 156, referred to.

S. 129 (1), proviso 2 of the Madras City Municipal Act (IV of 1919) confers an unqualified right to a refund of the timber tax on the exporter when any timber in respect of which tax has been paid is exported beyond the City. Bye-law No. 8, purporting to have been made by the Corporation of Madras under S. 129 (3) and S. 349 (2) of the Act, provides that an application for refund of timber-tax should be made at least forty-eight hours before the date of the intended export. In a suit to enforce a claim for refund of the tax which was resisted by the Corporation on the ground that this bye-law had not been complied with,

Held, the bye-law in question was not authorised by either of the two sections: the former relates to seizure and sale of timber in respect of which the tax is not paid, the latter to collection of taxes. They have nothing to do with the refund of taxes. Nor is it covered by S. 129 (1) which deals with the fixing of the rates—a power different from that of regulating the refund of the tax.

But the words “and the purposes of this Act” in S. 349 (29) of the Act are wide enough to give the Corporation power to make the bye-law. That is a general and residuary provision to cover all purposes of the Act, one of which is the making of refunds of timber-tax.

That does not, however, conclude the question of its validity. The bye-law is subject to the further restriction imposed by the section itself that it should not be “inconsistent with the Act”. It is perfectly reasonable, of course, to provide that the right to refund should be clearly proved or that applications for refund should be made in a certain form or at a certain time and place but a bye-law, the penalty for the breach of which amounts to a complete abrogation of the statutory right of refund, defeats the very purpose of the Act; such a rule is beyond the power of the Corporation to make.

When a power to make regulations is given to a public body by statute, no regulations made under it can abridge (or impose unreasonable conditions on) a right conferred by the statute itself.

Queen v. Bird, (1898) 2 Q.B. 340, followed.

A bye-law cannot impose a penalty of forfeiture unless such a power is expressly conferred by the statute.

Kirk v. Nowill, (1786) 1 T.R. 119; 99 E.R. 1086, referred to.

The bye-law in question is, therefore, ultra vires.

On appeal from the judgment and decree, dated 30th March, 1928, and passed by the Honourable Mr. Justice Beasley (now Chief Justice) in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in C.S. No. 356 of 1927.

Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar and V. Ramaswami Aiyar for appellants.

Vere Mockett for respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. Reilly, J.—The plaintiffs in this case are a firm of timber merchants trading in Madras. They claimed from the Corporation of Madras refunds of timber-tax on a large number of lots of timber, on which they alleged that they had paid timber-tax when importing them into Madras, and which they alleged they had afterwards exported from Madras. The Corporation, who are the defendants in this case, refused to make the refunds. The plaintiffs then sued the Corporation for the total of the refunds claimed by them. The suit was heard by the learned Chief Justice, as Mr. Justice Beasley, and he dismissed it. The plaintiffs appeal.

In their written statement the defendants maintain that the plaintiffs did not satisfy them that these lots of timber were timber on which tax had been paid when imported into Madras, and that the plaintiffs did not comply with certain bye-laws made by the Corporation, and that, therefore, they were not entitled to the refunds claimed. Under section 98 of the Madras City Municipal Act the Corporation may levy a tax on timber brought into the City. Under section 129 of that Act the tax shall be levied at such rates and in such manner as may be determined by the Council of the Corporation, provided that the rates shall not exceed Rs. 5 a ton, and provided that, when any timber in respect of which tax has been paid is exported beyond the city, nine-tenths of the tax levied thereon shall be refunded. The plaintiffs, as I have said, applied for these refunds on the ground that they had exported timber on which they had already paid tax when it was imported. The ground of refusal on the part of the Corporation which occupied attention at the trial of the suit and at the hearing of this appeal is that the plaintiffs did not make their application for refund 48 hours before the timber was exported, as required by a certain bye-law made by the Corporation. That bye-law is Bye-law No. 8, published in a notification with other bye-laws in the Fort St. George Gazette on the 27th September, 1921. It runs:

"Such application (that is an application for refund of timber tax) shall be made at least 48 hours before the date of the intended export beyond the limits of the city and shall be accompanied by the original receipt granted on import thereof."

That last word "thereof" is a little peculiar; but we need not spend any time on that. The defendants say that they can enforce that bye-law, which according to them is a valid bye-law, by refusing to give the refund if it is not complied with. The plaintiffs contend that the bye-law, in the sense in which the defendants wish to enforce it, is beyond the power of the Corporation to make.

Now that bye-law with the other bye-laws in the notification I have mentioned purports to have been made under sections 129 (3) and 349 (2) of the Madras City Municipal Act. I think it is quite clear that that bye-law cannot have been made and could not be made under section 129 (3) of the Act, which runs:

"The Council may make bye-laws for the seizure and sale of timber in respect of which the tax due is not paid."

Could it have been made under section 349 (2)? The learned Chief Justice is of opinion that it could be made validly under that section. With respect I feel bound to differ from him on that point. Subsidiary legislation by bye-law, if it is to be valid, must come clearly within the powers given to the body making it by their controlling statute. Section 349 (2) of the Act runs:

"The Council may make bye-laws, not inconsistent with this Act or with any other law, to provide for the regulation of the time and mode of collecting the taxes, duties and tolls under this Act."

The learned Chief Justice says in his judgment:

"In my view the words 'collecting the taxes, duties and tolls under this Act' must include the question of refunds of the tax so collected."

With that opinion I am unable to agree. The collection of taxes to my mind is one thing: the refund of taxes is quite another thing. In respect of many taxes which are collected there is no right in anybody to claim a refund. If the Legislature gives any subordinate body the power to impose a tax, that is a power to require some person to pay the tax. The duty in that case is upon the tax-payer. If the Legislature gives the tax-payer the right to claim a refund in certain circumstances, then the duty is upon the other party, upon the body which collects the tax. And to give power to make bye-laws regarding the collection of taxes, the time and manner in which they are to be paid by those persons from whom they are due, appears to me an entirely different thing from giving power to make bye-laws about the conditions on which the Corporation or other body concerned is required to perform its duty of refunding the tax. I cannot find any authority in section 349 (2) empowering the Corporation to make bye-laws in regard to the refund of taxes.

Raghavulu
Naidu
v.
Corporation
of Madras.

Reilly, J.

Then could the Corporation make this bye-law under any other section of the Act? It has been suggested for the plaintiffs, that, as the Corporation purported to make these bye-laws under sections 129 (3) and 349 (2) of the Act, it is of no interest to us whether they could have made Bye-law No. 8 under any other section of the Act and that they must be confined to the power to which they themselves have appealed and under which they have purported to make the bye-law. On the other hand Mr. Mockett for the defendant has contended that, if a bye-law-making body quotes, when promulgating a bye-law, some provision which is inapplicable, that bye-law may yet be quite valid, provided the bye-law-making body had authority to make it under some other provision of law: misquoting their authority by oversight or mistake does not take away any authority given by law. On that question I agree with Mr. Mockett's contention. That is clearly the view which was taken by a Full Bench of this Court in *Rajam Chetty v. Seshayya*¹ and it is the view which was adopted and applied by Mr. Justice Krishnan in Secretary of State for India v. Appa Rao.² No authority to the contrary has been quoted before us.

Let us see then whether this bye-law could have been made by the Corporation under any other provision of the Act. The learned Chief Justice is of opinion that it could have been made by the Corporation under section 129 (1) of the Act. That sub-section provides:

"The tax on timber brought into the City shall be levied at such rates and in such manner as may be determined by the Council."

There again I must differ from the learned Chief Justice. I do not think that out of a power of fixing the rates at which, and the manner in which, the tax must be paid you can get a power to regulate the refund of that tax. But Mr. Mockett has urged before us, what does not appear from the record or from the learned Chief Justice's judgment to have been urged before him, that this bye-law could have been made by the Corporation under section 349 (29) of the Act. That runs:

"The Council may make bye-laws, not inconsistent with this Act or with any other law, to provide in general for securing cleanliness, safety and order and the good government and well-being of the city and for carrying out all the purposes of this Act."

Mr. Mockett contends that these words "for carrying out all the purposes of this Act" are wide enough to give the Corporation power to make this bye-law. On the other hand it is contended for the plaintiffs that we must regard the words "for carrying out all the purposes of this Act" as controlled by the earlier words in that sub-section "securing cleanliness, safety and order and the good government and well-being of the city" and it is contended that making refunds of tax would not come within these expressions. Here again I agree with Mr. Mockett's contention. I do not think this is a case in which we can apply the rule in regard to the interpretation of generic words following specific words. The words here are not "and other" or "the other" purposes of the Act. They are much wider than that. They are "for carrying out all the purposes of this Act." That appears to me to be a general and residual provision to cover all the purposes of the Act which have not been specifically mentioned in the earlier paragraphs of the section. The making of refunds of timber tax may be legitimately said, I think, to be one of the purposes embraced in the Act.

But does it follow that the Corporation can make such a bye-law as they have made in this case regarding refunds of timber tax? I agree with Mr. Mockett's contention that, even if there is—and I think there clearly is—a duty imposed by section 129 on the Corporation to make these refunds, we need not read the Act in so unreasonable a way as to suppose that it is the duty of the Corporation officials to run round the town to find exporters of timber and thrust refunds upon them. The reasonable way of interpreting the provision regarding refunds is that the Corporation must pay refunds when properly applied for by those who are entitled to them. I think we may go further and agree with Mr. Mockett that the Corporation may reasonably require exporters who claim refunds to show to their satisfaction that refunds are due to them. Indeed I did not understand that this was seriously contested by the other side. It would be perfectly reasonable in my opinion for the Corporation to issue a notification inviting exporters who claim refunds to apply at a certain office or in a certain form or at a certain time, provided the invitation and its details were reasonable. If an exporter claiming refund did not comply with those details, I think the Corporation might well do nothing in the matter and leave it to the exporter to sue them, if he thought fit; and in such a case it is probable that, if the exporter's conduct had been unreasonable in not applying in the way he was invited to do or not giving proper information to the Corporation officials, he would lose his costs and he might perhaps have to pay the Corporation's costs, even if he succeeded in getting his refund decreed. But all that is a very different thing from making a bye-law such as has been made in this case. A bye-law, as Lord Russell said in *Kruse v. Johnson*³, is:

"An ordinance imposed by some authority clothed with statutory powers ordering something to be done or not to be done and accompanied by some sanction or penalty for its non-observance."

Now here we have a duty imposed by the Act on the Corporation to make refunds of nine-tenths of the tax paid on timber, if it is exported from the City. Can the Corporation make a bye-law, enforced by a penalty, compelling the person who has the corresponding right of demanding the performance of that duty to apply for it in a particular way or at a particular time? If we look at the penalty ostensibly imposed in this group of bye-laws, we find that under Bye-law 14 any person offending against any of these bye-laws shall be punishable with a fine which may extend to fifty rupees. To apply that to Bye-law 8 appears to me on the face of it absurd, and Mr. Mockett has agreed that that penalty cannot really be applicable to Bye-law 8. Here we have an exporter, who has a right to claim a refund under the Act, and this Bye-law 14 imposes upon him a penalty up to Rs. 50 if he does not apply at a particular time. Supposing he does not think it worth while to apply at all, how can the Corporation have the power to impose a penalty in that way? Realising that that would be absurd, the Corporation has not attempted to impose that penalty on the breach of this Bye-law 8. What they claim to do is to enforce another penalty, namely, if the application is not made 48 hours before the time of export, to penalise the exporter by not giving him the refund at all. It is worth noticing that the power to impose penalties for infringing bye-laws is given under section 351 of the Act, and that only provides for penalties of fine. Then where does the Corporation get this power to impose an entirely different penalty, the loss of the refund? To my mind, if the Corporation could make a bye-law ordering the applicant for a refund to make his application in a certain way or at a certain time, they could not impose this particular penalty, that, if he did not comply with that bye-law, he should lose his right to the refund altogether. And I may go further and say that in my opinion the Corporation has no power in this matter, in which they have a duty to perform and the exporter has a right to claim, to promulgate any bye-law, enforceable by a penalty, compelling an exporter to do some particular thing.

That would, I think, be enough for the disposal of this appeal. But several other matters have been discussed at length before us, and I shall just say a few words about them. The learned Chief Justice was of opinion that at any rate this Bye-law 8 was a reasonable bye-law, that there was nothing unreasonable in requiring an exporter to give 48 hours' notice of his export, if he wanted to get a refund. With that view I am unable to agree. I think it can easily be shown that quite apart from any question of the power of the Corporation to make this bye-law, as it stands, without qualification, without provision for exceptional circumstances, it would be an unreasonable bye-law. Suppose that a Government Engineer or a private person sends an order to Madras to-day from some place a few miles outside the City for the urgent supply of some timber required to prevent the collapse of a bridge or a factory. If this bye-law stands good, no one from Madras could send out timber either to-day or to-morrow, however urgently it might be required (other than timber grown in Madras, of which we all know there is comparatively little) except on pain of losing all right to the refund of nine-tenths of the tax, to which he is entitled under the Act. That appears to me to show that we cannot say that this bye-law, as it stands, without qualification and without provision for exceptional circumstances, is even a reasonable bye-law.

But, reasonable or not in itself, if it is enforced, does it not obviously curtail the right of the exporter to get his refund? In effect the Corporation say by this bye-law:

"Though we are bound to give the refund of this tax by the Act, we will not do so in certain circumstances, that is, unless you give us 48 hours' notice before export."

Mr. Mockett has contended that the bye-law, in that sense, can be regarded as carrying out the purposes of the Act. To my mind it could more properly be described as defeating, or at any rate restricting, the purposes of the Act in respect of refunds.

A large number of cases have been quoted before us; but I do not think it necessary now to refer to more than one or two of them. In *Queen v. Pavolett*⁴ there was a right of appeal to the Quarter Sessions, given by the statute. The Court of Quarter Sessions added by a rule of practice an additional condition that such an appeal must be entered so many days before the Sessions began. That additional condition, though regarded by the Divisional Court as very convenient, was held to be invalid. A still more instructive case is that of *Queen v. Bird*⁵. Mr. Mockett suggested that that case was not applicable here. To my mind it is both very instructive and applicable. By the Licensing Act of 1872 a provisional licence granted by the Licensing Justices had to be confirmed by the County Licensing Committee, before whom a person who had opposed the licence before the Licensing Justices might appear and oppose its confirmation; and under the Act the Justices in Quarter Sessions had to make regulations for the meetings of the Committee and the transaction of its business and proceedings. The Justices in Quarter Sessions for the County of London made rules that any one intending to oppose the confirmation of a provisional licence must give notice within seven days after the grant of the provisional licence and must enter into recognizances in the sum of £20. The Divisional Court held that, though the rule about notice was reasonable and proper in itself, the rules were ultra vires, because they imposed fresh conditions on the objector's right to oppose the confirmation, which had been given to him by the Act. Mr. Justice Wills declared it—

“a principle too clear to need the support of authority that, when a power to make regulations is given to a public body by statute, no regulations made under it can abridge a right conferred by the statute itself.”

Is not that what the Corporation has attempted to do in this case? The exporter has a right to claim this refund, if he exports timber. The Corporation has in effect attempted to abridge that right by saying that it shall not have effect unless a further condition is fulfilled, unless the application is made 48 hours before the export. The learned Chief Justice at the close of his judgment said that in his opinion the effect of this bye-law is only this: “Prove to our satisfaction that it is the same timber and you will get a refund.” With respect, in my opinion, that is a serious under-statement of the effect of this bye-law, as the defendants contend they are entitled to enforce it. Surely it would be more correct to say that what the defendants maintain is the effect of this bye-law is:—

“Pove to us by giving us notice 48 hours before you export the timber that it is the same timber on which you have paid tax: otherwise we will not make the refund.”

In my opinion this bye-law, in the sense in which the defendants maintain they have a right to enforce it, is entirely beyond the power of the Corporation to make.

There was another aspect of the case which was put before us, namely, that the Act gives the exporter a certain right to nine-tenths of the tax which he has paid and that, if the Corporation take away that right to the nine-tenths, as they claim they may do in certain circumstances, they are working a forfeiture of the exporter's right. On that point *Kirk v. Norwill and Butler*⁶ was quoted before us, in which Lord Mansfield said that a bye-law could not impose a penalty of forfeiture unless the power to make it was expressly given, and Mr. Justice Buller said that the invalidity of a bye-law to that effect was made more clear by the fact that the power to impose a penalty by fine was expressly given in that case. That case also is interesting in connection with the present case and shows that there is another defect in this bye-law. But I do not think in the circumstances it is necessary to discuss that any further.

I may add that the defendants raised a plea of limitation; but, so far as the record goes, nothing appears to have been said about that at the trial, and nothing has been said about it before us.

In my opinion this appeal must be allowed. The result of that is that the plaintiffs' claim to these refunds has still to be disposed of. The learned Chief Justice said that, if he had agreed with the plaintiffs that this bye-law was beyond the power of the Corporation to make, he would have referred the case to the Official Referee in order that he might report on which of these lots of timber import tax had been paid, as that was disputed by the defendants and had not yet been made out by the plaintiffs. Mr. Mockett suggested that the proper course would be rather to send the case back to the Corporation in order that they might now satisfy themselves whether the tax had been paid on these lots of timber. Now that the case has come before the Court, I think that cannot be done. The question what is due to the plaintiffs must be decided by the Court. And, if the case is not to go back to the Corporation, the defendants, I understand, do not object to its being referred to the Official Referee, to which the plaintiffs also agree. But, before that is done, it has been suggested before us that the parties should be given an opportunity to see whether they cannot agree that import tax was paid on all or any of these lots of timber. It appears to me very reasonable that they should be given an opportunity to do that, and in my opinion the most convenient course will be to make an order that this matter should be referred to the Official Referee, as the learned Chief Justice suggested, for a report by him which of these lots of timber have been actually exported and on which of them import tax was paid, but with the qualification that the matter will be adjourned for a month in order that the parties may have an opportunity of seeing whether they cannot agree in respect to all or some of the items on this part of the case. For the purpose of the proposed settlement documents produced by either party may be delivered to them out of Court on application.

In regard to costs the proper order in my opinion will be that the defendants shall pay the plaintiffs the costs of this appeal. Costs in the suit will remain to be dealt with when the final hearing of the suit is completed. The case should now go back to the Original Side for further proceedings.

Cornish, J.—I agree. In my opinion the Corporation bye-laws, even assuming they are intra vires, do not justify what the Corporation has done. There is no rule in the bye-laws which in terms empowers the Corporation to penalise an applicant by refusing a refund of tax because he has not complied with the bye-laws. Rule 8 on which the Corporation relies simply says this:

Cornish, J.

"Such application (that is, an application for refund) shall be made at least 48 hours before the date of the intended export beyond the limits of the city, and shall be accompanied by the original receipt granted on import thereof."

Neither this rule nor any other rule says that, on non-compliance with these requirements, the applicant is liable to forfeit the refund. The only penalty fixed by the bye-laws for a breach of them is that contained in R. 14, namely, liability to a fine of Rs. 50 on conviction. If, therefore, it is an offence against the bye-laws not to give the Corporation at least 48 hours' notice of an intended export of timber as a condition to an application for refund, the utmost penalty to which the offender is exposed by the bye-laws is a fine of Rs. 50. The bye-

But apparently R. 8 is intended to mean a good deal more than what it says, and the Corporation claims that it is entitled by this rule to refuse a refund of the tax if the application for refund is not made within the prescribed time. That is the claim asserted in paragraph 5 of the written statement. Whether this is a valid claim depends upon whether the bye-law is valid. I do not think that the bye-law in question has any relation to section 129 (3) which confers the power to make bye-laws for the seizure and sale of timber which has been imported without paying the tax. Nor do I think it necessary to decide whether the power given by section 349 (2) to make bye-laws "for regulating the time and mode of collecting the taxes" is wide enough to include a power to make bye-laws for regulating the time and mode of refund. In my view, section 349 (29), with its power to make bye-laws "in general for carrying out all the purposes of the Act," is comprehensive enough to include the power to make regulations governing the refund of tax. But all bye-laws made under section 349 are subject to the restriction imposed by the section itself, that "the council may make bye-laws not inconsistent with the Act or with any other law."

Now, section 129 (1), second proviso, definitely enacts that when any timber in respect of which tax has been paid is exported beyond the city, nine-tenths of the tax shall be refunded. An unqualified right to a refund is given by the Act. But no one could suppose that a refund of the tax is to be had from the Corporation simply for the asking. The Corporation has obviously the right to require that it shall be satisfied by proper evidence that a refund can be claimed. It is only right and reasonable, therefore, that the Corporation should have the power to make bye-laws for regulating the procedure to be followed in applications for a refund of tax; and, as I have said, I think section 349 (29) gives the Corporation power to make bye-laws for this purpose. But a bye-law which professes to take away or abridge the right to a refund given by section 129 would be clearly inconsistent with the Act; and if it is inconsistent, it is ultra vires. The authorities which have been referred to by my learned brother leave no doubt on that point. I will only supplement those authorities with a reference to a passage from the judgment of Shephard, J., in *Rajam Chetti v. Seshayya*¹:

"Now it is a recognised principle of law that the rules made in pursuance of a delegated authority to that effect must be consistent with the Statute under which they came to be made. The authority is given to the end that the provisions of the Statute may be the better carried into effect, and not with the view of neutralising or contradicting those provisions."

Rule 8 of the Corporation bye-laws undoubtedly does neutralise and contradict the right to refund given by section 129. (1), because, as interpreted by the Corporation, it means that the Corporation can refuse to allow an applicant to prove his right to a refund, unless he has given with his application 48 hours' notice of the intended export of timber; and for that reason, in my opinion, this rule is ultra vires.

I agree with my learned brother in the proposal to refer the matter to the Official Referee.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), S. 251—Mercantile firm—Authority of partner to draw and accept bills and hundis—Hundis taken in renewal—Right to sue on original hundis.

In a mercantile trading firm a partner has implied authority to draw and accept bills of exchange or hundis on behalf of the firm.

Bunarsee Dass v. Gholam Hossein, (1870) 13 M. I. A. 358, followed.

Where the implied authority of the partner to accept hundis has been expressly cancelled, the firm will nevertheless be liable on the hundis to a holder in due course, unless it is established that he had knowledge of such cancellation.

Quaere, whether the mumib of a mercantile trading firm has, by custom or otherwise, authority to accept hundis on the firm's behalf.

Where a hundi is drawn by way of renewal of and in substitution for a previously accepted hundi, the substitution is conditional on the substituted hundi being accepted by the drawee. Where it is not so accepted and the condition is, therefore, unfulfilled, the original accepted hundi remains in full force as against the acceptor, and he is liable to be sued upon it.

v.

The Unao

Consolidated Appeals No. 93 of 1928 from four decrees of the High Court, Allahabad, dated the 19th October, 1926. Three of the said decrees affirmed three decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 21st September, 1923, whilst one decree reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 21st September, 1923, with the result that the four suits which had been instituted by the plaintiffs-respondents were decreed with costs.

The facts appear sufficiently fully from their Lordships' judgment.

The plaintiffs' case was shortly that two Cawnpore firms drew hundis on the Calcutta firm which were discounted by the plaintiffs and accepted by the Calcutta firm through the medium of their ~~agent~~, Shambu Ratan, and subsequently dishonoured. In Suit No. 187 it was further stated that when hundis Nos. 7 and 8 were not paid on due presentation, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 asked for a renewal of the hundis for sixty-one days, which the plaintiff Bank accepted on condition that 3rd defendant (the drawee), Moti Lal Bisheshar Nath, accepted such renewed hundis; that according to this arrangement 1st defendant drew hundis Nos. 9 and 10 in lieu of the unpaid hundis, but these hundis being presented at Calcutta for acceptance the drawees refused to accept them; that the renewal of the hundis was granted on the express understanding that the same would be accepted by the drawees, but as they did not accept them the former hundis remained subsisting and enforceable.

The defendant-appellant pleaded that he was not liable because--

1. The drawings by the Cawnpore firms and the acceptances of Shambu Ratan were part of a conspiracy between Bisheshar Nath, Shambu Ratan and others.

2. That Shambu Ratan had no authority to write the acceptances.

3. That as to the hundis Nos. 7 and 8 the causes of action upon them had gone because hundis Nos. 9 and 10 had been taken in their place by the plaintiff-bank.

As to the first point mentioned above, the Trial Judge held that the drawings and acceptances were made and written as part of a conspiracy, but that the Banks were not parties to the conspiracy. The High Court on appeal held that there was no evidence to presume any knowledge of any of the officials of the Bank of this conspiracy.

As to the second question, the Trial Judge held that the bills were accepted by Shambu Ratan when presented for acceptance at the defendant-appellant's firm at Calcutta; that Shambu Ratan had no written authority to accept bills in the name of the Calcutta firm, but that by reason of the custom or local usage of Calcutta under which a mumib transacting business in a firm such as the Calcutta firm can accept hundis although there is no written authority or duly executed power-of-attorney in his favour, he had ostensible authority to do so, and that there was no limitation of such implied authority given or known to the plaintiff-banks. The High Court in appeal agreed with the Subordinate Judge that Shambu Ratan had accepted the bills, and according to the usual commercial custom and practice, Shambu Ratan had authority to accept the hundis. They also held that under section 27 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, an agent's authority to accept bills need not be in writing, and that the authority given to Shambu Ratan was proved, and sufficient to bind the defendant-appellant's firm.

As to the third point mentioned above, the learned Trial Judge held that the contention of the defendant-appellant was good in law, and he, therefore, dismissed the suit of the plaintiff-Bank in reference to hundis Nos. 7 and 8. The High Court, on appeal, took the contrary view. After referring to the judgment of the Judicial Committee in *Torrance v. Bank of British North America*¹ the learned Judges held that the taking of bills Nos. 9 and 10 was only a conditional extinguishment of the rights of action on bills Nos. 7 and 8, and that as bills Nos. 9 and 10 were never accepted by the Calcutta firm, and were never paid, the right of action on bills Nos. 7 and 8 still enured for the benefit of the holders.

Motilal Bisheshar Nath. The partners in the firm of Motilal Bisheshar Nath were the appellant and Bisheshar Nath.

Of the 10 hundis, 8 were accepted in the name of Motilal Bisheshar Nath, by the *munib of the firm. The remaining two hundis were drawn by way of renewal of and in substitution for two of the eight accepted hundis, but were never accepted.

The eight hundis were discounted by one or other of the respondent banks, and all the hundis were dishonoured at maturity.

The banks in four suits sued Motilal Bisheshar Nath, and others on the hundis. All four suits were heard together.

Three of the suits related to the six accepted hundis in respect of which there were no renewal hundis given. On the 21st September, 1923, the Subordinate Judge at Cawnpore made decrees in these three suits for payment by Motilal Bisheshar Nath of the amounts of the six hundis. These decrees were affirmed by the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad on the 19th October, 1926.

The fourth suit related to the remaining two accepted hundis and the two unaccepted hundis intended to be substituted for them. This suit was dismissed on the 21st September, 1923, by the Subordinate Judge, as against Motilal Bisheshar Nath, on the ground that there was no acceptance by Motilal Bisheshar Nath of the substituted hundis, and that the plaintiffs' right to sue Motilal Bisheshar Nath on the original hundis had been lost by the taking of the substituted hundis.

On appeal in the fourth suit, the High Court held that Motilal Bisheshar Nath was liable on the two original hundis.

Motilal has appealed to His Majesty in Council against the decisions of the High Court in all four suits.

Both Courts below held that all the hundis were drawn pursuant to a conspiracy to which the drawing firms, Bisheshar Nath, and the munib of Motilal Bisheshar Nath were parties, having for its object the raising of money from the discounting banks in fraud of Motilal.

It is admitted that no consideration passed to the firm of Motilal Bisheshar Nath for accepting the hundis, and the Subordinate Judge held that the discounting banks had no notice of this fact or of the conspiracy. This finding was concurred in by the High Court.

The firm of Motilal Bisheshar Nath was a mercantile trading firm. The Subordinate Judge held that the munib of such a firm has, by custom, authority to accept hundis on the firm's behalf. The High Court held that the munib was authorised, in fact, by Bisheshar Nath to accept the particular hundis in question as it was essential for the carrying out of the conspiracy that they should be so accepted.

The implied authority of a partner in a mercantile firm to draw and accept bills on behalf of the firm is well recognised. In the judgment of this Board, in Bunarsee Dass v. Gholam Hossein,³ the principles affecting the matter were stated at p. 363. in the following terms:—

"The proposition of law applicable to these facts is well known and indisputable. Every one of the partners in a mercantile firm of ordinary trading partnership is liable upon a bill drawn by a partner in the recognised trading name of the firm, for a transaction incident to the business of the firm, although his name do not appear upon the face of the instrument, and although he be a sleeping and secret partner.

"In order to take a case out of these principles of the general law, it must be shown that the holder of the bill knew at the time he received it that the transaction was the private affair of a single partner."

In their Lordships' opinion the finding of the High Court that Bisheshar Nath in fact authorised the munib to accept the eight hundis in question was correct, and even if (which was not established) the implied authority of Bisheshar Nath to accept hundis had been expressly cancelled by Motilal, no attempt was made to prove that such cancellation was brought to the knowledge of the discounting banks. In these circumstances, their Lordships think that the discounting banks were entitled to recover against Motilal Bisheshar Nath upon the accepted hundis, subject in the case of two of those hundis to the question next to be considered as to the effect of the substitution therefor of the two unaccepted hundis.

In their Lordships' judgment the High Court arrived at a right conclusion in holding that Motilal Bisheshar Nath was liable on the two accepted hundis for which unaccepted hundis were substituted. The substitution was conditional on the substituted hundis being accepted by Motilal Bisheshar Nath. They never were so accepted. The condition was, therefore, unfulfilled and the original hundis remained in full force as against Motilal Bisheshar Nath.

In the result, therefore, their Lordships are of opinion that these appeals fail and should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Hindu Law—Widow—Surrender in favour of daughter's sons—No evidence of consent of daughters—Validity.

The principle applicable to the power of surrender by a Hindu widow is well settled. She can renounce in favour of the nearest reversioner if there be only one, or of all the reversioners nearest in degree if more than one at the moment. That is to say, she can, so to speak, by voluntary act operate her own death. In other words, she can accelerate the estate of the heir by conveying absolutely and destroying her life-estate.

Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden, (1918) L.R. 46 I.A. 72: I.L.R. 42 M. 523: 36 M.L.J. 493 (P.C.) and Behari Lal v. Madho Lal, (1891) L.R. 19 I.A. 30: I.L.R. 19 C. 236 (P.C.), relied on.

A Hindu widow executed four deeds by which she purported to dispose of the whole of her deceased husband's property in favour of her daughters' sons, the daughters being then alive.

Held, that the transaction did not amount to a valid surrender under the Hindu Law, as the widow did not renounce her interest in favour of the nearest reversioners, who were her two daughters and who took no interest in the properties under the said deeds.

Quære, whether the surrender by the widow would have been valid if the daughters had in fact consented to and acquiesced in the transaction carried out by the aforesaid deeds.

Appeal No. 1 of 1928 from a decree, dated the 15th October, 1925, of the High Court, Madras, which reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 30th September, 1921, of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram.

The material facts of the case, for purposes of the present report, are sufficiently set out in their Lordships' judgment.

The judgment of the High Court is reported in *Rama Aiyar v. Narayanaswami Aiyar*¹. In dealing with the question of surrender by the widow, Mr. Justice Ramesam (Reilly, J., concurring), of the High Court, observed as follows at page 319:—

"The requirements of a surrender are now well established by various decisions of the Privy Council. The leading case is *Behari Lal v. Madho Lal*². In *Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden*³ Lord Dunedin describes it as an effacement which opens the estate of the deceased husband to his next heirs at that date. In the present case, as the intermediate heirs consist of not only the widow but also the daughters, in order to effectuate a surrender in favour of daughters' sons there must be an effacement

De Gruyther, K.C., for appellants.—A surrender by the widow, with the consent of the daughters, is valid.

[SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.—It is well established that a widow can surrender in favour of the next reversioner, but can she surrender to a person who is not then the next reversioner?]

[LORD THANKERTON.—The surrender must be to the immediate next reversioner.]

Refers to *Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy*⁴ and *Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden*³. The Board there affirmed the doctrine that even if the conveyance be in favour of a third party, it would operate as a valid surrender, if it was of the whole estate and was made with the consent of the nearest reversioners.

The surrender need not be definitely to the next heir if that next heir agrees to be passed over: *Mulugu Kotayya v. Mudigonda Chandramowli Sastri*⁵.

The form of the transaction is quite immaterial: *Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prashad*⁶.

The surrender here was bona fide and not a mere device to divide the estate with the reversioners: *Sureshwar Misser v. Maheshrami Misra*⁷.

[LORD THANKERTON.—You must show that in substance there was a surrender in favour of the daughters, although in form in favour of their sons. Lord Dunedin's judgment is quite explicit. It must be "with the consent of the nearest heirs for the time being."] if the daughters did not consent, it would not be a valid surrender at all".]

[SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.—The authority of the Full Bench judgment in *Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy*⁴ is somewhat impaired by subsequent decisions.]

[LORD THANKERTON.—The widow could surrender only either to all the nearest reversioners, or with the consent of all the nearest reversioners. The documents here do not on the face of them show consent of all the nearest heirs.]

The daughters' subsequent conduct, and their presence at the time must be taken to show that they consented at the time, i.e., it is proof as to their original consent.

19th June, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir Lancelot
Sanderson.

SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON.—This is an appeal by the defendants (Nos. 1 to 8 and 10 in the suit) from a decree, dated the 15th October, 1925, and two judgments, dated the 15th August, 1924 and the 15th October, 1925, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, reversing a decree, dated the 30th September, 1921, made by the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram. The first four respondents are plaintiffs in the suit and the remainder of the respondents are pro forma defendants.

The suit was brought by five surviving sons of one Lakshmiammal. Since the institution of the suit one of the sons, Subramania Aiyar, died; the third and fourth plaintiffs are his legal representatives.

The two questions in this appeal are whether a transaction entered into by Thayammal, the widow of one Ananthakrishna Aiyar, in the year 1867, constituted a valid "surrender" under the Hindu Law, and if not, what would be the proper compensation payable to the defendants 1, 3 and 4 in respect of a building which had been erected by the vendees on part of the land.

The suit was brought by the plaintiffs as reversioners of Ananthakrishna Aiyar for possession of his properties after the death of the last intermediate female in 1918. The material facts are as follows:—

4. (1884) I.L.R. 10 C. 1102 (F.B.).

Ananthakrishna Aiyar died in 1858 leaving a widow Thayammal and two daughters Thailammal and Lakshmiammal. The widow died about 1868-70. Her first daughter died in December, 1901. She had three sons, all of whom died before 1918 leaving no issue. The second daughter died in 1918 leaving the five plaintiffs surviving her. They are, therefore, reversioners to the estate of Ananthakrishna Aiyar and are prima facie entitled to his properties. The following pedigree shows the relationship of the parties:—

The facts on which the defendants resist the suit are as follows:—On the 22nd July, 1867, the widow Thayammal executed four documents (Exs. III, IV, V and VI). By Ex. III she purported to sell her house to her eldest grandson, Ramaswami Aiyar, for Rs. 400. The object of this sale was ostensibly to pay off Rs. 300 promised to Lakshmiammal at the time of her marriage and Rs. 100 similarly to Thailammal. By Ex. V she conveyed lands in Radhanallur worth Rs. 380 and movables of the value of Rs. 20 to the same Ramaswami Aiyar in consideration of his having performed the funeral ceremonies of Ananthakrishna Aiyar and of his undertaking to perform her funeral ceremonies. In Anaithandavapuram she had $\frac{1}{2}$ pangu of lands. She gave away $\frac{1}{4}$ pangu to Ramaswami Aiyar by Ex. VI, and the other $\frac{1}{4}$ pangu to Rama Aiyar (the eldest son of the second daughter) by Ex. IV. The defendants contend that these documents amount to a surrender by Thayammal accelerating the reversion: that they also amount to bona fide family settlement and that no reversion devolved on the plaintiffs in 1918.

By two deeds of sale, dated the 19th July, 1884, Ramaswami Aiyar and his brother Vaidyanatha sold the house and lands in Anaithandavapuram to one Muthu Aiyar, the father of the defendants 1 and 2, and the lands in Radhanallur were sold to Ramaswami Aiyar Avargal, the father of the 7th defendant.

From that time, the vendees and their representatives were in peaceful possession and enjoyment of the house and the land in Anaithandavapuram village, while the plaintiffs-respondents were in possession and enjoyment of their share of the lands in accordance with the documents of 1867. The vendees demolished the old dilapidated house and erected a new and substantial building on its site.

On the 22nd December, 1901, Thailammal died. Lakshmiammal then instituted Original Suit No. 12 of 1902 on the file of the Kumbakonam Subordinate Judge's Court for the recovery of the house and the land from the vendees of Ramaswami (her sister's son). Lakshmiammal's sons (except Rama Aiyar, the eldest son) also brought an action for a declaration that the alienation in favour of the appellants was not binding on them after the death of their mother, Lakshmiammal. The said two suits were tried together and the evidence for both suits was by consent recorded in the first suit. On the 9th December, 1903, the mother's suit was withdrawn unconditionally. The sons' suit was eventually dismissed on the ground of limitation, and the dismissal was affirmed by the High Court on appeal.

Lakshmiammal died on the 14th January, 1918, and on the 27th July the plaintiff-respondents and their deceased brother brought the present suit to recover possession of the lands mentioned in the plaint, of which the defendants were in possession, with other incidental relief. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, which allowed the appeal and directed the learned Subordinate Judge to submit findings on certain issues which had not theretofore been decided.

On the further hearing of the appeal, and on consideration of the findings as to the said issues, the High Court decided that the vendee under the deed executed by Ramaswami Aiyar and Vaidyanatha, and dated the 19th July, 1884, who was the father of the first defendant, bona fide believed that he was the owner of the property in 1898 when he executed an improvement in the building of the value of Rs. 4,000: that an improvement made in 1903 was on a different footing, inasmuch as the suits for the recovery of the property by Thayammal's daughter and grandsons had been filed and were then pending, and that the further expenditure of Rs. 1,500 was made before the suits were disposed of. The learned Judges held that it had not been shown that at that time the vendee bona fide believed that he was the owner of the property: they therefore decided that as regards the last-mentioned sum, the defendants were not entitled to compensation.

After estimating the increase in value since the improvements were made, the High Court fixed the compensation payable by the plaintiffs 1, 3, 4 and 5 to the defendants 1, 3 and 4 at the sum of Rs. 5,800.

The High Court accordingly made a decree directing that the plaintiffs should be put in possession of the properties mentioned in the plaint, and declaring that the defendants 1, 3 and 4 were entitled to compensation in the sum of Rs. 5,800 for the value of improvements effected in 1898, and that the plaintiffs 1, 3, 4 and 5 should either pay the said sum within the time to be fixed by the Lower Court and take the land and building, or sell the land to the defendants 1, 3 and 4 for the sum of Rs. 1,500, which was the agreed value of the land. A further order was made as to the removal of materials used in the improvement made in 1903 upon the terms and conditions therein contained.

The learned Judges of the High Court decided that there was no valid surrender by Thayammal, the widow of Ananthakrishna, on several grounds. They regarded it as an insuperable objection that the alleged renunciation in 1867 by the widow was not in favour of all the then reversioners: that there was a transfer of one set of properties to one group of reversioners (at the best), and of another set to another group, and that it was necessary to introduce a fictitious partition to read the transactions as a surrender: that there could not be a surrender in shares of three-fifths and two-fifths, and that apparently certain minors were unrepresented. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to express any opinion on any of the above-mentioned points, inasmuch as, in their opinion, the appeal should be disposed of upon another ground mentioned by the learned Judges.

The learned Judges of the High Court decided that there was not sufficient evidence to justify them in holding that the daughters Thailammal and Lakshmiammal surrendered their interests. Their Lordships are in agreement with the High Court's decision in respect of this matter.

It was argued, however, that the learned Judges had not considered the proper question, viz., whether the above-mentioned daughters had in fact consented to and acquiesced in the execution of the four deeds by their mother Thayammal in July, 1867.

Their Lordships have examined the evidence relating to this question, and they are satisfied that it falls far short of proving the alleged consent and acquiescence on the part of the two daughters.

There is not sufficient evidence to show that they or either of them knew the contents or appreciated the effect of the provisions of the deeds of the 22nd July, 1867.

This appeal, therefore, must be decided on the assumption that the above-mentioned daughters of Ananthakrishna did not agree to surrender their interests in the properties of their father, and that they did not consent to and acquiesce in the deeds of the 22nd July, 1867.

The principle applicable to the power of surrender by a Hindu widow is well settled and may be stated as follows:—

"A Hindu widow can renounce in favour of the nearest reversioner if there be only one, or of all the reversioners nearest in degree if more than one at the moment. That is to say, she can, so to speak, by voluntary act operate her own death. The landmark of decision as to this may be taken as the case of *Behari Lal v. Madho Lal*², where, in delivering the judgment of the Board, Lord Morris said: 'It may be accepted that according to Hindu Law, the widow can accelerate the estate of the heir by conveying absolutely and destroying her life-estate. It was essentially necessary to withdraw her own life-estate so that the whole estate should get vested at once in the grantee.'"

See the judgment of the Board delivered by Lord Dunedin in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden.³

It is clear that the widow, Thayammal, by executing the deeds in July, 1867, and disposing of her property thereby, did not renounce her interest in favour of the nearest reversioners. Her two daughters, Thailammal and Lakshmiammal, were the nearest reversioners, and they took no interest in the properties under the said deeds.

The conditions, therefore, necessary to create a valid surrender by the widow, Thayammal, were not present.

It was, however, argued on behalf of the appellants that the surrender by the widow was valid, because the daughters Thailammal and Lakshmiammal, consented to the transactions carried out by the deeds of July, 1867, so as to efface their own interests, and that consequently not only the interests of the widow, but also the interests of her daughters in the property, were effaced.

3. (1918) L.R. 46 I.A. 72: I.L.R. 42 M. 523: 36 M.L.J. 493 (P.C.).

Their Lordships are relieved from the necessity of expressing any opinion on the important question of law involved in this contention, in view of their above-mentioned conclusion that it was not proved that the daughters, Thailammal and Lakshmiamma, did in fact consent or acquiesce in the said transactions.

That conclusion is sufficient to dispose of the first part of the appeal, and for that reason, and without expressing any opinion on the other points hereinbefore referred to, their Lordships agree with the High Court that there was no valid surrender by the widow Thayammal of her interest in the properties of her deceased husband.

The only other question relates to the amount of compensation fixed by the High Court in respect of the improvements, viz., Rs. 5,800.

The appellants contended that the compensation for the house should have been at least on the basis of the Commissioners' valuation, viz., Rs. 10,000.

The High Court took Rs. 8,000 as the value of the whole structure; they held that the defendants, who were entitled to compensation in respect of the Rs. 4,000 out of Rs. 5,500 spent by their father, are entitled to eight-elevenths of Rs. 8,000—or roughly, Rs. 5,800.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the said sum of Rs. 5,800 is sufficient compensation. Indeed, they are not sure that the said sum is not too much; for the Rs. 8,000 was arrived at by the High Court by allowing an increase in value to the extent of about 50 per cent. upon the total expenditure of Rs. 5,500, whereas the High Court had decided—and their Lordships agree with the decision—that it was not shown that the father of the first defendant bona fide believed he was the owner of the property when he expended the sum of Rs. 1,500 (part of the total of Rs. 5,500) in 1903.

There is, however, no cross-appeal in respect of this matter, and the sum awarded by the High Court must stand.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

PRESENT:—MR. JUSTICE SUNDARAM CHETTY.

Velivalli Brahmaiah and others . . . *Petitioners (Accused).Brahmaiah
In re:Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), Ss. 265 and 537—Initials by a Magistrate in a judgment of a bench of three Magistrates—Whether signature would include initials—Legality of.

Where from the register of summary trials maintained by a First Class Bench of Magistrates, it was clear that a judgment in a case had been in fact signed by only two of the three Magistrates who had heard and decided the case, the other having only initialled, the question that had to be decided was whether S. 265 of the Criminal Procedure Code had been complied with and whether any non-compliance with the provisions of that section would amount to an irregularity which could be cured by S. 537 of the Code.

Held, (1) that a judgment of a Bench of Magistrates has to be signed as required by law and the requirements of public policy necessitate the writing of the full name of the Magistrate that signs the judgment and the mere putting in of the initials is not a sufficient compliance with the mandatory provisions of S. 265 of the Code.

(2) that the illustration to S. 537 of the old Code, namely, "the Magistrate being required by law to sign a document, signs it by initials only. This is purely an irregularity and does not affect the validity of the proceedings" being omitted in the amended Code, indicates that the legislature no longer views the defect pointed out in the aforesaid illustration as a mere irregularity not affecting the validity of the proceeding.

Petition under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the First Class Bench of Magistrates at Guntur in Summary Trial No. 879 of 1929.

V. Pattabhirama Sastri for petitioners.

K. Venkataraghavachariar for The Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is a petition by the accused 1 to 3 against the conviction and sentence of fine passed by the First Class Bench at Guntur. The charge against these accused was under Ss. 504 and 352 of the Indian Penal Code. Apart from the merits of the case, one objection that is taken against the legality of the conviction is, in my opinion, sufficient to set it aside. It is clear from the register of summary trials maintained by the aforesaid Bench, that the judgment has in fact been signed only (Cr.R.P. No. 893 of 1929).

Brahmaiah,

by two of the three Magistrates who heard and decided the case, the other having only initialled it. The mandatory provision in S. 265 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to the effect, that "a judgment shall be signed by each member of the Bench present taking part in the proceedings." There is no definition of the word "sign" in the Criminal Procedure Code. The word "signing" had been interpreted in some judicial decisions and that meaning can be safely adopted for purposes of the present case. In the two decisions of the Calcutta High Court, namely, *Nirmal Chunder Bandopadhyaya v. Saratmoni Debya*¹ and Mahabharsha Bankapore v. The Secretary of State for India,² the word "signing" has been taken to mean the writing of the name of the person who is the signatory, so that it may convey a distinct idea to others that the writing indicates a particular individual whose signature it purports to be. This question was considered in the first case in respect of a will and in the other case as regards a risk note to be signed and delivered to the Railway Company. In another Calcutta case, namely, Abdul Gafur v. Queen-Empress,³ the same question arose in connection with a warrant of arrest issued by a Criminal Court. That warrant was not signed by the Magistrate as required by S. 75 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but it bore only his initials. The legality of the warrant so issued was questioned and it was held that the warrant was not signed as required by law. In view of this defect and some other defect pointed out in that judgment, it was held that the person obstructing the execution of such a warrant could not be convicted under S. 186 of the Indian Penal Code. In a decision of this Court reported in Lakshmanacharyulu v. Venkataramanujacharyulu,⁴ it was held that for purposes of a valid acknowledgment under S. 19 of the Limitation Act, initials are not equivalent to signature. Though there is no direct authority in respect of the word "signed" occurring in S. 265, cl. (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code the meaning attached to that word in the aforesaid decisions can well-nigh be applied to it. A judgment of a Bench of Magistrates has to be signed as required by law and the requirements of public policy necessitate the writing of the full name of the Magistrate that signs the judgment and the mere putting in of the initials is not, in my opinion, a sufficient compliance with the mandatory provisions of S. 265 of the Code.

Brahmaiah,
In re.

In this connection, it must be considered whether the initialling by one of the Magistrates in the judgment in question instead of signing, is only an irregularity which can be cured under S. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In the old Code, an illustration was added to S. 537 as follows:—

“The Magistrate being required by law to sign a document signs it by initials only. This is purely an irregularity and does not affect the validity of the proceedings.”

But in the amended Code, this illustration is omitted. The repeal of this illustration in the amended Code clearly indicates that the legislature no longer views the defect pointed out in the aforesaid illustration as a mere irregularity not affecting the validity of the proceeding. The inference from the omission of this illustration is that the defect affects the validity of the proceeding and vitiates the conviction and sentence.

In the case of trials by a Bench of Magistrates the practice of some of the Magistrates not signing the judgments or putting in merely their initials instead of the full signature is to be deprecated. There seems to be also another practice, namely, that when copies of such judgments are given, the signature of the presiding Magistrate alone is copied, omitting the signatures of the other Magistrates (as was done in this case). Such a copy is obviously an incorrect one and it is inconceivable why the copy should be defective in this important particular. It is hoped that in future the Benches of Magistrates would strictly follow the mandatory provisions of the Code in the matter of signing judgments.

For these reasons stated by me, the conviction and sentence are vitiated by non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of S. 265 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The conviction and sentence have, therefore, to be set aside.

But in the circumstances of this case, it seems to me that the ordering of a retrial is useless and not in furtherance of public interests. I may also point out that though the offences complained of in the present case fell under Ss. 504 and 352 of the Indian Penal Code (as shown by the register), the conviction was under S. 323. There is absolutely nothing in the judgment to show how the accused could be convicted for hurt under S. 323, while the finding seems to be that their guilt was under Ss. 504 and 352.

In the result, the revision petition is allowed and the conviction and sentence are set aside. The fine, if levied, will be refunded to the petitioners.

Where the accused was charged under Ss. 201 and 203 of the Indian Penal Code as well as under S. 302, and was convicted by the Sessions Judge under the two former sections and acquitted under the latter, owing to its being not pressed against him, the question arose whether the accused could be so convicted before the Court was satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that he was not himself the murderer.

Held, that there was no illegality in the conviction under Ss. 201 and 203, as there was no misjoinder in charging an accused in the alternative with the main offence and under Ss. 201 and 203, nor anything irregular or improper in the Judge holding that while the accused himself was not free from the suspicion of being the actual murderer, he would none the less be convicted under Ss. 201 and 203 of the Indian Penal Code.

Reg v. Kashinath Dinkar, (1871) 8 Bom. H.C.R. (Cr.) 126, dissented from.

For the purpose of calculating the punishment to be awarded under S. 201, it is necessary for the Court to decide, not so much what offence—the evidence of which has been concealed—has been committed, as what offence the accused knew or had reason to believe had been committed.

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Bellary Division in Case No. 28 of the Calendar for 1929.

V. L. Ethiraj and M. C. Sridharan for appellant.

The Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Bellary under S. 201, Indian Penal Code, for giving false evidence about the murder of his wife in order to screen the real offender, and also under S. 203 for giving false information about the murder. He was also himself charged with the actual murder of his wife, but was acquitted on that. The facts of the case briefly were:—

On the 12th August, 1929, at about 10 A.M., the deceased woman took food to her husband. P.W. 4 saw her there. He next saw her being carried in an unconscious state by the accused and his brother towards her house. P.W. 5 saw people in her house applying restoratives to her, while the accused and his brother were giving out that the woman had been stung by a scorpion or bitten by a snake. She died at 4 P.M. The accused himself made the report to the Village Munsif (P.W. 6), saying that he suspected that she had been stung. The woman's father (P.W. 8) was suspicious and reported to the police who sent the body for post mortem. The Medical Officer, P.W. 1, found on the body four contusions three of them on the skull, and on dissecting he found there had been cerebral hæmorrhage. He was of opinion that that was the result of blows by sticks or stones on the head. He found no signs or symptoms of poisonous bite or sting.

The charge of murder was not pressed against the accused in the Trial Court, and the learned Sessions Judge held that the evidence did not prove that it was the accused who inflicted the injuries on his wife. He held, however, that he must have known who inflicted them on his wife and that his story to the Village Munsif was a false one, intended to screen the real offender. He, therefore, convicted him under Ss. 201 and 203, Indian Penal Code.

The learned Counsel for the defence raises a point of fact and a point of law. The point of fact is that as the injuries on the woman were hidden under her hair the accused did not genuinely know that she had been assaulted. But we do not think that there is any substance in this. For, the woman having been assaulted, the accused's story that she cried out she had been stung cannot be true. She must have cried out that she was being beaten and accused must have known that.

The point of law is that unless the Court is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that accused was not himself the murderer, he cannot be convicted under Ss. 201 and 203. This rests upon a proposition, affirmed in several rulings of various High Courts, that Ss. 201 to 203, Indian Penal Code, have no application to the person who actually committed the main offence mentioned in the sections, and that the person who committed the main offence cannot be himself found guilty of causing evidence of that offence to disappear or of giving false information about it. The earliest pronouncement on this point was in 1871 in a case Reg v. Kashinath Dinkar,¹ and this ruling has been followed, mostly without discussion or comment as if the proposition were self-evident, in various other cases. (Cf. Empress of India v. Krishna,² Queen-Empress v. Dingar,³ *Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress*⁴ and Emperor v. Ghanasham.⁵ The only pronouncement of this High Court on this subject which has been traced is in a parenthesis and obiter dictum at page 277 of Ramaswami Gbunden v. Emperor.⁶ Nowhere is the ratio decidendi of *Reg. v. Kashinath Dinkar*¹ examined. It seems to us to rest on a petitio principii. The reason given is that "as there is no law now which obliges a criminal to give information which would convict himself, it is evident that Ss. 202 and 203 could not apply to a person who committed that offence, that is, the offence which he knew had been committed." Obviously if there is no law to that effect then Ss. 202 and 203 will not apply. The question rather is whether Ss. 201 to 203 do not embody such a law. On the face of them there is nothing to show that they do not apply to the main offender himself. S. 44 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which is the generic section relating to the duty of persons to give information about grave offences including murder, and S. 45 (d) of that Code which lays on any owner or occupier of land the duty of giving information regarding the occurrence in his village of any sudden or unnatural death, do not in terms exclude the offender himself. These sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure would be relevant in a case under S. 202, Indian Penal Code, where it is necessary that the accused should be legally bound to give information regarding the offence; but even this qualification does not appear under S. 201 or S. 203. What is required there is merely that there should have been an offence and that the accused has given false information about it, with the added intention in the case of S. 201, Indian Penal Code, of screening the offender. We cannot therefore see wherefrom comes the proposition which is the foundation of *Reg. v. Kashinath Dinkar*¹ that there is no law which obliges a criminal to give information which would convict himself. There is such a law in the case of grave offences and sudden deaths, and in theory the offender himself could be convicted for breach of that law under Ss. 201 to 203, Indian Penal Code. In practice, no doubt, if he has been convicted of the offence itself, no Court will think it worth while to convict him also under Ss. 201 to 203, Indian Penal Code. If the proposition laid down in *Reg. v. Kashinath Dinkar*¹ is carried to its logical conclusion it would appear that it is improper to try an accused person, as the present accused has been tried, in the same trial under both Ss. 302 and 201, Indian Penal Code, because a perfect defence to S. 201 would be a plea and proof that he himself was the murderer, and an accused would be entitled to say that the plea he proposes to make to the charge under S. 201 will depend on whether he is acquitted or convicted of the principal offence; and that to call upon him to plead to the charge under S. 201 before and until he knows what the verdict on the murder charge is, would be to deprive him of his legitimate defence. It would also in a case where the Court regards proof of his complicity in the actual offence is insufficient to establish his guilt, compel the Court to let him go free, even though it is satisfied that he gained his acquittal on the main offence by his own concealment of the traces of the crime. This was exactly what happened in *Reg v. Kashinath Dinkar*¹ and it is hardly compatible with justice that the actual offender should escape conviction under Ss. 201 to 203 because he is the actual offender in the main crime while those who merely witnessed it but gave false information about it are punishable under Ss. 201 and 203. This means that the more successful a criminal is in concealing his own offence the more the law will assist him in escaping justice altogether, and unless the Court holds without reasonable doubt that the accused did not take part in the murder the Court is bound to give him the benefit of doubt and acquit him of offences under Ss. 201 to 203. The case reported in *Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress*⁴ is another practical example of how justice is defeated by such a theory of the law.

The true principle seems to be that there is no law preventing the main offender being convicted under Ss. 201 to 203, but in practice no Court will convict an accused both of the main offence and under these sections. But if the commission of the main offence is not brought home to him, then he can be convicted under Ss. 201 to 203. Therefore there is no misjoinder in charging an accused in the alternative with the main offence and under Ss. 201 and 203, Indian Penal Code, nor is there anything irregular or improper in a Judge holding, as the learned Sessions Judge has done in this case, that, while the accused is himself not free from the suspicion of being the actual murderer, he can be none the less convicted under S. 201 or 203. This position is not without authority, though as noted above most of the reported cases have followed Reg v. Kashinath Dinkar.¹ Most of these rulings have been considered in a judgment of the Punjab Chief Court in 1903 in *Buch v. King-Emperor*⁷ wherein it was held that an accused acquitted of the charge of committing a crime can be convicted under S. 201 in respect of the offence "with the commission of which he is no longer charged or liable to be charged" and the mere suspicion that an individual is the actual murderer or the facts that he has even had his trial and been acquitted of the offence of murder will not prevent his conviction under S. 201. A mere suspect or an acquitted accused is not in the eye of the law an offender within the meaning of S. 201. The reported ruling in *Teprinessa v. Emperor*⁸ is practically to the same effect, and also the ruling of a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Hammappa Rudrappa v. Emperor.⁹ Therefore there is no illegality in the conviction under Ss. 201 and 203.

This does not however conclude the case. It is clear that for the purpose of calculating the punishment to be awarded under S. 201, it is necessary for the Court to decide, not so much what offence—the evidence of which has been concealed—has been committed as what offence the accused knew or had reason to believe had been committed. So it was necessary to believe, on the assumption that the accused did not commit the main offence because he has not been convicted of that, what offence he believed or knew to have been committed. The Court must treat him as a stranger to the crime, as one who had merely witnessed it.

From that point of view we cannot on the evidence say that more is proved than that the accused knew that some one had hit his wife and that she had died in consequence. We are unable to conclude that he knew that the person who struck her had the criminal intention of killing her. It must have been clear however to the accused that his wife had died as a result of the blows given and that she at least suffered grievous hurt, and that is punishable under S. 325, Indian Penal Code, with imprisonment for seven years. Under S. 201 the accused is then liable to be sentenced to a maximum of one-fourth of that seven years. The learned Sessions Judge has sentenced the accused to rigorous imprisonment for five years. At the most he can be sentenced to one year and three-fourths. We think that it will be sufficient if he undergoes rigorous imprisonment for one year and we reduce the sentence accordingly.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), S. 27—Award, meaning of—Government backing out after reference to Court—Order regarding costs.

Once a proper reference comes before the Court, the order passed is an award, whether the Judge gives an additional amount or not, or whether the Acquisition Officer's decision is not upheld for some other reason, and there should be a direction regarding costs.

Where the award of the Collector was not upheld by the Court because the Government had backed out of the acquisition after the reference was made,

Held, that the claimant was entitled to his costs.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura, dated 6th February, 1928 and made in Land Acquisition Case No. 67 of 1926.

The facts which led up to the appeal were as follows:—

In a proceeding for the acquisition of certain plots of land the Revenue Divisional Officer made an award under S. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. The claimant thereupon preferred an application under S. 18 to the District Collector on the ground that the compensation was inadequate. The matter having been referred by the Collector to the Civil Court the following order was passed by the Subordinate Judge:—

"As the acquisition has been declared by the Government to be invalid the reference is incompetent and the proceedings are closed. The claimant claims costs. The reference having been declared to be invalid S. 27 has no application. There was no enquiry. I therefore pass no orders as to costs."

Against this the claimant preferred an appeal to the High Court on the ground that the Court had the power to award costs under S. 27 of the Land Acquisition Act.

T. L. Venkatarama Aiyar for appellant.

The Government Pleader for respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken that the appeal does not lie. It is contended that the order appealed against is not an award and Dembeswar Sarma v. The Collector of Sibsagar,¹ *Banshidhur Marwari v. The Secretary of State for India*² and *Sarat Chandra Ghose v. The Secretary of State for India*³ are relied on. In the first of these cases the application for reference was made beyond the time allowed. No reference ought to have been made in that case and the District Judge refused to make an award on that ground. The High Court held properly that no appeal lay. In *Banshidhur Marwari v. The Secretary of State for India*² the appeal was against an order refusing to restore a case dismissed for default. In *Sarat Chandra Ghose v. The Secretary of State for India*³ the order was made under S. 49 of the Act. All these cases are distinguishable.

Once a proper reference comes before the District Judge, his final order on it is an award whether he gives an additional amount or he gives no additional amount or whether the acquisition officer's award is not upheld for some other reason like the one in this case. S. 27 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act supports this conclusion. The words are "where the award of the Collector is not upheld."~ This is such a case the reason being that Government backed out of the acquisition. We overrule the preliminary objection.

As to the amount, it is stated before us—and we have no reason to disbelieve the statement—that Rs. 188 represents the total costs incurred including vakalat, stamp, pleader's fee and witness batta. Seeing that out of the ten adjournments which the case received, three were at the instance of the appellant and seven at the instance of the Government, we think Rs. 120 for batta and other expenses and Rs. 20 for pleader's fee, that is Rs. 140, is all the sum to which the appellant is properly entitled. We accordingly modify the order of the Court below by directing that the respondent will pay Rs. 140 towards the appellant's costs.

The respondent will pay the appellant's costs for the appeal.

Village Courts Act (I of 1889), S. 13—Jurisdiction—Whether suit for damages for breach of contract is cognizable by a Village Court—Meaning of “claims for money due on a contract.”

Two suits were brought for damages for breach of contract in the Panchayat Court of a village. The question is whether the words “claims for money due on a contract” in S. 13 of Village Courts Act include suits for damages for breach of contract, and as such cognizable by the Village Court.

Held, that not only upon a grammatical construction of the section where the word ‘due’ of itself rather connotes that the sum sued for must be ascertained but upon general considerations that the principles upon which damages should be awarded are not easily grasped except by trained lawyers and the discretion as to the amount of damages to be awarded may vary within wide limits, it cannot have been the intention of the legislature to include such suits as triable by a Village Court.

Petitions under section 115 of Act V of 1908 praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Munsif of Manamadura, dated 14th October, 1929, and made in O.P. Nos. 50 and 51 of 1929, respectively.

K. P. Panchapagesa Aiyar for petitioner.

A. Venkatarayaliah and L. Venkatanarasiah for respondent.
The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Two suits (C.S. Nos. 6 and 7 of 1929) for damages for breach of contract were filed in the Panchayat Court of Tiruchuli against the petitioner in these two revision petitions. The plaintiff in Suit No. 6, corresponding here to C.R.P. No. 1766 of 1929, appears as respondent. The respondent to the other petition is absent. The contention of the petitioner is that the Panchayat Court had no jurisdiction to try these suits, and upon this ground he presented petitions for transfer to the District Munsif of Manamadura under section 21 of the Village Courts Act. The learned District Munsif has dismissed the petitions and I am now asked to say that his decision on this question of jurisdiction is incorrect. The respondent in C.R.P. No. 1766 of 1929 raises the point that this objection to jurisdiction was not taken at the earliest possible moment, namely, in the written statement, and I find that while the written statement to C.S. No. 7 does contain such a protest, there is no corresponding plea in that to C.S. No. 6. I do not think, however, that this is a very serious objection. The Civil Procedure Code does not apply to proceedings before the Village Courts and we cannot expect litigants in such Courts to adopt the procedure which it lays down. The objection was taken before the District Munsif as a ground for transfer and must, I think, now be decided upon its merits.

The question depends upon the construction to be placed upon the words "claims for money due on contract" which under section 13 of the Act is one of the classes of suits cognizable by Village Courts. The learned District Munsif is of opinion apparently that because the Act applies to a Village Court, this phrase may be read in some vague or general manner. I am unable to follow him in this view or to agree that it is necessarily a nice distinction to distinguish between suits for money due on the contract and suits for damages due for breach of contract. Nor do I understand how he gains assistance from the terms of the provisos to section 13, because those clearly relate to the exclusion of special cases to which the body of the section would apply in their general aspect. I think that suits for money due on a contract are of a clearly definable nature, as, for instance, a suit for the price of goods sold or for wages for labour performed. These are ordinarily suits of a simple character and for ascertained sums. The word "due" I think of itself rather connotes that the sum sued for must be ascertained, but if we look to the nature of a suit for damages for breach of contract it appears to be of quite a different class from a suit to enforce the payment of money due under a contract, and moreover, it becomes extremely doubtful whether the Legislature can have intended to invest the Village Courts with power to try suits of this latter class. Such cases are often very difficult. The principles upon which damages should be awarded are not easily grasped except by trained lawyers and the discretion as to the amount of damages to be awarded may vary within wide limits. I think, therefore, not only upon the grammatical construction of the section but upon general considerations of this latter kind, it cannot have been the intention to include such suits as triable by a Village Court.

I must accordingly allow these petitions, set aside the orders of the District Munsif and direct him to transfer the two suits C.S. Nos. 6 and 7 of 1929 on the file of the Tiruchuli Panchayat Court to the file of his Court. The petitioner will get his costs in both the petitions in the two Courts.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920); as amended—S. 53—Two years' period—Computation—Amendment Act (X of 1930); S. 6—Retrospective effect.

S. 6 of the Provincial Insolvency Amendment Act X of 1930, which makes it clear that the period of two years mentioned in S. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 should be computed from the date of the presentation of the petition for adjudication, takes effect retrospectively so as to apply to pending proceedings.

The Court (Anantakrishna Aiyar and Cornish, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.—The 4th counter-petitioner T. Venkayya was adjudicated insolvent on 13th March, 1925, on a petition filed by a creditor on 4th February, 1924. The insolvent executed on 20th March, 1922, a sale-deed (Ex. II) and a mortgage deed (Ex. III) in favour of his wife, the first counter-petitioner. A petition was filed by the Official Receiver, Cuddapah, in the District Court on 7th August, 1926, for an order that Exhibits II and III be annulled and declared void as against the Official Receiver under section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920). The learned District Judge passed orders annulling Exhibits II and III and declaring them void as against the Official Receiver. The first counter-petitioner, the wife of the insolvent, has preferred this appeal; and on her behalf it was argued that the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to pass the order annulling the said transfers, because under section 53, he could do so only "if the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years after the date of the transfer." The question is whether transfers made within two years prior to the presentation of the petition for adjudication as insolvent, but which are beyond two years from the date of the actual order of adjudication, could be annulled under section 53 of the Act.

F. B

Thaticherla Pichamma
v.
The Official

There has been difference of opinion on this question among the several High Courts in India. The Calcutta and the Madras High Courts have taken the view that such transfers could be annulled if they are within two years prior to the date of the presentation of the petition for adjudication: see *Rakhal Chandra Purkait v. Sudhindra Nath Bose*¹; *Sankaranarayana Aiyar v. Alagiri Aiyar*², *Rangiah v. Appaji Rao*³ and *Venkatanarasayya v. Official Receiver, Godavari*⁴; whereas the High Courts of Bombay, Rangoon and Lahore have taken the opposite view: see *Nagindas v. Gordhandas*⁵, *Maung Pe v. Maung Po Htein*⁶ and *Hem Raj v. Krishen Lal*⁷. It was mentioned that the view of the Allahabad High Court is the same as that of the Madras High Court: Sheonath Singh v. Munshi Ram,⁸ but on referring to the report we find that the question before the Court was not with reference to any transfer prior to the date of the petition for adjudication but in respect of a transfer made by the insolvent between the dates of the presentation of the petition and the order of adjudication. The decision in *Hem Raj v. Krishen Lal*⁷ is that of a Full Bench of that High Court. The various arguments in support of the respective contentions have been set out in that decision and the Indian case-law on the point also is mentioned.

Under ordinary circumstances we should have felt bound to follow the three decisions of this High Court mentioned above, more especially as the learned Judges in *Venkatanarasayya v. Official Receiver, Godavari*⁴, "saw no reason for referring the question to a Full Bench" (see page 139). We ordinarily in the circumstances would have rest satisfied with throwing a strong suggestion that it is pre-eminently a case for the Legislature to intervene and make matters clear on such an important point; but we have been pressed with the change of language used in sections 51 to 55 and also section 73 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Though sections 53 and 54 deal with analogous matters, the words used in section 53 are—"If the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years after the date of the transfer" while the words used in the very next section, S. 54, are—"If such person is adjudged insolvent on a petition presented within three months after the date thereof". The wordings of the other sections 51, 52, 55 and 73 are also different. In a very recent case, *Ramanandi Kuer v. Kalawati Kuer*⁹, the Privy Council point out that:

"Where there is a positive enactment of the Indian Legislature the proper course is to examine the language of that statute and to ascertain its proper meaning, uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state of the law—or of the English law upon which it may be founded."

Though the Calcutta and the Madras decisions seem to carry out the policy of the Legislature, we are not clear whether the words of section 53, if interpreted according to the canon of construction enunciated by the Privy Council, support that interpretation. We think that in the circumstances the question should be decided by a Full Bench of this Court.

We accordingly refer for the decision of a Full Bench the following question:—

"Whether a transfer of property of the description given in section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920) made by an insolvent more than two years before the date of the actual order of adjudication but within two years of the date of the presentation of the petition for adjudication could be annulled by the Court under section 53 of the Act at the instance of the Official Receiver."

T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar for appellant.

B. Somayya and Kasturi Seshagiri Rao for 1st respondent.

G. N. Thirumalachariar for 2nd and 3rd respondents.

The opinion of the Full Bench was delivered by

Sundaram
 Chetty, J.

Sundaram Chetty, J.—The question referred to us for decision runs as follows:—

The decision of this question depends upon the correct interpretation of the wording in section 53 of the Act. The portion of the section relevant for our purpose is where it says that the adjudication of the insolvent should have been made within two years after the date of the transfer. As to the meaning to be attached to the point at which limitation has to be computed, there has been a conflict of judicial opinion. This High Court as also the Calcutta High Court has been of one opinion, namely, that a petition to annul an alienation can be filed if it is within two years before the presentation of the insolvency petition. The decisions of these High Courts proceeded on the view that the adjudication relates back to the presentation of the petition and following the view taken in the English decisions it has been so held. But a different view has been taken by the High Courts of Bombay, Rangoon and Lahore. The question of interpreting the section is not quite free from difficulty; but in view of the recent amendment of this section by Act X of 1930, which received the assent of the Governor-General on the 20th March, 1930, any doubt on this matter must be taken to have been set at rest.

The only point now to be considered is whether the amendment made by section 6 of this Act has a retrospective effect, that is, will apply to a pending proceeding such as the one in question. If by means of this amendment, a new or altered period of limitation is prescribed, then it may be for consideration whether such an alteration in the law will have retrospective effect or not; but what would appear from the Statement of Objects and Reasons in connection with this amending Act is that, in view of different interpretations having been put by several High Courts which led to a conflict of view, the Legislature wanted to set that doubt at rest by declaring clearly what the real meaning of the expression in the section was. By the insertion of the words "on a petition presented" after the words "is adjudged insolvent" the meaning is made clear and that meaning is in accordance with the view taken by this High Court and the Calcutta High Court. If the amendment in question has not introduced a new period of limitation but has only clarified the meaning of the old section, there is no doubt that it must be taken to apply to the present case. The recent Full Bench decision of this Court in *Veerappa Chettiar v. Subramania Aiyar*¹⁰ supports the view which we are taking. The case was in respect of an amendment made to a certain section in the Transfer of Property Act as to the meaning of the word "attestation" and it was held that that amendment had retrospective effect. It is difficult to distinguish in principle the present case from the one dealt with by the Full Bench. That being so, we think it unnecessary to canvass the decisions of the several High Courts which were given under section 53 of the Act before the amendment. District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), S. 80 and Schedule IV, Rr. 7, 8 and 9—Quinquennial revision—Assessment lists not properly signed or verified by Chairman—Particulars in columns not filled up—Validity—Taxing enactment—Construction of—Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Ss. 2, cl. (17) and 80—"Public officer"—Municipality, if a.

In the quinquennial revision of assessment of property tax in the Municipality of Anantapur made by a Committee appointed for the purpose, many of the columns in the assessment lists were not filled up when they were submitted to the Chairman. The lists contained the signature of the Chairman in the last but one page. One of them bore no date and the others were dated long before the lists were prepared. There was nothing else to show that the Chairman scrutinised and approved their contents and that he was satisfied with the revision.

Held, the assessment lists, in the absence of his statement in writing of the revised amount of assessment and his certificate of its correctness (as directed by Article 70 of the Municipal Account Code, 1926) cannot be said to be "revised by the Chairman" within the meaning of R. 8, Schedule IV.

Rule 7, Schedule IV of the Act states in imperative language that the Chairman shall enter the annual value of the area and the amount of tax payable. Where these columns were not filled up at all at the time of notice to the assessee calling on them to submit their objections, the omission is in violation of the statute, sufficient by itself to render the revision proceedings invalid. "Taxing enactments should be strictly construed. Conditions precedent to the imposition of any tax should be strictly complied with."

Municipal Council, Cuddapah v. M. & S. M. Ry. Co., Ltd., (1929) I.L.R. 52 Mad. 779: 57 M.L.J. 471, referred to.

Quære: If the omission to mention the specific date for hearing the objections in the notice issued under R. 9 of Schedule IV is such a vital defect as will vitiate the entire proceedings.

Where the resolution to increase the tax from the 1st April was passed and notified before that date, but was published in the District Gazette a few days later than that date, it cannot be said that the decision was given retrospective effect.

The Municipality is not a "public officer" within the meaning of Ss. 2, cl. (17) and 80 of the Civil Procedure Code and no notice prior to suit is necessary.

President of the District Board, South Kanara v. Gopalakrishna Bhatta, (1923) I.L.R. 46 Mad. 808; 45 M.L.J. 125 and Metropolitan Meat Industry Board v. Sheedy, (1927) A.C. 899, referred to.

The question, if the duty of revising the assessment books imposed by R. 8 of Schedule IV of the Act can be delegated by the Chairman to a Committee, left open.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff against the Municipal Council of Anantapur and its Chairman for an injunction restraining them from collecting house tax, education tax and water tax; and it raises the question of the validity of the quinquennial revision under the District Municipalities Act V of 1920, Schedule IV, Rule 8 of the annual rental value of the lands and buildings within the municipal limits in the official year 1927-28 and of the increase of the rate of the tax which was changed from $6\frac{1}{4}$ to $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. under S. 80 of the Act. The District Munsif dismissed the suit as against the Chairman and granted an injunction as against the Council. On appeal by the Municipal Council the decree of the Lower Court was set aside except as regards the enhancement of the rate of water tax. In this second appeal the plaintiff confines his relief only to the house tax.

The facts are briefly these: The plaintiff owns three houses, No. 305 in Ward No. 1 of the Municipality and Nos. 537 and 896 in Ward No. 2. Under rule 8 of Schedule IV of the District Municipalities Act which authorises the Municipal Chairman once in every five years to completely revise the "assessment books" proceedings were started in the Municipality of Anantapur in the official year 1927-28 for a revision of the annual value of the lands and buildings. On 23rd July, 1927, the Chairman proposed to the Council that a Committee be appointed to carry out the revision (see Exhibit N). A Anantapur.

Committee of three members of the Municipality was accordingly appointed by the Council for that purpose and the revised assessment lists were prepared by that Committee. Afterwards, two notifications were issued in the District Gazette (Exhibit D in English and Exhibit E in Telugu, dated 5th January, 1928). These were issued under the name of the Chairman and stated that the Municipal Council proposed to revise the assessments from 1st April, 1928, that revision petitions would be considered if submitted by the 6th February, and that revision lists could be seen in the Municipal Office from 11 A.M. to 5 P.M. daily. This notification was tom-tomed on 5th January, 1928 (see Exhibit V). No revision petitions were as a matter of fact received. On 28th January, 1928, the Chairman proposed that the rate of property tax now in force be raised to $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the rental value and this was passed by the Council (see Exhibit II-A, the minute book). On 5th February, 1928, the notice, Exhibit F, was issued in the District Gazette in the name of the Chairman that the Council proposed to levy house tax at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the annual rental value of each building with effect from 1st April, 1928, and that objections would be considered until 10th March, 1928. This information was also tom-tomed (see Exhibit V-B). No objections were received and the Municipal Council confirmed this rate in its resolution (Exhibit II-B, dated 17th March, 1928). This was published in the immediately next issue of the District Gazette, dated 5th April, 1928 (see Exhibit H) under the signature of the Chairman, dated 19th March, 1928, and was tom-tomed on the same date (see Exhibit V-D). The Gazette notification, Exhibit H, states that the new rates of the house tax at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the annual rental value would come into effect from 1st April, 1928.

On the above facts, it is argued that the revision proceedings are invalid, inasmuch as they were carried out not by the Chairman as required under the Act (see rule 8, Schedule IV), but by a Committee, that even if the delegation of the Chairman's powers to the Committee is valid, the procedure adopted by the Chairman and the Committee in carrying out the revision is vitiated by non-compliance with the statutory requirements, and that the notification calling for objections is invalid as it specified no date for hearing objections. These arguments relate to the validity of the quinquennial revision proceedings relating to the value of the lands and buildings. It is also argued that the enhanced rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. is unenforceable as the notification, Exhibit H, sought to give retrospective effect to the decision of the Municipality to enhance the rate. The respondent besides contesting these points argues that the plaintiff's suit is not maintainable for want of notice under S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Vasudeva Rao
v.
The Municipal Council,
Anantapur.

I shall first deal with the question of the validity of the quinquennial revision proceedings. What happened in this case has already been stated. On 23rd January, 1927, the Chairman proposed to the Council that a Committee be appointed to carry out the revision and a Committee of three members was accordingly appointed to carry out the work. The actual assessment list for the two Wards containing entries "relating" to the plaintiff's three houses, Exhibits A, B and C, were prepared by this Committee. Rule 8 of Schedule IV of the District Municipalities Act states that "the assessment books shall be completely revised by the Chairman." Having regard to this rule, it is argued that the Chairman should not have delegated the work of revision to anybody else and he having done so, the revision carried out by the Committee is not a revision in accordance with the Act and the whole proceedings are consequently invalid. I am not sure if this argument is correct. Pushed to its logical conclusion it may lead to absurd results. It is clear that the Chairman is not expected to do by himself all the work in connection with the revision proceedings. Provided he checks and accepts the work done by his employees, the final result will be his work for which he will be responsible. S. 18, cl. (1) and cl. (3) specially of the District Municipalities Act empower the Chairman to a certain extent, to delegate his executive powers to others. The Municipal Account Code, 1926 (second edition corrected up to 5th September, 1919), Article 70 provides the following procedure for a general revision:—"Under S. 66 (2) of the Act, the assessment books are to be completely revised by the Chairman at least once in every five years. Such revision should be conducted by the Chairman himself or by one or more Councillors deputed by him to carry out the revision in Wards other than their own. They may be assisted by Assessors if required. . . . As soon as the assessment list for a locality is completed, it shall be submitted to the Chairman for scrutiny and approval unless the list has been prepared by the Chairman himself. The Chairman after being satisfied with the revision shall countersign the assessment lists, the total amount of the assessment as revised being written in words and certified to by him." S. 66 (2) of the old Act under which this rule was framed corresponds to Rule 8, Schedule IV of the present District Municipalities Act. In the Government Edition of the Code, Rule 8, Schedule IV has not been substituted for S. 66 (2) (but it is conceded the rule is still in force). Reliance is placed on this rule by the respondent in justification of the procedure adopted by the Chairman in the present case. In the view that no more delegation than is countenanced by this rule is sought to be justified and having regard to my opinion, which I shall presently state as to whether this rule was complied with by the Chairman, it is not necessary in this case to consider the abstract question whether the duty of preparing the assessment list under Rule 8, Schedule IV can be delegated by the Chairman under the provisions of the District Municipalities Act. Assuming that the Chairman is entitled to carry out the work of revision through the Committee appointed by him or by the Council, the questions arising for consideration are: (1) how far has he in doing so complied with the procedure prescribed in Article 70 of the Municipal Account Code? and (2) how far has the Committee which is only an alias for the Chairman in carrying out the actual work of revision complied with the statutory requirements? The two questions will be discussed separately. Under Article 70 of the Municipal Account Code, (1) the assessment list shall be submitted to the Chairman for scrutiny and approval in case, as here, the assessment list has not been prepared by the Chairman himself, and (2) the Chairman shall write in words and certify the total amount of the assessment as revised and shall countersign the assessment list after being satisfied with the revision. On these questions generally considered, the learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that the Chairman has complied with this rule except in one particular, namely, that he did not write in words the total amount of the assessment as revised and certified to it and this omission the learned Judge is apparently of opinion is not a very material defect and does not vitiate the proceedings.

I am not satisfied that the provisions of the rule have been followed by the Chairman in this case. I shall not at present refer to what I consider to be the illegalities committed by the Commissioners in the preparation of the lists. That question, as I have said, I shall discuss separately. The evidence in the case shows how casually and carelessly the work of revision was carried out in this Municipality. The assessment lists were prepared by the sub-committee in December, 1927. When these were sent to the Chairman (i.e., "the Vice-Chairman in charge" during the proceedings is to be understood as "Chairman") it is admitted that many of the columns had not been filled up by the Commissioners. How this omission on their part affects the validity of proceedings will be described later. What is important here to notice is that except the signature of the Chairman contained in these assessment lists, there is nothing in them to show that the Chairman scrutinised and approved their contents and that he was satisfied with the work of revision. As already pointed out, "the total amount of the assessment as revised" has not been "written in the words" by him nor has its correctness been certified to by him as specifically required by Article 70. We are asked to infer from the signature of the Chairman appearing in these lists and from the mere signature alone that every condition which is imposed upon him by this Article has been complied with by him. The previous assessment in 1923 was also carried out by a Committee. The present Chairman was a member of that revising committee, and that Committee submitted a report along with the assessment (see Exhibit IV). It is admitted that no such report has been submitted by the Committee in the present case. The usefulness of such a report is obvious. It would naturally elucidate the procedure adopted by the Committee, explain how the figures mentioned in the lists were arrived at, and state generally how the revision was carried out, so as to enable the Chairman when the lists are submitted to him to scrutinise and approve them, so that when the lists finally emerge out from the office with his signature and certificate, it might be truly said that the revision has been carried out by him as required under Rule 8 of Schedule IV. I do not state that the absence of such a report would vitiate the proceedings; I am only pointing out how such a report would be useful to the Chairman and also helpful to the Court when the available evidence is very meagre in dealing with the question whether the Chairman would be presumed to have really scrutinised and approved the lists prepared by his deputies. As I have said, we are asked to draw all the necessary inferences in support of the validity of the assessment lists in this case so far as the Chairman's part in its production is concerned from the mere signatures which appear in the lists. Can we do so is the question? These signatures do not appear at the end of the lists. In the assessment list containing Exhibit A the signature of the Chairman without any date appears at page 14. There are two entries relating to two assesseees at page 15, the last page of that assessment book. There is no signature of the Chairman on that page. The omission is not accounted for. Even if it should be held that we should infer the approval of the Chairman from his signature alone, how can we say that the entire list is approved by him when his signature does not appear on the last page? In the second assessment book relating to entries, Exhibits B and C also, the Chairman's signature appears on the last but one page and below it appears the date, 20—10—27. The last page contains the names of various people and entries in the columns as against those names. There is no signature of the Chairman on this page. The omission like the one in Exhibit A is not accounted for. The date 20—10—27 appearing under the signature in the second assessment book creates some difficulty. According to the evidence of the manager (D.W. 1) "the revision of taxes was begun and finished in December, 1927." He distinctly says that Exhibits B and C (i.e., the second book) were prepared in December, 1927. He also says that the revision lists were completed in December, 1927. How is it then that the Chairman's signature is dated 20th October, 1927, and how can we say that he scrutinised and approved on 20th October, 1927, the contents of the lists the preparation of which was completed only in December, 1927. The date appearing under the signature is not stated to have been put there on account of any mistake. The Chairman's evidence on this point is not very illuminating. He says that the registers were completed by the 20th December last. This is mentioned probably to explain the 20th, that appears in Exhibits B and C. But it is in October and not in December. It is not stated in the evidence that October was written by mistake for December. Exhibit A was completed by the 28th December. I have already pointed out that no date appears under the signature of the Chairman in Exhibit A. I cannot say that from the single circumstance of the Chairman's signature appearing in these lists that the rule invoked by the respondent in support of the procedure adopted has been complied with. The signature alone unaccompanied by the "writing of the amount of the assessment in words by the Chairman and his certificate of its correctness means absolutely nothing." It is the writing of the amount of assessment as revised by the Chairman and his certificate of its correctness that are important; for, these are the requirements the fulfilment of which will presumptively show that the Chairman has 'scrutinised' and 'approved' the lists and is satisfied with the revision. In the absence of the Chairman's statement in writing of the amount of assessment as revised and his certificate, the revision of the assessment can be considered only as a revision by the Committee alone which is not authorised by the Act. As is suggested by the rule itself, these conditions are insisted on by it, apparently only to minimise as far as possible the dangers that are inherent in delegation; for, if the Chairman himself does the work of revision, no such statement or certificate is required from him. In my opinion, the learned Judge has altogether missed the importance of this provision in the rule. It is too much to ask the Court to infer from the mere signature of the Chairman in the absence of his "statement and certificate" that he has brought his mind to bear upon the work of his deputies, tested it, and thus made their work in a sense his own by approving it. Assuming that the Chairman of the Municipality has every power to delegate his work of revision as he has done in this case, I am satisfied that the assessment lists in this case, in the absence of his statement in writing of the amount of assessment as revised and his certificate of its correctness, cannot be said to be "revised by the Chairman" within the meaning of Rule 8, Schedule IV, as the procedure prescribed in the Municipal Account Code has not been complied with by him so far as it concerns him. This omission cannot be brushed aside simply as a mere irregularity. In my opinion, Article 70 has not been followed in substance or in fact by the Chairman. These defects which I have pointed out are by themselves enough, I think, to render invalid, under Rule 8, Schedule IV, the revision of the assessment said to have been carried out by the Chairman in this case.

However, I shall now proceed to consider the next question, namely, how far the Committee in carrying out the proceedings relating to the revision and in preparing the revised assessment lists has complied with the necessary statutory requirements. At the outset I should point out that in the plaint this is not made a ground of attack against the revision proceedings, but as the point has been dealt with by the Lower Courts and as the issue as pointed out by the learned District Judge is very vague, I shall deal with it. Under Rule 7, Schedule IV of the District Municipalities Act, "The Chairman shall enter the annual value of all lands and buildings determined by him and the tax payable thereon in assessment books to be kept for the purpose at the Municipal Office," and the rule then proceeds to state that the assessment books shall record amongst other particulars "(e) the annual value of the area. . . ." and "(f) the amount of the tax payable". It will be observed that these two items (e) and (f) are very important as (e) forms the basis on which the tax is to be levied, and (f) states the amount of tax that would be levied. Rule 8, as already pointed out, authorises the Chairman to completely revise the assessment books in every particular and if the annual value has been increased as a result of the revision then such increase and the consequent increase in the amount of the tax payable will have to be noted by the Chairman in the assessment books. Rule 9 is as follows:—

“When assessment books have been for the first time prepared, and whenever they have undergone a general revision, the Chairman shall, before the close of the year in which the said books have been prepared or revised, notify by beat of drum and by a notice published in the District Gazette that on a specified date, not being less than thirty days from the date of the later of such notifications, he will be prepared to consider revision petitions presented to him within the said period of thirty days.”

This rule calls upon the assesseees to put forward their objections. It is clear that to prefer objections the parties should know whether the annual value of the land and the tax payable have been increased. It is argued that the revised assessment lists do not contain the necessary particulars in regard to these matters and that, therefore, the statute has not been complied with and the revision is necessarily invalid. I shall examine how far the facts support this argument.

Now, in these two assessment lists containing the entries A, B and C there are various columns for entering figures under different heads. As I have already stated, these lists were completed and put up in the office for the information of the public by the end of December, 1927. It is admitted that figures in columns 16, 17 and 18 were entered into the lists only in March. All the columns should have been filled up in a completed and properly prepared list before its publication—at any rate before the issue of the notice calling for objections. The non-entry of the figures in these columns, I am referring to it only by the way, is another instance to show how unsatisfactorily the revision work was done in this Municipality. What is important to notice is that in the assessment book relating to house No. 305, Exhibit A, columns 13 and 15, under “Revised assessment” headed respectively “Annual value” and “Amount of half-yearly assessment” have not been filled up at all. In column 14 headed “Annual rental, if rented” appears the figure 60 which figure appears in column 7 headed “Annual value” under “Past year’s assessment”. These figures appear as follows:—

PAST YEAR'S ASSESSMENT.		REVISED ASSESSMENT.
No. in Assessment Register.	Annual value.	Annual value.	Annual rental, if rented.	Amount of half-yearly assessment.
305	60		60

In Exhibit A, how the same amount under past year's assessment under "annual value" appears as "annual rental" has not been explained satisfactorily by Mr. Somayya. The vital defect in connection with this assessment list is that the "annual value" and the "amount of half-yearly assessment," columns 13 and 15, have not been filled up at all. It is easy to say that if 10 per cent. is deducted from the annual rental under S. 82, we would get the "annual value". Then the annual value under the revised assessment will be less than the annual rental under past year's assessment; but it is not clear that this is the case of the respondent. Further, the work of finding out the annual value by making the necessary deduction should not be left to the assessee. However that may be, the fact remains that "the annual value," column 13, has not been filled up and column 15, "the amount of half-yearly assessment," has also been left open. Now Rule 7 (Schedule IV of the Act) states in imperative language that the Chairman shall enter the annual value of all lands and buildings determined by him and the tax payable thereon in assessment books to be kept for the purpose at the Municipal Office. And it then states that the assessment books shall record the following particulars, namely, the annual value of the area and description and the amount of tax payable [cls. (e) and (f)]. No explanation is forthcoming as to why these columns have not been filled up. The imperative provisions of the statute have not been complied with in this case. It is easy to see how this non-compliance with the provisions of the statute would necessarily prejudice the assesses. How can they under Rule 9 take objections to the revised assessment when they are not in a position to know the most necessary things for taking the objection, viz., the amount of half-yearly assessment and the annual value of the land on which the assessment is based. Columns 16, 17 and 18 were at least filled up in March some time later. These columns 13 and 15 were never filled up at all. A violation of the express provision of the statute would necessarily render the proceedings invalid. Coming now to the second assessment book containing the entries, Exhibits B and C, relating to the other two houses of the appellant the "annual value" column, column 15, is filled up with the figures of Rs. 100 and 60, written in pencil. The same figures appear in ink under column 13 headed "Gross annual rental." It appears from the explanation written at page 37 of this book and the evidence that the figures under column 15 were copied in ink in column 13 to guard against possible alterations of the pencil entries in column 15. The Commissioners filled up this column, namely, column 15, which is a very important one from the standpoint of the assessee in pencil and the Manager reproduced these figures in ink in column 13. The unsatisfactory way how the revision work was carried on by the Commissioners is self-evident. But there is no explanation why the important column which would show the proposed assessment was not filled up at the time of the publication of the list or before the issue of the notice. In the case of this assessment book, it is clear that one of the imperative provisions of the statute has not been complied with. In my opinion, this omission to give the necessary information to the assessee in the assessment lists prepared by the Committee is by itself sufficient to render the revision proceedings invalid. The foregoing examination of the assessment lists shows that in their preparation the Committee members have not in some important particulars complied with the necessary statutory requirements. In *Baldwin v. Ellis*¹ it was held that the omission to state in the nomination paper the name of the parish for which the person nominated was qualified as a Local Government elector was a non-compliance with the requirements of Rule 4 of the Rural District Councillors Election Order of 1898. The following observations appearing in the judgment of Swift, J., in that case may usefully be referred to in this connection:—

“Mr. Pratt referred to this omission to state the parish of which the person nominated is a Local Government elector as being a mere technicality. I do not agree. A statement of these particulars is required by the Local Government Board’s Order, and I cannot think that the omission to state those particulars on a nomination paper is a mere technicality, because unless the parish, for which the person nominated is qualified as a Local Government elector, is named no one could test whether or not he is qualified.”

As pointed out in Municipal Council, Cuddapah v. M. & S. M. Ry. Co., Ltd.,² “Taxing enactments should be strictly construed and the right to tax should be clearly established. Conditions precedent to the imposition of any tax should be strictly complied with.” In this case, as the condition precedent to the imposition of the revised assessment, i.e., the revision of assessment list, has not been carried out strictly in accordance with the Act, the revision proceedings as well as the subsequent levy of the tax based on the revised assessment are both invalid.

It is also argued that the revision of the assessment is invalid as the notification calling for objections specified no date for hearing the objections as required by the statute. Rule 9 of Schedule IV makes it obligatory on the Chairman to notify a "specified date" for hearing objections, if any, to the revised assessment. In the notices in the present case it is true that a specific date for hearing objections has not been mentioned. What is mentioned is this: "Any objections to the above revision or suggestion will be considered if submitted within 6th February, 1928." The notice is dated 5th January, 1928. Strictly speaking, the mention of a specific date would seem to be necessary, as otherwise the objectors may not know on which date they have to be present to press their objections; but I am not quite sure if the omission to mention the specific date for hearing the objection is such a vital defect as will vitiate the entire proceedings relating to the revision assessment. If objection had been presented—in this case no objections were filed—the Chairman might have rectified the initial error by intimating to the objectors the time when their objections would be heard. Various cases in support of the appellant's contention were brought to my notice: The Krishna Jute and Cotton Mills Co., Ltd., Ellore v. The Municipal Council, Vizianagram,³ The Municipal Council, Rajahmundry v. Prasadarayudu,⁴ *The Municipal Council, Rajahmundry v. Rama Narasimha Rao*⁵ and The Queen v. Chorlton Union,⁶ etc. But I do not think it is necessary to discuss these cases or to express a definite opinion on this question as I have already held that the revision proceedings are clearly invalid for other reasons.

Vasudeva Rao
v.
The Municipal Council,
Anantapur.

The next point for consideration is whether the enhancement of the property tax by the Municipality to $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. from 1st April, 1928, is legal. It is argued that the rate is unenforceable as the notification levying the rate seeks to give retrospective effect to the decision of the Municipality to enhance the rate. It is not disputed that it is within the power of the Municipality to levy tax which it is competent to levy at a new rate, that is, that it has power to alter the existing rate by increasing it if it decides that such a step is necessary. In the present case, the Chairman proposed that the rate of property tax then in force be raised to $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The annual value of the land having been increased by the quinquennial revision, this meant a collection of house property tax at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the increased value. The objections to the quinquennial revision I have already dealt with. The present question relates solely to the enforceability of the decision of the Municipality increasing the rate so that if this decision is enforceable, the Municipality can collect house property tax at this new rate on the old annual value of the land, it having been now found that the quinquennial assessment proceedings are invalid. The proposal of the Chairman to increase the rate was accepted by the Council and the Municipality's decision to increase the house tax from the 1st of April, 1928, was notified on 5th February, 1928, and was also tom-tomed in the village (see Exhibit F). As no objections were received, the Council confirmed the new rate in its resolution, Exhibit II-B, dated 17th March, 1928. This was published in the next issue of the District Gazette on 5th April, 1928 (see Exhibit H). This notification says, that the new rate of house tax of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. would come into effect from 1st April, 1928. It is now argued that since the Gazette announcing the levy of the increased rate is dated 5th April, 1928, and it makes the operation of the new rate to commence from the 1st of April, that is, from an anterior date, retrospective effect is sought to be given to the decision of the Municipality and, therefore, the new rate is unenforceable. This argument, in my opinion, is fallacious as it overlooks the significance of the proceedings prior to Exhibit H. It is not Exhibit H that levies the new rate. The levy of it was decided upon by the Municipality in its resolution, Exhibit II-B, dated 17th March, 1928, as already mentioned, that is, before the 1st of April, 1928, and before Exhibit H. This resolution was preceded by Exhibit F which states that, subject to objections, the new rate will be enforced from 1st April, 1928. It is not by the notification that the new rate was levied. The notification only serves to complete the decision of the Municipality by publishing it. In this connection it is important to notice that the signature of the Chairman in Exhibit H bears the date 19th March, 1928, that is, a date prior to 1st of April, 1928. The decision arrived long time before 1st April, 1928, could not be announced in the Gazette earlier as there was no Gazette before 5th April, 1928, the date of Exhibit H. In this view the argument of the appellant is clearly untenable. The appellant's argument also appears to be untenable having regard to the explanation of Rule 15 of Schedule IV. The explanation is as follows: "A general enhancement in the rate at which the tax is leviable is no amendment or revision within the meaning of this rule, and shall have effect from the date fixed for the enhancement." The date fixed for the enhancement according to the proceedings I have referred to is the 1st of April, 1928. It could not, therefore, be said that retrospective effect has been given to the decision of the Municipality to enhance the rate to $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. For these reasons, I refuse to hold that the increased rate, that is, $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the house property tax, cannot be enforced in this case. Of course, having regard to my decision that the revision proceedings are invalid, it follows that this rate can be levied only on the annual value of the land according to the old assessment.

The last question is whether this suit instituted against the Municipality is bad for want of two months' notice under S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section states: "No suit shall be instituted against . . . a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been . . . delivered to him or left at his office, stating the cause of action" To justify the contention that "notice of two months" is necessary, it must be shown that the Municipality is a "public officer" within the meaning of the term as used in S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. According to S. 2, cl. (17) of the Code, "public officer" means a person falling under any of the descriptions contained in sub-clauses (a) to (h) of that clause. In support of his contention reliance is placed by the respondent's counsel alternatively on clauses (f) and (g). Sub-clause (f) is as follows:—

"Every officer of the Government whose duty it is, as such officer, to prevent offences, to give information of offences, to bring offenders to justice, or to protect the public health, safety or convenience."

Having reference to this clause it is argued that the Municipality is (1) a "person," (2) who is an "officer of the Government," and (3) "whose duty it is, as such officer . . . to protect the public health, safety or convenience." Under the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) "a person" includes "any company or association or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not." Section 6, cls. (1) and (2) of the District Municipalities Act constitute the Municipal Council by the name of the Municipality as a body corporate with various rights. A Municipal Council, therefore, constituted under the District Municipalities Act can well come within the meaning of the term "person". A Cantonment Committee according to the rules under the Cantonment Act (XIII of 1889) was held to be a "person" in Cecil Gray v. The Cantonment Committee of Poona.⁷ The main question is whether the Municipality can be described to be "an officer of the Government", for it is conceded that if it can be held to be an "officer of the Government," the protection of the public health, safety and convenience, having regard to the provisions of Part IV of the Act falls within its duties. The Municipality is constituted by the Governor in Council (see S. 4). It can be abolished also by the Governor in Council. Its constitution is also determined by the Governor in Council and the same authority fixes the term of office of the Municipal Council (see S. 10). Under S. 33, the Municipality has to submit its administration report to the Governor in Council and the Governor in Council has power to suspend, generally stated, the action of the Municipality under S. 36 of the Act. It is argued that the Governor in Council means the Government and that when the Governor in Council can appoint, abolish and control the activities of a Municipality, the Municipality can well be described as an officer of the Government. Having regard to the definitions of the terms "Government" and "Local Government" in the General Clauses Act (see S. 2, cls. (21) and (29) of the General Clauses Act X of 1897), Ss. 46 and 134 of the Government of India Act and S. 31 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897), the "Governor in Council" mentioned in S. 4, etc., of the District Municipalities Act is the "Government" mentioned in cl. (f) of S. 2, Civil Procedure Code. The point needs no elaboration as it is not disputed by the respondent. What is really disputed—and this I think is the substantial point for consideration—is whether the Municipality can be described as an officer of the Government within the meaning of cl. (f), for it is only then the duties of a public officer as required by the definition being complied with that it can be described as "a public officer" under S. 2, cl. (17), Civil Procedure Code. No decision under the Civil Procedure Code directly bearing on the point has been brought to my notice. But in my opinion the observations of the learned Judges in *President, District Board, South Kanara v. Gopalakrishna Bhatta*⁸ refute completely the contentions of the respondent on this point. That was not a decision under S. 2, cl. (17), Civil Procedure Code. In that case it was held that the President of a District Board is not an officer of the Government within the meaning of cls. (1) and (3) of Sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). The question arose in this way. A suit was brought against the President of the District Board of South Kanara for damages for an amount under

8. (1923) I.L.R. 46 M. 808: 45 M.L.J. 125.

Rs. 500. To meet the argument that no second appeal lay against the decision of the lower appellate Court as the amount involved in the suit was below Rs. 500 reliance was placed by the appellant on Articles 1 and 3 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act which excepted from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court suits concerning acts or orders purporting to be done by the Governor-General in Council or by a Local Government or by a Member of the Council and suits concerning acts or orders purporting to be done by any other officer of the Government in his official capacity. It was argued that the President of a District Board is an officer of the Government within the meaning of these articles and the suit, therefore, is exempted from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. This argument was not accepted by the learned Judges. This is how they dispose of the point:

"If the President of the District Board is an officer of the Government within the meaning of these articles, this suit would be excepted. But in our judgment he is not. Local Boards and Corporations are what may be called quasi-governing bodies; but by the very scheme of the Acts under which they are created they are not servants of the Government. Their representatives in some cases are nominated but generally elected by the people and they have their official capacity as such and not as officials of the Government. It is true that they are under Government in the sense that under the statute they have to account to the Government, and are under certain disciplinary powers of the Government. The Government has a duty cast upon it to see that these ministerial bodies carry out their functions lawfully. But in our judgment none of the officials of these Municipalities and District Boards are officers of the Government coming within Articles 1 and 3."

These observations may well be applied to the present case. It is true that the Municipality is constituted by the Governor in Council and that it can be abolished by the same authority. It is also true that the Governor in Council can control the activities of the Municipality in various ways; but it does not necessarily follow from these considerations that the Municipality is an officer of the Government. The District Municipalities Act does not constitute the Municipality a servant of the Government. The Act confers on the Municipality wide powers which are given to it to be exercised at its own discretion and without consulting the Government. The Municipality can acquire, hold and transfer property, moveable and immoveable, and enter into contracts. It can levy taxes to provide funds to carry on its own administration and the Municipal Fund raised remains its own till it is abolished. Subject to certain restrictions, the Municipality can appoint its own servants; these are not Government servants, but are Municipal servants, i.e., servants of the Municipality. Under these circumstances, I cannot agree with the contention that the Municipality constituted under the District Municipalities Act can be described as a "public officer" within the meaning of S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this connection attention may be drawn to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Metropolitan Meat Industry Board v. Sheedy,⁹ which dealt with the question whether a debt due to the Board constituted under the Meat Industry Act, 1915, No. 69 (N.S. W.) was a debt due to the Crown so as to enable the Board to claim priority in the liquidation of a debtor company. In deciding the point their Lordships had to consider the question whether the Board constituted under the Act of 1915 are "servants of the Crown to such an extent as to bring them within the principles of prerogative" according to which the Crown is entitled to payment in priority to all other unsecured creditors of the debtor company. The facts of the case necessary for our purpose are thus stated in the headnote:

"The Meat Industry Act, 1915, provided for the maintenance and control of slaughter-houses, cattle sale yards, and meat markets in Sydney and the adjoining district, and established the appellant Board to administer the Act. The members of the Board were to be appointed by the Governor, who had power to veto certain of its actions. The Board had wide powers, which it exercised at its discretion; any power of interference which a Minister of the Crown possessed was not such as to make the acts of administration his acts. Money received by the Board was not paid into the general funds of the State, but to its own fund."

In holding that the Board constituted under the Act of 1915 are not servants of the Crown, the learned Judges made the following observations:—

"They are a body with discretionary powers of their own. Even if a Minister of the Crown has power to interfere with them, there is nothing in the statute which makes the acts of administration his as distinguished from theirs. That they were incorporated does not matter. It is also true that the Governor appoints their members and can veto certain of their actions. But these provisions, even when taken together, do not outweigh the fact that the Act of 1915 confers on the appellant Board wide powers which are given to it to be exercised at its own discretion and without consulting the direct representatives of the Crown. Such are the powers of acquiring land, constructing abattoirs and works, selling cattle and meat, either on its own behalf or on behalf of other persons, and leasing its property. Nor does the Board pay its receipts into the general revenue of the State, and the charges it levies go into its own fund."

Having regard to the powers given to the Municipality under the District Municipalities Act some of which I have referred to, I think similar observations may well be made in connection with the Municipality constituted under the District Municipalities Act. As in that case, so in this also, all the provisions dealing with the powers of the Governor in Council already referred to do not outweigh the fact that the District Municipalities Act confers on the Municipality wide powers which can be exercised at its own discretion and without consulting the Governor. For all these reasons, I would hold that the Municipality cannot be described as an officer of the Government under sub-clause (f), cl. (17) of S. 2, Civil Procedure Code.

Sub-clause (g) also of S. 2, cl. (17), which was somewhat faintly relied on by the respondent does not help his contention. Having regard to the powers and duties of the Municipality under the Act, it is obvious that it cannot be described as an officer doing the duties as mentioned in that sub-clause. Sections 117 to 124 of the Act (i.e., general provisions relating to Taxation and Finance) do not show that the Municipality under the Act takes, receives, keeps or expends property on behalf of the Government. The point does not call for further consideration as it was not seriously elaborated by the respondent's learned counsel. It follows from what I have said that the argument that two months' notice should have been sent to the Municipality under S. 80, Civil Procedure Code, by the appellant before instituting the suit is untenable and must be overruled.

In the result the second appeal which is confined to the levy of enhanced rates on house tax alone is allowed partially and an injunction will be issued in favour of the appellant restraining the Municipality from collecting from the appellant house property tax on his two houses in the 2nd Ward on the basis of the revised annual value. The injunction was directed to these two houses as the annual value of the house in Ward No. 1 has not been increased under the revised assessment. The Municipality as a result of my decision will be entitled to collect from the appellant house property tax from these houses at the enhanced rate on the basis of the annual value under the old assessment. In other respects, the Lower Court's decree will stand. Each party will pay and receive proportionate costs in this Court.

The President of a First Class Bench of Magistrates acquitted an accused on default of the complainant's appearance on the date of the trial. Subsequently on the representation made by the complainant's counsel that there was a mistake as to the date of the trial and on the production of a sworn statement to that effect by the complainant, the case that was dismissed was restored to the file and the complaint was revived without a fresh stamped complaint. On the question whether the Court can act as a Court sitting in revision upon its own completed and pronounced judgment.

Held, that it must be taken as the processual law in this province that no Subordinate Court can sit in revision upon its own record and decide whether upon a certain view of the facts, its own proceedings should be treated as null. If it thought that a mistake had been committed, the matter must be referred to the High Court.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 15, in default two weeks' rigorous imprisonment, under S. 352, Indian Penal Code, in the following circumstances:—
The case was filed before the First Class Bench, Vellore, on 19th February, 1929, and posted to 26th February. On 26th February, according to the Diary Extract, it was adjourned to 1st March. On 1st March the complainant was absent, and the accused, the present petitioner, was acquitted under S. 247, Criminal Procedure Code. On the 5th March the complainant's vakil represented that the posting to the 1st was a mistake for the 5th. Thereupon an entry was made in the diary for the 5th March:

"Alamelu Ammal prefers a complaint against Ekambara Mudali. Her sworn statement is recorded. The case is taken on file under S. 352, Indian Penal Code, and posted to 19th March, 1929."

This was merely a revival of the old complaint dismissed on 1st March, 1929. There was, as a matter of fact, no fresh stamped complaint and no sworn statement on 5th March. There was a complaint on plain paper, dated 5th March, and a sworn statement, dated 26th March.

The petitioner complains that having once been acquitted he cannot be retried for the same offence. The President thinks that his Court can act as a Court of Revision and decide which of its decisions may or may not be quashed. In any circumstances there is no legal authority for making false records in the Court's diary. If the President thought he could treat the order of acquittal as a nullity, he should have done so, proceeding with the case of 19th February on 5th March as though nothing had happened on 1st March. But such procedure is quite contrary to the Code, which has never contemplated a Court sitting in revision upon its own completed and pronounced judgments. The President, if he thought there had been a miscarriage of justice, should have referred the matter to the District Magistrate, who, if so advised, could have acted under S. 438.

A case very similar to the present case is considered in *Achambit Mandal v. Mahatab Singh*¹ and there it is held that the acquittal following upon a mistake about the posting date is a nullity, and the trial may proceed as if it had never been pronounced. This ruling is in terms based upon *H. C. Proceedings, 17th August, 1875*² but the Madras decision is no authority for the Court acting in revision of its own proceedings. A Third Class Magistrate posted a case to a certain date without informing the parties, and on their non-appearance, acquitted the accused. The District Magistrate ordered him to restore the case to file. The Sessions Judge questioned the legality of this order, and this Court, holding that the Third Class Magistrate's procedure was substantially irregular, set aside the order of acquittal. It did not confine itself to returning the record with the observation that there was no cause for interference, which it would have done if it had held, as the Calcutta case assumes, that the Third Class Magistrate could himself restore the case. That the District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a retrial was ruled in the next case but one in Weir's Criminal Rulings; see *Narayanasami Aiyar v. Janaki Ammal*³. It must be taken as the processual law in this province that no Subordinate Court can sit in revision upon its own record, and decide whether upon a certain view of the facts, its proceedings should be treated as null. If it thought that a mistake has been committed, the matter must be referred to the High Court.

The petition is allowed; the sentence is cancelled; the fine is ordered to be refunded; and the President is enjoined that his diary must be a plain record of fact and not a pious adaptation to circumstances.

Section 37 is intended only to vest insolvent debtor's admitted properties in some third person for making them available to the creditors, avoiding in the meanwhile the debtor being called an insolvent. Where certain properties were alienated by the insolvent in favour of the petitioner and the alienation has not been found bad, an order vesting such properties in one of the creditors authorised to carry on the insolvency proceedings is one not contemplated by S. 37.

Such an alienee in so far as he is obliged, by this order, to defend his title is a "person aggrieved," entitled to appeal therefrom. A Court is not bound to annul the adjudication on the expiration of the time fixed to apply for a discharge.

Petition under S. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Madurai, dated 16th March, 1928, in C.M.A. No. 11 of 1928, preferred against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dindigul, in M.P. No. 447 of 1927 in I.P. No. 1 of 1926.

T. L. Venkatarama Aiyar for petitioner.

K. V. Ramachandra Aiyar for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this Civil Revision Petition may shortly be stated. Certain persons were declared insolvents. They were adjudicated in 1926 on an application filed in 1925. M.P. No. 229 of 1926 was filed for the purpose of setting aside the alienation made by the insolvents in favour of Selvam Chettiar, who is the petitioner before me, under Ss. 53 and 54 of the Act. While the petition was pending, the period given to the insolvents for applying for an order of discharge expired and on the expiry of the period the Court passed suo motu an order annulling the adjudication. No notice was given either to the insolvents or to the creditors or to one of them specially authorised to conduct the proceedings in respect of the alienations. The particular creditor who was so authorised then filed an application for review of the order annulling adjudication. This is M.P. No. 447 of 1927 in I.P. No. 1 of 1926. On this petition the Subordinate Judge passed an order modifying the order of annulment and ordering that the right, title and interest of the insolvents in the properties in dispute in M.P. No. 229 of 1926 shall vest in the petitioner before the Subordinate Judge. The alienee filed an appeal before the District Judge. A preliminary objection was taken before the District Judge that he was not a party aggrieved by the order of the Subordinate Judge. The District Judge upheld the objection and observed:

"It is true that one consequence of the order of the learned Subordinate Judge will be that the appellant will have to defend M.P. No. 229 of 1926 on the file of the Sub-Court, Dindigul, but that is merely an incidental consequence."

The alienee files this revision petition before me against the order of the District Judge.

The first question is whether the appeal to the District Judge lay. I agree with the petitioner in thinking that the petitioner was a party aggrieved by the order of the Subordinate Judge. The whole object of the modification of the annul-

ment of the adjudication and the specific terms of the order of the Subordinate Judge are all aimed at the petitioner. The District Judge concedes that one consequence of the order of the Subordinate Judge is that the petitioner will have to defend his title. It is difficult to say that this is merely an incidental consequence. The whole order of the Subordinate Judge was aimed at him and was intended to produce this particular result. I, therefore, think that the petitioner before me was a party aggrieved by the order of the Subordinate Judge and his appeal before the District Judge ought not to have been dismissed.

There is another part of the order which is complained of before me, namely, the order vesting the properties in dispute in M.P. No. 229 of 1926 in the creditor who is carrying on these proceedings. I do not think this is an order contemplated by S. 37. Section 37 was intended to vest the insolvent debtor's admitted properties in some third person for the purpose of making them available to the creditors while in the meanwhile avoiding the debtor being called an insolvent.

But in the present case until the alienation to the petitioner is found bad the properties belonged to the petitioner and nothing in S. 37 justifies an order vesting these properties in the creditor. The order, therefore, is irregular.

The only question that now arises before me is what order I should pass. One alternative is that I should set aside the order of the District Judge and of the Subordinate Judge and direct the review petition to be re-heard and disposed of according to law. But I think there is another alternative. The Subordinate Judge was certainly inclined to review the order of annulment, at any rate to the extent of permitting an enquiry into M.P. No. 229 of 1926. Apparently the District Judge also agrees with this. But both the Lower Courts—certainly the Subordinate Judge—felt compelled to pass the order which they have actually passed, because at that time the law was supposed to be that if an insolvent did not apply for discharge within the time prescribed, the adjudication ought to be automatically annulled. This matter has been the subject of consideration by a recent Full Bench decision reported in *Palani Goundan v. The Official Receiver of Coimbatore*¹. There the Full Bench has held that a Court is not bound to annul the adjudication automatically and if there are circumstances justifying an extension of time for applying for discharge, it may be done. The effect of the law as laid down formerly, that is, before the Full Bench decision, was that insolvents were deliberately avoiding to apply for discharge within the time prescribed, with the result that adjudications got annulled and fraudulent alienations became valid to the advantage of the alienees. The result of the Full Bench decision, however, is that it need not be. Whenever the effect of the insolvent's failure to apply for discharge within the time prescribed is to prevent any enquiry into an allegation of fraudulent conduct, the Court can take hold of the fact and extend the time for applying for discharge. In the present case the object of the Lower Courts was that M.P. No. 229 of 1926 should be heard and for that purpose and to that extent they are willing to review. I do not see why I should interfere with the discretion of the Lower Courts in permitting such review. The only thing I wish to say is that the order is not properly framed. I, therefore, substitute the following for the order passed by the Subordinate Judge:

"The order of annulment is set aside and the time for applying for discharge is extended up to such time as is necessary for disposing of M.P. No. 229 of 1926. M.P. No. 229 of 1926 will be inquired into and heard."

My object in passing this order is not to invalidate any enquiry into M.P. No. 229 of 1926 that has been made as a result of the order of the Subordinate Judge. I am told that some order has been passed on that miscellaneous petition and it is the subject of an appeal. Those proceedings will take their own course. An order will issue in the modified form. Cost of the appeal before the District Judge will abide the result. Each party will bear his own costs in this Civil Revision Petition.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 22, Rr. 3 and 10—Suit on behalf of Devaswom—Death of one of the trustees pending appeal—Legal representatives not impleaded—Abatement or devolution.

In an action brought by several Uralars or trustees on behalf of a Devaswom, there is no abatement in the proper sense of the term on the death or removal of one of them. What takes place is devolution of office and the successor to the office may apply to be impleaded. But in order that a decree may bind a Devaswom it is not necessary to have all the trustees as parties provided that the litigation was conducted bona fide in the interests of the Devaswom by those Uralars who were parties to the suit.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is a petition for review of judgment in a Letters Patent Appeal based on an alleged defect of procedure which occurred during the pendency of the appeal, which, it is said, invalidates the judgment.

Sekhara
Menon
v.
Narayaman

The suit was brought in 1919 to redeem a kanom on behalf of a Malabar devaswom by one out of the four Uralans, the other three being joined as 24th to 26th defendants. The other defendants were members of the tenant's tarwad of which the 1st defendant was the karnavan. The District Munsif gave a decree as prayed. The District Judge on appeal and Phillips, J., on second appeal held that the suit was barred by O. 9, R. 9, by reason of the dismissal of a former suit brought for the same relief and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff preferred a Letters Patent Appeal under cl. (15) of the Letters Patent and on 7th December, 1928, a Bench of this Court consisting of Devadoss and Waller, JJ., set aside the judgments of the first and second Appellate Courts and remanded the appeal to the District Judge to hear and determine it on the merits. We were informed at the hearing of this application that the District Judge has since heard the appeal and confirmed the decree awarded to the plaintiff by the District Munsif.

The petitioner is the 6th respondent in the Letters Patent Appeal, a junior member of the tenant's tarwad. He now objects that, on 21st May, 1928, i.e., more than six months before the judgment, the 3rd respondent (24th defendant) had died, that the petitioner knew this only in January 28 (1929), that as the appellant took no steps to bring on record the legal representative of the deceased 3rd respondent, one of the four Uralans, without whom the appeal could not proceed, the appeal abated or became incompetent before the judgment, and that, therefore, the judgment in the appeal reversing the decisions of the lower Appellate Courts was wrong.

The petitioner's advocate argues that, as it is necessary in every suit brought on behalf of a devaswom to have all the Uralans as parties either as plaintiffs or as defendants, it follows that, on the death of one of them in a pending suit to which they have all been made parties, a necessary party is eliminated, and that, unless the legal representative of the deceased who was the next Uralan is added within the time allowed, the suit or appeal abates and its continuance becomes incompetent for want of necessary parties, that, thereafter, subject to the abatement being set aside, the only legal order possible is one of dismissal, and that, if a judgment on the merits is passed in ignorance of the death, such judgment is of no effect or validity. When the judgment was pronounced, no one was aware that the 3rd respondent had died. The question, in such circumstances, is not whether in the first instance all the Uralans or trustees should

v.
Narayanan.

have been impleaded which had been done—but whether the death or removal of one of several trustees or Uralans who have been impleaded ipso facto makes the further progress and decision on the merits of the suit or appeal illegal till his successor has been impleaded. It is material that the objection is raised not by the devaswom or on its behalf by the Uralans but by its opponent who has been defeated on the merits.

No decision exactly applicable was cited. But reliance was placed on an unreported decision of Devadoss, J., in *Manikkal Sankaran v. Rama Variar*¹. In that case, the death of one of the Uralans being known before judgment, an application to set aside the abatement and bring in the new Uralan had been made, but, however, was refused. Thereupon, the learned Judge, while also basing his judgment on the merits, held that the appeal could not proceed in the absence of all the Uralans. Whether that opinion was right or not, that is not the case here.

Similarly the case in *Arayil Kali Amma v. Sankaran Nambudripad*² was one in which the death of the co-Uralan was known before the judgment and apparently there was no petition to set aside the abatement or bring in his successor. The decisions in *Shanmuga Moopannar v. Subbayya Moopannar*³ and *Kannan Kutty v. Velu*⁴ are of no assistance to the petitioner.

There is authority for the proposition that, in order that a decree may bind a devaswom, it is not necessary to have all the trustees or Uralans as parties, provided that the litigation was conducted bona fide in the interests of the Devasthanam by those Uralans who were parties (*Madhavan v. Keshavan*⁵). The ground of this was explained and approved in *Rangamma v. Narasimhacharyulu*⁶. The principle governing the representation in suits of mutts, temples, etc., by Dharma-kartas, Uralans or Matathipathis is illustrated by other decisions of this Court. In *Ratnam Pillai v. Nataraja Desikar*⁷, Nataraja Desikar, who had no rights to a mutt, brought a suit on its behalf purporting to do so, as head of the mutt. Pending the suit he was declared by the Privy Council not entitled to the headship. On the death of Nataraja Desikar, the person declared to be the rightful head applied to be impleaded and it was held that the case really fell under

v.
Narayanan.

O. 22, R. 10, though the rule quoted was O. 22, R. 3, and that the applicant should be allowed to continue the suit. The principle is that on the death or removal of an Uralan impleaded as such in a suit, what takes place is devolution of the office and the person entitled to be impleaded in the suit is the successor to the office. This is not affected by the fact that the office is hereditary or belongs to a tarwad, which merely means that the office-holder must be sought among the heirs or in the tarwad of the deceased. That this is the correct view was indicated in *Sivakasi Viswanathaswami Devasthanam v. Koodalinga Nadan*⁸. There one of two trustees who were parties to an appeal on behalf of a Devasthanam had died and the other had resigned and his resignation had been accepted and two other persons had been appointed trustees by the Temple Committee but had not taken charge of their office. In this state of affairs, the appeal was heard and decided without bringing on record the new trustees. The contention raised in the High Court by the new trustees, that the decision in the Lower Appellate Court was incompetent, was negatived on the ground that the new trustees had not taken charge of their office on the date of the judgment in the Court below. But Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., also said that the case fell really under O. 22, R. 10, and that the policy of the Code is that, if the proceeding originally instituted is right and proper, any decision obtained therein is binding on all persons on whom the interest or right may devolve under that rule pending the disposal of the proceeding. Similarly in *Ittuman Panikkar v. Narayana Bharathikal*⁹, which was a case of a mutt, it was held that a trustee, who files an action which is properly framed and constituted at the time of its institution, does not cease to be entitled to maintain and continue the suit merely because of his removal from office during the pendency of the suit. It was pointed out that the expression "by leave of the Court" in O. 22, R. 10, indicates that it was optional on the part of the assignee to apply and it is also in the discretion of the Court to allow him to do so or not. If this is so in the case of a plaintiff Uralan, it is a fortiori so in the case of a pro forma defendant like the deceased 3rd respondent, who by his written statement merely supported the plaintiff's claim and whose death at the time of the judgment was not known to any one.

In this view, the petition so far as it is based on the idea that there was any abatement in the proper sense of the term is misconceived.

In addition, we are satisfied that the devaswom was substantially and sufficiently represented in this Letters Patent Appeal even after the death of the 3rd respondent, and that the decision given after contest between the devaswom and the petitioner's tarwad is binding upon both and is not liable to be questioned for failure to implead the successor of 3rd respondent.

Trust—Following trust property—Trust fund invested in business of trustee—Same permitted by terms of entrustment—Insolvency of trustee—Right of cestui que trust to preferential claim over insolvent's assets—Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882), S. 63.

The defendants, T. & Sons, who were a firm of jewellers, collected certain moneys on behalf of the plaintiff's father. The latter subsequently directed them to hold a portion of that amount on trust, the terms being that T. & Sons should invest the same at a certain rate of interest in their own firm or in any other firm as they might deem fit, the amount itself being payable to the plaintiff on his attaining 21 years. In pursuance of this, T. & Sons gave a receipt to the plaintiff's father for the money as fixed deposit in the name of his minor son. A few years later the plaintiff instituted a suit against T. & Sons alleging that they were in financial difficulties, that they were guilty of a breach of trust in regard to the investment of the trust fund and claimed a preferential right over the assets of the firm. T. & Sons having been adjudged insolvents subsequent to the filing of the plaint, the Official Assignee was impleaded as party defendant and the plaintiff's claim was gone into.

Held, the plaintiff was entitled, in respect of the trust fund, to a charge on the sale proceeds of the stock belonging to the firm in the hands of the Official Assignee.

The right of the beneficiary to follow trust money does not depend upon the act of the trustee being a wrongful one. Nor can it be said that the trust fund cannot be traced because of the inability on the part of the beneficiary to point to any particular stock as representing the original investment. Trust money invested in a business can be traced, within the meaning of S. 63 of the Trusts Act, to the eventual assets of the business.

Observations of Turner, L.J., in Pennell v. Deffell, (1853) 4 De G.M. & G. 372: 43 E.R. 551, relied on.

Held, further, that in order that the doctrine of tracing might apply it is not necessary to show that money actually passed between the settlor and the trustee. It is sufficient to prove that as a result of the transaction between the parties the assets of the trustee were augmented.

In re Hallett & Co. Ex parte Blane, (1894) L.R. 2 Q.B. 237, distinguished.

Per Cornish, J.—There is nothing illegal in a settlor authorising, by the instrument of trust, the trustee to invest the trust money in a business, whether the trustee's own business or some other business, and providing that interest shall be paid for the use of the money so invested. The only effect of such an authority is to save the trustee from what would otherwise be a breach of trust.

Decision of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., affirmed.

Appeal against the decree and judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri, dated the 18th day of August, 1926, and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in C.S. No. 869 of 1923.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of Reilly, J.

At the trial, before Kumaraswami Sastri, J., it was contended on behalf of the defendants that as Tawker & Sons were allowed to use the money there was no trust, that the trust was destroyed and that all that the plaintiff was entitled was to treat himself as a creditor of Tawker & Sons. It was also contended that as the money had been converted into goods and used in the firm there was no case made out for any following of trust money in specie or in particular goods. Reliance was placed among other cases on *Official Assignee of Madras v. Smith*¹ and *Official Assignee of Madras v. Krishnaswami Naidu*².

On the question whether the trust had ceased to exist the learned Trial Judge observed as follows in the course of his judgment:

"The provisions of the Trust Act are that, unless there is any provision to the contrary, a trustee cannot use the trust fund for his own purpose. But it is always open to the author of the trust to make a provision to the contrary and remove one of the disabilities of the trustee, a disability which prevents him from using the money for his own benefit. If the author of the trust deed agrees that the trustee can use the money for his own benefit there seems to me to be no reason for saying that the trust goes and that it cannot be trust property in any sense of the term because of this liberty given to the trustee. No authority has been cited for so broad a proposition and I am not prepared to hold that the mere fact that Tawker & Sons in this case had power to deal with the property for their own purpose, provided they paid interest, destroys the character of the trust fund in their hands. No doubt equities might arise in such cases which would prevent the cestui que trust and the author of the trust from following the trust property. But, as pointed out above, there is no equity in favour of third parties in this case and the sale proceeds are with Official Assignee."

On the main question whether the plaintiff was entitled to any preferential claim His Lordship discussed the evidence and concluded thus:

"On the evidence of Sivasankar Bhat, which I see no reason to disbelieve, it is clear that, acting on the permission of the author of the trust when the trust was created, Tawker & Sons, instead of keeping the trust funds separately invested or ear-marked, used it for the purpose of purchasing show-room goods. The goods were being sold, fresh goods were being bought and the plaintiff's money had been used for purchase and when the firm became insolvents the plaintiff was entitled to say that, as the trust money was used for the purchase of goods which went on being converted from time to time, he is, in the absence of the preferential rights, entitled to follow the goods in the show-room and to claim a charge upon those goods or their sale proceeds to the extent of the monies of the trust which have been utilised by Tawker & Sons who are admittedly trustees for the plaintiff. If any authority is needed for the proposition, I think it is found in the observations of Jessel, M.R., in In re Hallett's Estate. *Knatchbull v. Hallett*³, where he describes various remedies where trust monies have been used by the trustee. The present case falls within the last of the cases stated by the Master of Rolls, namely, where his monies have been used for the purchase of goods and where the plaintiff cannot say in specie which particular goods were bought with his money, he has got a charge upon the property purchased if it is found that his monies were used along with other monies by the trustee."

In the end a decree was passed for Rs. 11,940 (Rs. 10,000 for principal and Rs. 1,940 for interest) with costs and interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of judgment till the date of payment. It was directed that the said sum should be paid to the plaintiff out of the sum of Rs. 22,000 with the Official Assignee which represented the sale proceeds of the show-room stock of Tawker & Sons.

Against this the Official Assignee preferred an appeal.

Reilly, J.

JUDGMENTS. Reilly, J.—In this case it is admitted that in August, 1919, Tawker & Sons, defendants 1 to 8, who were a firm of jewellers, collected Rs. 65,000 on behalf of the plaintiff's father, who is a nephew of defendant 1. It is also admitted that in October, 1919, the plaintiff's father created a trust in respect of Rs. 10,000 out of that Rs. 65,000. The trustees were Tawker & Sons, defendants 1 to 8, and the beneficiary was the plaintiff, who was then a minor, aged 13. The obligations of the trust are set out in Ex. A, a letter from the plaintiff's father to defendant 1, in which he says:

"It is my request that you should invest in your firm Rs. 10,000 in the name of my minor son, T. S. Krishnaji Bhat, and pay him the interest accruing thereon;"

and after making reference to another matter he goes on,

"I shall not trouble you any more about these moneys and shall not question your investment of Rs. 10,000 either in your firm or any other as you may deem fit from time to time as you may deem proper. Until my said son becomes 21 years of age, you need not hand over the principal to him, only the interest you can be paying to my family."

A few days later Tawker & Sons gave a receipt to the plaintiff's father for this Rs. 10,000 as fixed deposit in the name of his minor son T. Krishnaji Bhat in accordance with the instructions contained in Ex. A, stating that the amount was to carry interest at 9 per cent. per annum.

In November, 1923, that is, four years later, the plaintiff instituted this suit against Tawker & Sons, alleging that they were then involved in financial difficulties and were likely to be adjudged insolvents and also that they had committed a breach of trust by not investing the Rs. 10,000 in accordance with the trust. He claimed a preferential right over the assets of Tawker & Sons to the extent of Rs. 10,000 and any interest that might be due upon it, and he prayed for the removal of Tawker & Sons from their office of trustees, for the appointment of a new trustee and for an order that Tawker & Sons should hand over the Rs. 10,000 to the new trustee or that it should be paid into Court out of their assets in preference to the claims of any other creditors.

Tawker & Sons in their written statement admitted the trust. They denied that the plaintiff had any right to question their investment of the Rs. 10,000; they denied that they had committed any breach of trust; they alleged that there had been over-payment of interest; and they maintained that the suit was premature.

Issues in the suit were framed in July, 1924. It must be noticed that at that stage the allegation of breach of trust was dropped, and there is nothing at all about it in the issues. At some time in 1925, while the suit was pending, Tawker & Sons were adjudged insolvents. The Official Assignee was then brought in as defendant 9, and in February, 1926, he filed a written statement, in which he put the plaintiff to the proof of the trust and denied that the plaintiff had any preferential claim over the assets of Tawker & Sons. But he did not ask for any additional issue to be framed.

At the trial the existence of the trust was admitted, though it is not clear exactly what admission was made in regard to the subject-matter of the trust. Kumaraswami Sastri, J., who tried the case, has made a statement in his judgment in regard to the course the arguments took, which Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar, who appeared for the Official Assignee at the trial and also appears in the appeal, has told us is not exactly correct. But there is no question now that the existence of some trust was not then denied by the Official Assignee, though, as will be seen, there is still some dispute as to what was the subject-matter of the trust. The main question which was dealt with at the trial was the question whether the plaintiff had a preferential claim over the assets of Tawker & Sons. Kumaraswami Sastri, J., came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had such a claim, and he made a decree against the Official Assignee for the payment of the Rs. 10,000 and interest into Court. He did not order the removal of Tawker & Sons as trustees, nor did he say anything about the appointment of a new trustee. But that is of no importance at the present moment, as we are informed that the plaintiff is already a major, more than 21 years of age. The Official Assignee appeals against that decree.

As I have said, at the trial the allegation of breach of trust was not urged. It had been dropped, so far as we can see, at a much earlier stage. But at a very late stage in the arguments before us it has been suggested that the breach of trust may be made out in this way. Tawker & Sons as trustees were under the duty of guarding the interests of the plaintiff in the most diligent way possible; they had the option of investing this money either in their own firm or in any other firm: when they found that their own firm was in difficulties it was their duty to exercise their option of putting the money in some safer business. But that contention was not raised at the trial; and there is no evidence on the record to show when Tawker & Sons began to be in financial difficulties, or how far those difficulties had gone at the date of the suit. In my opinion we cannot take up this question of breach of trust at this stage. We must treat the case, as it was treated at the trial, as one in which no breach of trust was seriously alleged and certainly no breach of trust was made out.

On that basis no wrongful disposal of the trust property has been shown; nor has any wrongful mixing of the trust property with other property of Tawker & Sons, such as would bring the case within S. 66 of the Indian Trusts Act, been suggested. That being so, can the plaintiff get a charge for this Rs. 10,000 on Tawker & Sons' assets? He can do so, if he can trace his trust property into the assets in the Official Assignee's hands within the meaning of S. 63 of the Trusts Act. It is admitted that the Official Assignee got into his hands a considerable quantity of jewellery, the stock-in-trade of Tawker & Sons, after their adjudication and that by selling a part of that stock he has realised Rs. 22,000, much more than is necessary to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. At the trial an attempt was made to trace the Rs. 10,000 with which we are concerned definitely to the jewellery which came into the Official Assignee's hands about six years after the creation of the trust. That obviously was a very difficult thing to do. It would require a chain of definite evidence to show that the jewellery which came into the Official Assignee's hands was actually bought with this Rs. 10,000 or with the proceeds of other jewellery, which in its turn was connected directly or indirectly by some chain of happenings with the Rs. 10,000. So far as the record shows, no attempt whatever was made to show anything more than the first step in such a chain, namely, that the Rs. 10,000 was used by Tawker & Sons for the purchase of some jewellery. What became of that jewellery, except that the evidence indicates that it was probably sold and the proceeds used again, there is nothing to show. And even in regard to this first purchase with the Rs. 10,000 the evidence, which is that of the plaintiff's father, appears to me vague, inadequate, flimsy and entirely insufficient to trace the Rs. 10,000 to the jewellery which actually came into the Official Assignee's hands. But it has been urged before us by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar, who appears for the plaintiff, that it is not necessary for him to show that this Rs. 10,000 became by a succession of happenings transformed into that particular jewellery which eventually came into the Official Assignee's hands, that it is enough for him to show that the Rs. 10,000 was invested in Tawker & Sons' business, which is admitted, and that from that alone he can trace the trust property to the assets of the firm, at the time of their insolvency. Is that admitted fact, the investment of the Rs. 10,000 in Tawker & Sons' business, sufficient for this purpose of tracing within the meaning of S. 63 of the Trusts Act? We must remember that this investment was permitted, and, indeed, intended, by the plaintiff's father when he created the trust. When he directed that the Rs. 10,000 was to be invested in Tawker & Sons' business, should they wish so to invest it, what could he have meant, except that it was to become a part of the working capital of Tawker & Sons' business? If that were so, into what could it become transformed when used as working capital? It would be spent, we may suppose, on the purchase of stock or the payment of establishment or other running charges of the business or perhaps in clearing off debts and overdrafts. If that was done, what would represent the trust property now? I think it would be represented, as Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar contended, by the stock-in-trade, the good-will of the business and the outstanding debts due to the business—in short by the assets of the firm.

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Official Assignee, has urged strongly before us that, if you are to trace and follow trust property within the meaning of S. 63 of the Trusts Act, you must be sure that there is a continuing identity from one transformation to another, there must be a traceable continuity. That is undoubtedly correct. You must be able to assure yourself with reasonable certainty that the trust property has been transformed by successive transactions into the substitute which the beneficiary claims or into something embracing it on which he is entitled to a charge. It does seem at first sight a rather long step to say that trust property invested in a business can by that fact be traced within the meaning of the section to the eventual assets of the business. But in *Pennell v. Deffell*⁴ Turner, L.J., gave an instance of following trust property in this sense. His illustration was the case of an executor of a deceased partner leaving the deceased partner's capital with the surviving partners for them to trade with; and he pointed out that that would be trust money in the hands of the surviving partners and it might be followed, even though it started in the first instance when entrusted to them in the comparatively vague form of stock-in-trade and book debts, through all the fluctuations and ramifications of the business for a long period to its ultimate fruits, to which the beneficiaries would be entitled. That carries this principle of tracing or following trust property very far. Are we asked to go any further in this case? Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar has suggested that the illustration put by Turner, L.J., is inapplicable to this case because the deceased partner had an interest in every item of the partnership assets, and he would distinguish the case put in the illustration from this case in that matter. But surely Turner, L.J., was not dealing with that aspect of the matter at all. If he had been, his illustration would have been entirely inapplicable to the case he was then discussing (*Pennell v. Deffell*³). He was stating generally the length to which the tracing of property was carried in Courts of Equity; and in my opinion that principle as illustrated by him on that occasion is sufficient to cover the tracing of the Rs. 10,000 originally invested in Tawker & Sons' business to the assets remaining in that business when they were adjudged insolvents. It makes no difference that their assets represented not only the Rs. 10,000 but something else also. That does not affect the question, as is shown by the second illustration to S. 63 of the Trusts Act.

But Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar has raised several interesting and ingenious objections why this principle is not applicable to the present case. He has pointed out quite rightly that, when you are tracing trust property through a chain of transformations, if you reach a stage where the relationship of trustee and beneficiary no longer exists and in its place you find only the relationship of debtor and creditor, the chain breaks and tracing can go no farther. That is quite true. He urges that in this case the chain broke at the very outset, his contention being that, when the Rs. 10,000 was invested in Tawker & Sons' business, the relationship of debtor and creditor arose and superseded that of trustee and beneficiary. But I do not think that that correctly represents the position. Can we say in the words of Thesiger, L.J., in *In re Hallett's Estate*³ that nothing remained "beyond the ordinary duty of a man to pay his debts"? What difference except in one respect, can we find between the relationship of Tawker & Sons to the plaintiff in regard to the Rs. 10,000 and the relationship of the surviving partners to the executor of the deceased partner in the illustration put by Turner, L.J., in *Pennell v. Deffell*⁴. There is one distinction. I have mentioned that Tawker & Sons were to pay to the plaintiff interest at 9 per cent. per annum on the Rs. 10,000. Is that a crucial distinction? We must remember that this is a very exceptional trust, in which the creator of the trust authorised the trustees to use the money, to invest the money, in their own business. If in exercising their option Tawker & Sons had invested it in some other firm and had collected 9 per cent. from those people and handed it over to the plaintiff, there would have been no question that their trusteeship would have continued. Does it make any real difference that by the special authorisation of the settlor they invested the money in their own business? As is well known, if the subject of a trust is a house, the trustee cannot take a lease of that house for himself. But, if it were permissible for him to do so, could you say that his position as lessee would in that case entirely supersede and wipe out his position as trustee? That is what is suggested in this case—that a relationship of debtor and creditor has arisen which has superseded, overwhelmed and obliterated Tawker & Sons' trusteeship. For myself, I do not see how that in the circumstances can have happened. And we must remember that it is admitted that they were trustees for the plaintiff in this matter and that their trusteeship in some sense persisted throughout.

Another objection is based upon the evidence that no money passed between the plaintiff's father and Tawker & Sons when this trust was created. D.W. 1, Tawker & Sons' clerk, says that this was a matter of book adjustment. On that remark Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar bases the contention that tracing is in this case impossible under the decision in *In re Hallett and Company: Ex parte Blane*⁵. It is quite true that in this case Tawker & Sons, who held Rs. 10,000 of the plaintiff's father's money, did not pay that Rs. 10,000 into his hands, and he did not pay it back into their hands. But what happened in effect was that they held his Rs. 10,000 and he said "Please keep that Rs. 10,000 on behalf of my son and invest it in your business." The result of that was that, whereas before the transaction Tawker & Sons were liable to pay Rs. 10,000 to the plaintiff's father at any moment, after the transaction they held Rs. 10,000 which could not be claimed from them for eight years until the plaintiff became 21, and that Rs. 10,000 they could use in their own business. Is it not clear from that that Tawker & Sons' resources, their assets, were by that transaction augmented by the Rs. 10,000? That alone would take this case out of the ruling in In re Hallett and Company: Ex parte Blane.⁵ I may mention here that Tawker & Sons' clerk, who has been examined as D.W. 1, gave some confused evidence about the disposal of the Rs. 65,000 collected by Tawker & Sons on behalf of the plaintiff's father. From one part of his evidence it appears that so much of that

5. (1894) L.R. 2 Q.B. 237.

Rs. 65,000 had been paid out by Tawker & Sons to different persons that less than Rs. 10,000 remained to be dealt with at the time the trust was created. But afterwards he contradicted himself. When we examine his evidence, what is it worth? He is not a man who could give any evidence about the matter of his own knowledge. It appears from the record that, when he was asked questions on this subject, he looked into some book which was in Court but which was not exhibited in evidence, and gave his replies from what he found in that book. I do not understand myself how that evidence was in any way admissible. It appears to me of no value whatever.

The last contention of Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar is that the subject-matter of this trust was only a debt due from Tawker & Sons to the plaintiff's father. I have indicated already that I do not think on the facts that represents the position correctly. I may add that, if the plaintiff's father had merely transferred to Tawker & Sons the legal right to a debt due to him from Tawker & Sons, the debt would have been extinguished, and there would have been nothing on which the trust could operate. But obviously that is not a complete account of what happened.

In my opinion the plaintiff has sufficiently traced this trust property, the Rs. 10,000, to the assets of Tawker & Sons in the hands of the Official Assignee, and he is entitled to a charge on those assets. Though, with respect, I do not agree with all the steps by which Kumaraswami Sastri, J., reached his decision, I agree that his decision is correct. In my opinion, therefore, this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Cornish, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the arrangement evidenced by Exs. A and B was a trust. It was common ground upon the pleadings of the plaintiff and defendants 1 to 8 that a trust was created by the plaintiff's father over a sum of Rs. 10,000 in the hands of the defendants and owing to the plaintiff's father for the benefit of the plaintiff and that the defendants accepted the trusteeship. The 9th defendant, the Official Assignee, by his written statement did not admit the fact or validity of the trust. But the only issue framed on this point was "What were the terms of the trust," which would seem to import that there was in fact a trust. No question was put to the plaintiff's witness, the plaintiff's father, contradicting or challenging either the fact or the validity of the trust. Indeed, he was only asked one question about the trust and that solitary question put to him in cross-examination was: "When was this trust created?"

But it has been argued that, notwithstanding the intention of the parties to stand towards one another in the relationship of trustees and beneficiary, the arrangement whereby the trustees were to have the use of the trust money for investment in their business is so incompatible with the notion of a trust, that no trust can be inferred, and that the parties must be taken as standing in the relationship of debtors and creditor only in respect of the Rs. 10,000. No doubt it is a well-established principle that a trustee is to make no profit out of the trust fund, the reason for the rule being as stated in Lewin on Trusts, 13th Ed., p. 306, "to keep trustees in the straight line of their duty." It is equally a principle that, if a trustee trades with the trust money, he is accountable to the beneficiary for the profits. But it is open to a settlor when creating a trust to make it advantageous to the person appointed trustee to undertake the trusteeship, and to determine the purposes for which the trust fund shall be utilised, always provided that the purpose of the trust is not unlawful. There is nothing illegal in a settlor authorising by the instrument of trust the trustee to invest the trust money in a business, whether the trustee's own business or some other business, and providing that interest shall be paid for the use of the money so invested. The only effect of such an authority is to save the trustee from what would otherwise be a breach of trust. In my view, therefore, there is no ground for holding that the arrangement made by the plaintiff's father with defendants 1 to 8 is not capable of being treated as a trust.

Now the money being trust money, and if, as stated by the plaintiff's witness at the trial (in contradiction of the plaintiff's written statement in paragraph 7 of the plaint) it was invested in the defendants' firm, the plaintiff as beneficiary has a right to follow the money if he can trace it into the firm's assets now in the hands of the Official Assignee. Section 63 of the Indian Trusts Act gives him this right, and in my opinion it is unnecessary to look beyond this section. The relevant portion of S. 63 provides:

"Where the trustee has disposed of trust property and the money or other property which he has received therefor can be traced in his hands, or the hands of his legal representative or legatee, the beneficiary has, in respect thereof, rights as nearly as may be the same as his rights in respect of the original trust property."

The two illustrations to the section describe the rights of a beneficiary where there has been a wrongful investment of the trust money by the trustee. But the right of the beneficiary to follow the trust money does not depend upon the act of the trustee being a wrongful one. This is clear from the principles stated by Sir George Jessel, M.R., in *In re Hallett's Estate; Knatchbull v. Hallett*³, and which are embodied in S. 63. At page 708 of the judgment Sir George Jessel says:

"You can, if the sale was rightful, take the proceeds of the sale, if you can identify them. If the sale was wrongful, you can still take the proceeds of the sale, in a sense adopting the sale for the purpose of taking the proceeds, if you can identify them. There is no distinction, therefore, between a rightful and a wrongful disposition of the property, so far as regards the right of the beneficial owner to follow the proceeds."

The judgment proceeds to show that where property has been acquired by a trustee with money, partly trust money and partly the trustee's own money, the beneficiary can no longer elect to take the property, for the reason that it has been purchased with a mixed fund and not with the trust money purely and simply, and therefore the beneficiary is entitled to a charge upon the property for the amount of the trust money laid out in the purchase.

The evidence of the plaintiff's witness, who is the creator of the trust, is that this sum of Rs. 10,000 was in fact used by the defendants in the purchase of show-room stock. But his evidence is not very precise on this point; for in cross-examination he appears to admit that this was an assumption made by him from the fact that a few days after the receipt of this money certain show-room stock was purchased by the defendants. Besides, the witness appears to be speaking of a transaction which took place some time at the end of August or the beginning of September before he left the defendants' shop, where he was employed as manager and prior to the creation of the trust in October. It is certainly difficult to reconcile this evidence with the statement in his letter, Ex. A, written on the 5th of October in which he speaks of a sum of about Rs. 13,000 the balance of money remaining in the defendants' hands in respect of which he requests the investment of Rs. 10,000 in their firm for the benefit of his minor son, the plaintiff. But I do not think that the inability of the witness to identify any particular stock as purchased with the Rs. 10,000 affects the plaintiff's right to follow the trust money if it be established that the sum of Rs. 10,000 the subject of the trust was as a matter of fact invested in the defendants' business. The trust money, in my opinion, is traceable into the defendants' firm notwithstanding the plaintiff's inability at the time when the stock-in-trade of the firm became vested in the Official Assignee to point to any particular stock as representing the original investment. I think this is clear from what was said by Turner, L.J., in *Pennell v. Deffell*⁴:

"It is, I apprehend, an undoubted principle of this Court, that as between cestui que trust and trustee, and all parties claiming under the trustee, otherwise than by purchase for valuable consideration without notice, all property belonging to a trust, however much it may be changed or altered in its nature or character, and all the fruit of such property, whether in its original or in its altered state, continues to be subject to or affected by the trust."

And after giving examples of this principle the Lord Justice added:

"But of course in those cases as in other cases the property which is the subject of the trust must in some manner be ascertained."

Reference may also be made to *Official Assignee of Madras v. Devakottah Nagarathar Sri Minakshi Vidyasala Paripalana Sangam*⁶ where this doctrine was applied.

The learned Trial Judge accepted the evidence of the plaintiff's witness. I have already indicated that the witness's effort to identify particular show-room goods as the goods purchased with the Rs. 10,000 does not appear to me successful; but I see no reason to doubt that the transaction evidenced by Exs. A and B was a real and genuine transaction and that as a result of that arrangement the sum of Rs. 10,000 was in fact invested in the business of the defendants and utilised for the purposes of the business. No evidence has been called to disprove the investment of this money in the business, or to show that the stock which became vested in the Official Assignee on the firm's insolvency was in no wise, or could not be, the produce of the original investment of the Rs. 10,000.

In these circumstances, it seems to me that Kumaraswami Sastri, J., rightly held that the plaintiff was entitled to a charge on the sale proceeds of the stock realised by the Official Assignee, and I think that this appeal should be dismissed.

In a suit for arrears of rent, the Court of first appeal referred in its judgment to the suit land as the defendant's jagir, but it also stated that the only point at issue was as to the rate of rent, and on second appeal the High Court dealt with the case in the same way.

Held, that in these circumstances, even assuming that the question of the defendant's tenure arose in the case, as the final judgment of the High Court, in second appeal, did not deal in any way with the question whether the defendant's tenure was a jagir, there was no final decision within the meaning of S. 11, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, of the issue whether the defendant's estate was a jagir.

An entry in a record of rights prepared by a Settlement Officer under the provisions of the Chota Nagpore Tenancy Act, 1908, may be rectified at the instance of the party aggrieved in a suit brought by him before a Revenue Officer within a period of three months (see section 87), but in the absence of such a suit, the entry in the kherwat stands and cannot be altered by the Civil Court, and under section 84 (3) of the Act it is to be "evidence of the matter referred to in such entry and is to be presumed to be correct until it has been proved by evidence to be incorrect". These entries, being made after enquiry by experienced revenue officials, are statutory evidence of great weight, and the onus is on the party impugning their correctness to establish by cogent evidence that the entries are incorrect.

Held, that on the evidence in the present case, the onus had not been discharged.

The Barsote Raj is a non-resumable Shikmi or Shamilat Taluk, and is not a jagir tenure held under the Ramgarh Raj.

The principal question for determination on the present appeal was whether Barsote Raj, which comprises more than 100 villages, is a Shikmi or Shamilat Taluk and non-resumable by the respondent, the Raja of Ramgarh, or that it is a Jagir which the Raja of Ramgarh is entitled to resume on the failure of male heirs of the original grantee. The Subordinate Judge held in favour of the appellant that it was a non-resumable Shikmi Taluk, but the Appellate Court took the opposite view. Hence this appeal. The material facts of the case appear sufficiently fully from their Lordships' judgment.

The relevant sections of the Chota Nagpore Tenancy Act, 1908, to which reference is made in their Lordships' judgment, are:

Section 84.—(1) In any suit or other proceeding in which a record of rights prepared and published under this Chapter, or a duly certified copy thereof or extract therefrom, is produced, such record of rights shall be presumed to have been finally published, unless such publication is expressly denied; and a certificate, signed by the Revenue Officer, or by the Deputy Commissioner of any district in which the local area, estate, or tenure or part thereof to which the record of rights relates is wholly or partly situate, stating that the record of rights has been finally published under this Chapter, shall be conclusive evidence of such publication.

(2) The Local Government may, by notification, declare, with regard to any specified area, that a record of rights has been finally published for every village included in that area; and such notification shall be conclusive evidence of such publication.

(3) Every entry in a record of rights so published shall be evidence of the matter referred to in such entry, and shall be presumed to be correct until it is proved, by evidence, to be incorrect.

Section 87.—(1) In proceedings under this Chapter, a suit may be instituted before a Revenue Officer at any time within three months from the date of the certificate of the final publication of the record of rights under sub-section (2) of section 83, for the decision of any dispute regarding any entry which a Revenue Officer has made in, or any omission which he has made from, the record, whether such dispute be . . . and the Revenue Officer shall hear and decide the dispute.

Section 92.—No suit shall be brought in any Court in respect of any order directing the preparation of a record of rights under this Chapter, or in respect of the framing, publication, signing or attestation of such a record or of any part of it.

Section 258.—Save as expressly provided in this Act, no suit shall be entertained in any Court to vary, modify or set aside, either directly or indirectly, any order or decree of any Deputy Commissioner or Revenue Officer in any suit or proceeding under sections 29, 32, 35, 42, 46, sub-section (4), 49, 50, 54, 61, 63, 65, 73, 75, 85, 86, 87, 89, 90 or 91 (proviso) or under Chapters 13, 14, 15, 16 or 18, except upon the ground of fraud or want of jurisdiction.

29th November, 1929. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir John Wallis.

SIR JOHN WALLIS.—This suit was instituted in 1919 by the Court of Wards on behalf of the plaintiff, the Raja of Ramgarh, who was then a minor against the first defendant the Raja of Barsote, who was also a minor and others claiming under him for a declaration that his tenure "ordinarily known as the Barsote Lat" is not a shamilat or shikmi taluk of the Ramgarh estate nor is it non-resumable as recorded in the kherwat forming part of the record of rights prepared by the Settlement Officer under the provisions of the Chota Nagpore Tenancy Act, 1908, and for a further declaration that it is an ordinary jagir under the Ramgarh Raj and is resumable on failure of the direct male line of Raja Pirthi Karan, an ancestor of the first defendant, who, according to the plaint, was the original grantee.

The record of rights was drawn up in 1914, and it was open to the plaintiff under S. 87 of the Act to file a suit before a Revenue Officer within three months to rectify the entry in the kherwat. This not having been done, the entry stands and cannot be altered by the Civil Court, and under S. 84 (3) it is to be "evidence of the matter referred to in such entry and is to be presumed to be correct until it has been proved by evidence to be incorrect."

It seems desirable to set out at once the case which the plaintiff came into Court to prove as set out in paragraphs 5 to 8 of the plaint.

"It was customary with the proprietors of the Ramgarh estate to grant lands and villages in Jagir to their retainers and well-wishers on condition of rendering various services or for maintaining them sometimes paying small rent for them and sometimes paying no rent. These grants originally used to be simply tenancies at will or at most life-grants being resumable on the death of the grantee. Eventually they became heritable, being resumable on the failure of the direct male line of the grantee and also on other contingencies.

Sanads and Amalnamas used to be issued to the parties concerned and Kabuliyats used to be taken from the grantees or from the subsequent holders.

"Lat Barsote originally consisted of villages, the names of which are given in schedule 'B' annexed hereto and within the ambits of these villages new villages have sprung up and come into existence and the said Barsote Lat now consists of villages mentioned in schedule 'A'.

The said Barsote Lat was given in Jagir by a remote ancestor of the plaintiff to Pirthi Karan, who assumed the title of Raja, and who was a remote ancestor of the defendant No. 1, but the Sanad under which the grant was made is not forthcoming and the earliest document that is in existence is the Jamabandi paper of the year 1813, Sambat showing Debo to be a rent-paying tenure. The subsequent Jamabandis also show the same.

"Jaimangal Karan Deo, who also assumed the title of Raja, was an ancestor of defendant No. 1 and holder of Lat Barsote. The said Raja Jaimangal Karan Deo executed a kabuliyat in favour of Maharaja Sidh Nath Singh, an ancestor of the plaintiff in 1870, Sambat, in respect of Lat Barsote agreeing to pay an annual rent of Rs. 281-8-6 sicca which comes to Rs. 300-4-9. The genealogical table mentioned in schedules C and D respectively show the connection of the said Raja Pirthi Karan with the defendant No. 1 and that of Maharaja Pareshnath Singh with the plaintiff."

It is also alleged in the plaint that the entry in the kherwat throws a cloud on the title of the plaintiff and hence the necessity of the present suit; and it may readily be understood that apart from the possibly remote contingency of a failure of male heirs on the part of the first defendant's family it is in the plaintiff's interest to establish if he can that the Barsote estate is a portion of the Ramgarh estate granted in jagir to the defendant's ancestor.

The case presented in the written statements is that the allegations in the plaint are a travesty of the facts. The first defendant's estate was never known as the "Barsote Lat" but as the "Barsote Raj" and had descended in his family for more than fifty generations. It was not granted by a remote ancestor of the plaintiff to Pirthi Karan. It was never held as a jagir under the Ramgarh Raj, but "for convenience of realization Government dues payable for the Barsote estate were paid through the proprietor of the Ramgarh estate like other similar shamilat taluks in the district from about the Permanent Settlement," that is from about 1793.

The Additional Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh dismissed the plaintiff's suit, but his judgment was reversed on appeal by the High Court at Patna which gave the plaintiff a decree. As will be seen the judgments of the learned Judges, Dawson Miller, C.J., and Mullick, J., are not based on direct evidence as to the grant of a jagir, but on inferences and presumptions which have to be carefully examined.

In the first place it seems desirable to state that the defendant's estate has never been ordinarily known as the Barsote Lat nor have the defendant and his predecessors ever been known as the holders of a jagir in the Ramgarh estate. They have always been known and addressed in official correspondence as Rajahs or Zemindars (that is to say proprietors) of the Pargana of Barsote, and their estate has been referred to as their zemindari or property, which is in entire accordance with the statement in the record of rights, that it is a shamilat taluk, that is to say an estate distinct from the Ramgarh estate though included at the Decennial Settlement of 1790, made permanent in 1793, in the zemindari of the Rajah of Ramgarh with whom the settlement was effected. The term shikmi taluk has the same meaning, the word shikmi, or belly, being applied to taluks which were once independent but are now inside another estate.

It will, in their Lordships' opinion, throw much light upon the case to trace in the next place how the present dispute would appear to have arisen. Both these estates are situated in Chota Nagpore, which in the 18th century was a wild and thinly populated hill country to the south-west of Berar and was under the government of the Nawab of Bengal, until it came under British rule in consequence of the grant of the diwani in 1765. After a rebellion in 1831 it was placed in charge of an officer, styled the Agent to the Governor-General for the South Western Province; and on the 22nd November, 1839, the Agent called upon the zemindars to procure a return for all the elakadars or holders of tenures under them, and themselves to submit a consolidated return. The return submitted by the elakadars was to show "the amount of land revenue of each manza (village) paid by the zemindars to Government, and the jama thereof realized from the tenants through the elakadars, with a description as to how, or under what conditions and since what date, the land jagirdari, ghatwari or zemindari, as the case may be, has been in possession of the elakadars." This shows that the elakadars in the zemindari might be either jagirdars, holders of Ghatwal tenures or zemindars, that is to say, proprietors; and emphasises the importance of the fact already mentioned that the defendant's predecessors were always known as Rajahs or Zemindars of the Pergana of Barsote.

There was delay in the submission of these returns and their Lordships observe that a letter written by the Rajah of Ramgarh, Ex. 39 of the 14th June, 1842, excusing the delay, contains the following sentence:—"Some jagirdars and the Rajas of Barsote, Isutkhori and Barmaria, etc., have not submitted the statement in spite of demands made on them." This makes a clear distinction between the jagirdars in the zemindari and these Rajahs, though they are all included in the appended list [Ex. 39 (a)] headed "List of defaulting jagirdars."

What next followed is of great importance in their Lordships' opinion for a due understanding of the case. There is evidence that the defendant's predecessors had always objected to being included in the Ramgarh zemindari, and the Rajah appears to have thought that this was a good opportunity of asserting his independence and claiming to pay revenue direct to Government. Accordingly, on the 29th July, 1843, he presented in person the return called for together with a patta or copy of a patta bearing date the 5th August, 1776, and both documents were then signed by Major J. Simpson, the Assistant, who was then in charge of the Hazaribagh district. The patta has been exhibited by the defendants as Ex. U in this case, and has assumed more importance in the arguments before their Lordships than in the Courts below, as will be seen later. The return gives the required particulars of the names and collections of 133 villages, some of them described as uninhabited, meaning deserted by the inhabitants, as was too often the case in those days. Their Lordships see no reason to doubt that this was a genuine return of the villages which had been in the Rajah's possession.

In the column headed "Remarks" the Rajah stated that these manzas had been in his ancestor's proprietary possession for more than 52 generations and that the plaintiff's ancestor, Dalel Singh. (who died in 1724), had deprived his ancestor of the Pergana of Rampur and of some villages in the Pergana of Barsote and alleged that in 1776 Mr. Grant Heatley, when he came to make a settlement, finding that the villages in his possession formed part of the old zemindari of the family, allowed them to remain under Government collection, and granted his ancestor a patta signed by Maharaja Paras Nath Singh, the ancestor of the plaintiff, at a fixed rent of Rs. 151. He stated that he had wrongfully been made to pay the revenue to the Rajah of Ramgarh and relied on the fact that the villages which had remained in his possession had not been entered in the sarsikan accounts of the Ramgarh estate to show that the settlement of these villages had not been made with the Ramgarh zemindar. The observations concluded with a petition that the Government revenue entered in the patta granted by Mr. Heatley, viz., Rs. 151, might be received by the Government.

This return no doubt ignores the fact that the Barsote estate had been included in the permanent settlement made with the Rajah of Ramgarh and that the defendant's ancestors had been paying the annual Rs. 282-8-4 since 1813 as proved, and presumably since 1790 also; but the statement that Barsote villages, 34 in number, which are now shown in the Ramgarh accounts as forming part of the Ramgarh estate, and the Pergana of Rampur once belonged to Barsote is confirmed by Ex. W.W., a register relating to the Pergana of Ramgarh; 1760—1790, produced from the Collectorate, which shows that; long after 1724, these villages continued to be registered in the name of the defendant's ancestor.

Ex. A, a statement of gross produce and sadar jama of villages in Raj Ramgarh, according to sarsikan for 1793-4, contains entries relating to these 34 villages only in the Pergana of Barsote, and says nothing about the defendant's 112 or more villages. As regards these earlier sarsikan accounts to which the Rajah appealed, it is fairly clear that, if his villages were included in the Ramgarh zemindari otherwise than as a shamilat taluk, they should have appeared in these accounts. The other side were quite alive to this difficulty in the way of their contention that the defendant's estate was only a Ramgarh jagir, and to get over it, entered the defendant's estate in their 1843 return as one mauza or village, making up with 33 other villages mentioned, the 34 villages owned by Ramgarh in the Pergana of Barsote. It was entered as held by the defendant's predecessor as a jagir at a permanent rent of Rs. 281-8-9, and described as consisting of one mauza or village bearing the name of Lot Debang, and as having an approximate area of 60,000 (bighas or acres) and yielding an annual jama to the elakadar of Rs. 2,000. Obviously, as the Subordinate Judge has pointed out, there never could have been one mauza or village of this size, including the defendant's 112 or more villages. This, however, is the unsubstantial foundation on which the plaintiff's case rests.

In the later 1859 return the jagir is entered as Lot Debo instead of Lot Debang; in the plaint in the present suit it is stated quite untruly that the defendant's estate was ordinarily known as the Barsote Lat, and it is so described in the appellate decree.

It will be convenient at once to call attention to the worthless character of the earlier evidence adduced in support of this description. The village of Debo was one of the 34 villages included in the Ramgarh accounts of 1793-4 (Ex. A), with a gross produce of Rs. 3.2 and a sadar jama of Rs. 5. Exs. 21 to 21 (b), described as jamabandi azwarya of Barsote for 1756, 1761 and 1778, show a Barsote village Debo, as held by the defendant's ancestor Pirthi Karan Raja. ["Previous patta Rs. 3, Present patta Rs. 2," "Amount" Rs. 40 in Ex. 21 (a) and Rs. 50 in Ex. 21 (b).] These entries presumably refer to the village of Debo, which was one of the 34 Barsote villages which, since the beginning of the 18th century, had been incorporated in the Ramgarh estate, and have nothing to do with the 112 villages forming the defendant's estate which are the subject of this suit.

On the other hand, the entries in Exs. 21 (c) and 21 (d) for 1781 and 1785 may relate to the suit villages. Ex. 21 (c) shows Rajah Pirthi Karan as liable to pay monthly Rs. 21.1; that is Rs. 240-12 annually and Ex. 21 (d) Rs. 261. The entry in Ex. 21 (c) appears under the heading Jagirdari, and the entry under Ex. 21 (d) does not. This is all the evidence of the early accounts prior to the Permanent Settlement, and it does not support the case that the defendant's predecessors held a jagir known as Lat Debang or Lat Debo under the Ramgarh Rajah. Moreover, such entries would be of little or no weight unless it appeared that the defendant's predecessors were aware of the way in which the Ramgarh accounts were kept.

It really comes to this, that in 1843 there was a dispute between the two Rajahs, one endeavouring to go behind the terms of the Permanent Settlement and establish his complete independence of the Ramgarh zemindari and to reduce the rent payable by him to Rs. 151, and the other seeking, possibly as counter-move, to establish that, far from being independent, Barsote was only held as a jagir known as Lat Debang or Debo in his own Pergana of Barsote. In their Lordships' opinion, the plaintiff has failed to prove that there ever was a jagir known as Lat Debo.

To resume the narrative of events, the dispute as to the rate of fixed rent came to a head in 1858 when Ramgarh sued Barsote for arrears. In his plaint, as appears from the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner, he made the not very relevant allegation that mauzas of Pergana Barsote constituting (or forming part of) the zemindari of his ancestors, were given to the plaintiff's ancestors as a mashruti jagir on payment of rent, and alleged that he had been realising rent at the rate of Rs. 281-8-3. The defendant, on the other hand, denied that there was any mashruti jagir, and pleaded that the villages of the Pergana Barsote were in possession of his ancestors from before the time of British rule, and further alleged that on coming to make a settlement of Ramgarh Mr. Leslie granted a patta signed by himself and by Rajah Paras Nath Singh, the ancestor of the plaintiff, fixing the annual rent at Rs. 151 sicca, and that the defendant refused to accept rent at that rate. This was a repetition on both sides of the case set up in 1843.

Before the suit came on for hearing the Government in 1859 called upon the Ramgarh zemindari to make a return of title-holders in his zemindari for the purpose of the warrant of precedence stating the origin of the title. The Ramgarh zemindar gravely returned that the title of Raja had been conferred on the ancestor of the Barsote Rajah by his own ancestor Dalel Singh when his brother married into the Barsote family. He did not fail to add that Barsote was his own jagirdar. This choice of Dalel Singh as the alleged fountain of honour was not a very happy one, as it was Dalel Singh, as has been seen, who wrested from the then Rajah of Barsote 34 villages of the Pergana of Barsote and another pergana as well.

The Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh, who was the same Major Simpson who had received and affixed his signature to the return and patta presented by the Barsote Raja in 1843, gave judgment in the rent suit in June, 1861, and the case went on appeal to the Judicial Commissioner and on special or second appeal to the High Court at Calcutta.

It will be convenient to deal here with the contention raised both here and below, and upheld by the learned Chief Justice, that these judgments make the issue as to the question of jagirs judicata in favour of the plaintiff. With reference to the patta, the Deputy Commissioner observed:

"It appears that the patta, dated the 5th Bhado Bali Sambat, 1833, signed by the Collector of Ramgarh on the 5th August, 1776, which has been filed by the defendant, relates to the period prior to the decennial settlement, and that there is no mention in the Istamrari mokurrari that the same jama would stand for ever."

The Deputy Commissioner then dealt with the receipts filed for the defendant, some for part payments and none showing an acceptance of Rs. 151 in full satisfaction and he passed a decree for arrears at a rent of Rs. 300-4-9 as claimed in the plaint. On appeal the Judicial Commissioner observed that the defendant had filed a copy of the patta, but that it did not bear the signature of anyone and that it related to a period prior to the decennial settlement and that there was no evidence that the same jama was allowed to stand at the decennial settlement. In the result he dismissed the appeal. The case then came on special (or second) appeal before a Bench of the Calcutta High Court who delivered the following judgment:

"The plaintiff proved that he had realized rents at the rate claimed down to the year 1900 S. That threw the onus on the defendant of showing that he was liable for a less amount only. The defendant for that purpose put in the copy of a patta and receipts which the judges assigned satisfactory reasons for rejecting as not genuine. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs."

As regards the question of res judicata the final judgment of the High Court does not deal in any way with the question whether the defendant's tenure was a jagir nor does the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner at the trial. On appeal the Judicial Commissioner no doubt referred at the beginning of his judgment to the suit land as the defendant's jagir, but he also stated that the only point at issue was as to the rate of rent, and the High Court dealt with the case in the same way. In these circumstances it appears to their Lordships that there was no final decision within the meaning of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the issue whether the defendant's estate was a jagir, if indeed it can be said to have arisen in the case.

Their Lordships will now resume the narrative of events which led up to the litigation. There were subsequent rent suits in which the question of the jagir tenure was left open. In 1876 the Commissioner of Chota Nagpur made a report to the Government of Bengal on the land tenures of Hazaribagh (Ex. M.) which contains the following passage:—

"Samilat or Shikmi Talooks. In paragraph 5 I have mentioned that Pargana Chai was composed of five petty Rajas. The Rajas were semi-independent, only paying tribute to Raja Lal Khan, and when merged into Ramgura continuing to pay tribute to the Ramgura Raja. When the country was taken by the English and its settlement was being made, these Rajas endeavoured to get settlements made with them direct, but their efforts and through (?) they were maintained each in her raj, they were directed to pay their tribute and was then failed converted into a fixed rental of Ramgura. The Raja of Rampoor Jagodih Paroria and Itkhori accepted these terms, and have been made Shikmi Talookdars. The Raja of Pitij, who was a resident of Gaya, refused to agree and made over his Talook to the Raja of Kendi into whose estate this Talook has merged, and the title has been lost. Similarly, the Raja of Barsote succeeded in saving his estate from being merged into that of Ramgura, and the estate was made Shamilat Talook as also was Pargana Koderma; but the circumstances relating to this last, its severance from the Ramgura Estate, etc., are related in a separate chapter. There is a legend (?) that there were two more such Shikmi Talook, viz., (s) Tilaiya and Gola, but they have long been extinct and have merged into the Ramgura estate."

There are obvious misprints in this printed copy, but it appears to mean that, in the Commissioner's opinion, what happened was that when the country was taken by the British and its settlement was being made, which would be about 1776, the date of the patta (Ex. U.), Barsote and two other small Rajahs were ordered to pay their tribute or land-revenue to Ramgarh, and that this made them shamilat taluks. That is in effect the case presented to their Lordships by the appellant, with this addition, that before the date of the Permanent Settlement the amount of the tribute or land revenue payable by Barsote was raised from 151 to 282 sicca-rupees, or Rs. 300-4-9 in the Company's coin, which is now the amount of the fixed rent payable by Barsote to Ramgarh.

The preparation of the record of rights under the Act of 1908 and the entry which gave rise to the present suit have already been mentioned, but it appears desirable at this stage to set out the Settlement Officer's reasons for making the disputed entry as contained in his order of the 1st February, 1914.

"After reading the evidence produced I am satisfied that these tenures are not of the same origin as the Jagirs founded by the Padma (Ramgarh) Raja and his predecessors. They have hitherto been regarded and treated as shikmi or shamilat taluks and they probably existed as independent properties before the Ramgarh Raj was established, and I can find nothing in these recent history to change the status of the holders of these taluks.

As they were not originated by the Ramgarh Raj, I find them to be not resumable by the zamindar. They will be noted in the kherwat as "not liable to resumption."

The entry in the record of rights being evidence by statute and the onus being on the plaintiff to prove by evidence that it is incorrect, the question is has the plaintiff discharged the onus? After a careful consideration of the evidence and the arguments submitted by counsel their Lordships agree with the Subordinate Judge that he has entirely failed to do so.

In coming to an opposite conclusion the learned Chief Justice accepted the entries in the plaintiff's accounts which their Lordships have already given reasons for disregarding, and also attached great importance to the kabuliyat executed by the defendant's predecessor in 1813:—

"To

Sri Sidh Nath Singh Bahadur.

I am Raja Jai Mangal Karandeo of Barsot Khas District Ramgarh. I owe Rs. 281-8-6 in Kaldar (milled edge) coin on account of rent of the villages to the landlord for 1869 and so I execute this kabuliyat at Kachahri and do declare that I shall pay off the same according to my promise made herein without any objection.

This document the learned Chief Justice regarded as an admission of proprietary rights in the Ramgarh zemindar, and he drew the inference that the defendant was a jagirdar, that being the highest tenure on the estate. Their Lordships are unable to agree with either of these conclusions.* The kabuliyat in question had done duty in the previous rent suits, and has been accepted in the Courts below. It contains particulars of the amount of rent due for fasli 1869 and details of the instalments. These are matters as to which, then as now, both the Ramgarh zemindar and the owner of the Barsote on the one hand, and the tenants cultivating under them on the other, were required annually to exchange pattas and kabuliyats. The stipulation that overdue instalments should bear interest is quite usual, and it would not be surprising or unprecedented that the landlords should have endeavoured to strengthen their position by inserting an acknowledgment of liability to eviction for non-payment of rent, more especially seeing that, as Mr. de Gruyther has pointed out, while the Government were armed with drastic powers for the recovery of their revenue from the zemindars, the zemindars and under-proprietors had at this time no summary powers of recovering rent from the cultivating tenants and had only the remedy of a civil suit. This was probably the common form of patta and kabuliyat in use at this time, and was used in this instance for an agreement as to the payment of arrears for the preceding fasli, as it was executed in 1870 in respect of rent which accrued in 1869. Be this as it may, the fact that in one single instance the Ramgarh zemindar succeeded in getting the Barsote Rajah to affix his signature to such a document is, in their Lordships' opinion, altogether insufficient to warrant a finding that the entry in the record of rights as to his proprietary rights has been proved by evidence to be incorrect. Having regard to the rest of the evidence, it seems in the last degree improbable that he would consciously have made any admission adverse to his claim to be the zemindar or proprietor of his estate.

The Chief Justice has also relied on the fact that the defendant's predecessor, after the Permanent Settlement, did not seek for separation as he was entitled to do if his present case is true. Now it is matter of history that the number of tahukdars entitled to separation was so great that Lord Wellesley's Government found it necessary to pass a Regulation in 1801 limiting the time for making such an application to three months from the date of the Regulation. In their Lordships' opinion the failure of the defendant's predecessor in this backward and remote part of the Presidency to put in an application within the time limited cannot be considered as raising any presumption that he was not entitled to make such an application.

Mullick, J., the other learned Judge, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's predecessor, Mukand Singh, in 1764, conquered the territories of the Barsote Chief and reduced him into a state of complete subjection, that whatever claim to independence he had before that date was finally extinguished, and that thereafter he was allowed to remain in possession of a certain number of villages upon condition of loyal service.

Their Lordships entirely agree with the way in which this contention was dealt with by the Subordinate Judge. When the Company obtained the grant of the diwani in 1765 they did not at once begin collecting the revenue through their own officers, but put Mohammad Raza Khan in charge of Bengal and a Raja Shitab Rai in charge of Bihar. In September, 1771, he submitted a report (Ex. V) giving the history of the revenue administration from the time of Akbar, and an account of this particular district from 1719 to 1769, which shows an almost continuous condition of lawless violence in which the aggressive predecessors of the plaintiff waged private war on the surrounding talukdars, including the predecessors of the defendant. The letters of Captain Camac, who had been sent to Chota Nagpore to restore order, August, 1771, to November, 1772, show that Mukand Singh, the plaintiff's predecessor, was then in open rebellion and had ordered the ryots of Chay and Champey, which districts included Barsote, to cut and carry off their crops to the hills to prevent the Company from realizing their revenue, and that he was burning the villages which refused to obey. Eventually he was put to flight, and Tej Singh was installed in his place by the Company, and, dying shortly afterwards, was succeeded by his son, Paras Nath Singh. Before Tej Singh's installation, the position of the Ramgarh Rajah was simply that of a spoliator, and, in their Lordships' opinion, there is no presumption or likelihood of any lawful settlement having been made with the predecessors of the defendant reducing them to the position of jagirdars. The presumption rather is that the talukdars who had been driven out returned and resumed possession of their property when order was restored. In 1776 Mr. Grant Heatley came to Ramgarh to settle the Company's revenue, and it is recorded in the report of the Commissioner to the Government of Bengal on the land tenure of Hazaribagh, already mentioned, that the defendant's predecessor, with certain other Rajas, endeavoured to get a settlement made with them direct, but though they were maintained each in his Raj they were directed to pay their tribute through the then Ramgarh Raja. This is much more likely than that the Barsote Raja should have been reduced to the status of a jagirdar. The attempt of the Barsote Raja in 1843 to establish his right to pay revenue direct to Government, which was very possibly the origin of this suit, goes to show that payment to the revenue through the Ramgarh zemindar was still regarded as a grievance, which would not have been felt by anyone in the position of a jagirdar.

Lastly, Mr. Upjohn, for the respondent, has put forward a new contention and has relied on the plaintiff's document (Ex. U), the patta of 1776, already mentioned, as the foundation of his client's title. This document had up to this stage of the case been impugned by his client and had been disregarded by the Courts below as having been rejected by the Courts in the rent suit of 1858. It is now said that it was only the receipts tendered in that suit which were rejected. The document is in Bengali and Hindi, the only material difference being that the words, "a few other mouzas," in the translation from the Bengali, are "several other mauzas" in the translation from the Hindi. The Bengali version is as follows:—

"To

Raja Pirthi Karan Deo.

"This patta is executed in 1183 to the following effect. Mauza Barsot and a few other mauzas, appertaining to Tappa Barsot, Pargana Champa, Chakla Ramgarh, which have been in your possession from before, shall continue to be in your direct possession. For the same you shall, according to instalments (fixed), pay a rent of Rs. 151 per annum, at the rate prevailing in the Chakla. You shall as usual be in possession of all the lands that are in your possession from before excepting the Debottar and Brahmojtar lands and peacefully cultivate them. You won't have to pay for any loss, [etc. (?)] nor shall you be able to take (the same) from the tenants. Dated the 24th Shraban, 1833.

Ramgarh, 5th August, 1776, tappa,
 Barsat, Champa."

This Bengali version also bears the signature of Major Simpson, the Personal Assistant to the Agent. The Hindi version, which is torn, does not now bear Major Simpson's signature, but it contains the date 29th July, 1843, in which his signature was affixed. It also contains the signature of Paras Nath Singh, the plaintiff's predecessor.

The Judicial Commissioner, in the rent suit, stated that the patta bore no signature, but he appears to have looked only at the Bengali version. In the written statement of 1858 the defendant's ancestor stated that it was signed by the Collector, and Colonel Simpson, then Deputy Commissioner, who tried the case and was in a better position to judge, having seen and signed the document in 1843, states distinctly in his judgment that it was signed by the Collector. In these circumstances, their Lordships cannot say that it was not signed by the Collector, especially as the English date, the 5th August, 1776, suggests that there was an English signature. Colonel Simpson appears to have regarded the patta as confirming the title of the defendant's predecessor, and as directing that the jama (which was not and could not have been permanently fixed by Mr. Grant Heatley), should be paid to the Ramgarh Rajah, a course which, as has been seen, was adopted with regard to the neighbouring talukdars. In these circumstances, their Lordships are unable to accept Mr. Upjohn's contention, as to which, moreover, they have not had the assistance of the Courts below. It would, in their opinion, be most unsafe to treat this document as establishing the proprietary rights of the plaintiff.

On the whole, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the plaintiff has failed to establish by evidence, as he is bound by statute to do, that these entries are incorrect. On the other hand, not only are these entries themselves, made after inquiry by experienced revenue officers, statutory evidence of great weight, but there are numerous indications that they are correct. It is most improbable that the defendant's predecessors who were undoubtedly originally the proprietors of the whole Pergana of Barsote were ever reduced to the status of jagirdars of the Ramgarh estate. They were always treated as the zemindars or proprietors of Barsote. As such the defendant's predecessor in 1843 resented having to pay revenue through the Ramgarh Rajah, and by his unwise attempt to escape from this obligation would appear to have provoked the latter to attempt to prove that he was only a jagirdar. There is no evidence that up to that time the Barsote estate was ever known as Lot Debang or Lot Debo, or as the "Barsote Lat," and the earlier accounts do not, as already shown, support the case that it was a jagir. The kabuliyats that, according to the plaint, were usually taken from jagirdars on their succession, were never taken from the defendant's predecessors. Lastly, the conclusions of Major Sifton, the Settlement Officer, were largely based on the jama- bandi statement put in by the plaintiff's predecessor prior to the Decennial Settlement of 1790. Neither side has attempted to obtain production of the original, and consequently no case has been made for the admission of secondary evidence, nor has any secondary evidence been tendered. The Subordinate Judge and one of the learned Judges in the High Court have referred to statements in paragraphs 65 and 66 of the Settlement Officer's Report on the Survey and Settlement of the Hazaribagh District, which does not appear to have been even exhibited in evidence, and the Subordinate Judge has held that the report may be treated as secondary evidence of the contents of the jamabandi statement under section 63 (5) of the Indian Evidence Act. In their Lordships' opinion the report is not secondary evidence of the contents of the documents referred to in it under clause (5), or under any other section, and they are therefore left to decide the question whether the entries made by the Settlement Officer are incorrect without seeing the evidence on which he chiefly relied.

In the result their Lordships have come to the conclusion from the reasons already stated that the appeal should be allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit restored with costs throughout, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Contempt—Powers of High Court—Party in contempt committed to jail—Subsequent order for attachment of properties—Whether can be passed before expiry of term of imprisonment—Madras High Court Original Side Rules, O. 21, R. 5—Effect.

The High Court has the power to pass an order directing the attachment of the properties of the person in contempt after he has been committed to jail and before the expiry of the term of imprisonment.

O. 21, R. 5 of the Madras High Court Original Side Rules should be construed as merely regulative of the discretion vested in the High Court and not as curtailing its powers in proceedings for contempt.

Mr. Sell of Messrs. King and Partridge for plaintiffs.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The notice calls upon Mr. Ranganatham Naidu of Messrs. Dowden & Co. to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt. He appears and has been examined. He says that he is the sole proprietor of Messrs. Dowden & Co. It is immaterial for the present whether this statement is true or not. Messrs. Dowden & Co. used to be frequently appointed by the Court, auctioneers to sell properties. In this case when the sale proclamation was settled the Master appointed them auctioneers to sell certain properties in execution of a mortgage decree. Mr. Ranganatham Naidu admits that the properties were sold by him in May, 1930, and that he in due course received the sale proceeds. It was his obvious duty to have brought the money into Court. He failed to do so and the only excuse he is able to offer is that the Court was then closed. As the Master points out, this did not prevent him from bringing in the money. In any case it could have been brought on the 14th July when the Court re-opened after the long recess. Again he made default and he swore to an affidavit on that day containing a report of the sale. Though it was sworn on the 14th it was filed in Court only on the 18th. The case came up before the Master for the sale being confirmed and he discovered that the money had not been paid. After some adjournments Mr. Ranganatham Naidu finally declared before the Master on the 28th July that he used the money for his own purposes, having utilised it in payment of his own creditors described in the Master's proceedings as Multanese creditors. Several orders were made by the Master requiring Mr. Ranganatham Naidu to bring in the money and, owing to his continued default, the case was posted before the Court. As it was represented to me that if time was granted money would be forthcoming, I adjourned the case, I think, four times. I gave him every opportunity to fulfil his obligation and all he is able to say to-day is, that if another adjournment is granted money may be forthcoming. In his evidence he says that his liabilities far exceed his assets, and if that is true there is very little possibility of the money coming in. Whether the statement in regard to his financial position is true or not, I need not at present enquire. Mr. Ranganatham Naidu has committed a flagrant violation not only of the duty imposed upon him by the rules but has also disobeyed the successive orders made by the Master and by the Court. In these circumstances he is guilty of contempt and he shall stand committed to prison for a term of six months from this date, unless he shall at any time before the expiration of that term comply in all respects with the order for payment and purge himself of the contempt, in which case, he may apply for his discharge from imprisonment. (See for the form of the order *Origanti Venkataratnam v. K. Desikachari*¹.)

The notice issued to Mr. Ranganatham Naidu directs him to show cause not only why he should not be arrested but also why his properties should not be attached. As the learned Advocate-General has not been able to be present to-day I adjourn this part of the Motion to to-morrow.

It only remains to add that these proceedings were taken by the Court suo motu, as Mr. Sell, who appears for the plaintiffs in the case, not being sure of his legal position, did not desire to take any part in them.

As Mr. Ranganatham Naidu is in Court, I direct the bailiff to take him into custody¹.

[His Lordship subsequently heard arguments on the question whether the properties of the person in contempt can be attached before the expiry of the term of imprisonment and delivered the following judgment on 26th August, 1930.]

I adjourned this motion for considering the question whether the properties of the person in contempt could be attached. I directed notice to the Advocate-General and have had the advantage of hearing his argument. Mr. Radhakrishnayya, the counsel for the party, contends that under the Original Side Rules, O. 21, R. 5, the Court cannot attach the property of the person in contempt until the term limited in the warrant of imprisonment (the period of six months in the present case) expires. It is the soundness of this contention that requires to be examined. The question is, what is the power possessed by the High Court in regard to contempt independent of the Original Side Rules? Secondly, can such power be curtailed by the rules, in any event, has it been so curtailed? As I shall show presently, the High Court has inherited the powers of the old Supreme Court, which, in its turn, possessed the same power and authority as the Courts in England. What then was the extent of the jurisdiction and power of the English Courts? In *Perryman v. Dinham*² the defendant having been committed to the Fleet for not performing a decree, a sequestration was granted and the plaintiff was put into possession of the lands. The defendant objected that, he being in prison, the writ, amounting as it did to a double execution, was bad. This contention was overruled. In *Trigg v. Trigg*³ the defendant being in contempt for not producing certain deeds, was taken on an attachment and turned over to the Fleet; nevertheless, a sequestration was ordered to issue against him. In *Dent v. Dent*⁴ it was held that the Court had power to grant a sequestration, although no attachment had been issued. The question was more fully considered in *Miller v. Miller*⁵. It was argued in that case that it was the universal rule in the Courts of Equity that before an order of sequestration was made, it should be preceded by the issuing of a writ of attachment. The learned Judge overruled this contention observing:

1. (1918) 36 M.L.J. 461.

"I have looked into the cases and I do not find that this practice is so universal as stated".

The observations of Sir R. T. Kindersley in *In re The East of England Bank*⁶ are cited in the judgment:

"If the practice is that in order to obtain a writ of sequestration, you must first get a writ of attachment, the effect is that there is no provision for sequestration in the case of persons who are not resident in England."

The attachment referred to in this case is, of course, the 'attachment' of person. This case was followed in *Allen v. Allen*⁷. Daniel states the law thus:

"It was also competent to the party claiming the benefit of the decree, where the disobedient person either could not be arrested upon the process, or, having been arrested, remained in prison without paying obedience to the Court, to issue a writ of sequestration, directing the commissioners therein named to sequester the personal property of the defendant and the rents and profits of his real estates, and to keep him from the enjoyment of them, till he had cleared his contempt"—Daniel's Chancery Practice, 8th Ed., Vol. I, page 789.

The writ of sequestration referred to in the English books corresponds to what is known in this country as attachment of property. It is thus described in Edwards on Execution:

"The process of sequestration is a writ directed to certain persons, nominated by the person prosecuting the judgment or order, empowering them to enter upon the real estate of the disobedient person, and to receive, sequester, and take the rents and profits thereof, and also his personal estate, and keep the same under sequestration in their hands until he shall have performed the act required and cleared his contempt'—1888 Ed., page 268.

The authorities I have cited show that sequestration may issue after the man has been committed to jail, although the term of imprisonment has not expired. In such a case, sequestration could issue concurrently with attachment by way of double process.

This then was the extent of the power possessed by the English Courts. The High Court is invested, as I shall show, with the same authority and jurisdiction.

The Supreme Court at Madras was established by the Charter of the 26th December, 1800. By clause 5 of that Charter, a Court of Record was constituted, to be called the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras. By clause 8 that Court was invested with jurisdiction similar to the jurisdiction of the King's Bench in England. In the same way, it was also invested with the equitable jurisdiction of the kind possessed by the Court of Chancery. Clause 31 of the Charter, after enacting that the Supreme Court shall be a Court of Equity, proceeds to declare that it shall have the same power as the Court of Chancery in Great Britain, to administer justice and to compel inter alia obedience to the decrees and orders of the Court. The same clause very clearly provides that the Supreme Court shall exercise this power, as far as possible, in the same manner and to the same extent, as the High Chancellor of Great Britain. Thus, the power of the Supreme Court to punish for contempt was as extensive as that possessed by the Courts in England.

The High Court has inherited this power of the Supreme Court. Section 1 of the High Courts Act of 1861 says that it shall be lawful for His Majesty by Letters Patent to establish a High Court of Judicature at Madras. Section 8 provides that upon the establishment of such High Court, the Supreme Court and the Court of the Sudder Adawlut and Foujdarry Adawlut shall be abolished. Section 9 deals with the jurisdiction and powers of High Courts. It provides inter alia that, save as by such Letters Patent may be otherwise directed and without prejudice to the legislative powers of the Governor-General of India in Council, the High Court to be established shall have and exercise all jurisdiction and every power and authority in any manner vested in any of the abolished Courts at the time of their abolition.

In pursuance of this Act, a Letters Patent was issued and, while it recites in its preamble the provisions of section 9, does not restrict the power and jurisdiction of the High Court to punish for contempt. Nor has its power and authority, in so far as it is material to the present purpose, been curtailed or affected by any enactment of the Governor-General in Council. Finally, section 106 of the Government of India Act, which repeals the High Courts Act, provides that the several High Courts shall have all such jurisdiction, powers and authority as are vested in them at the commencement of the Act. The result is, that the High Court has the same power in this respect as was possessed by the old Supreme Court.

Gordon
Woodroffe & Co.
v.
Radhakrishna
Chetty.

The next question that arises relates to the effect of O. 21, R. 5 of the Original Side Rules. It is under clause 37 of the Letters Patent and sections 122 and 129 of the Civil Procedure Code that the High Court is empowered to frame rules. It is in respect of proceedings in civil cases that power to make rules is conferred by these provisions. It has been suggested that the present motion to commit for contempt is a criminal matter and that the rules made by the High Court in so far as they deal with matters of a criminal nature are ultra vires. It is unnecessary to discuss this position, nor the cases, such as, *O'Shea v. O'Shea*⁸, that have been cited on the point. I shall assume without deciding, that O. 21, R. 5 of the Original Side Rules is intra vires. Then, another question arises: The power that is conferred in regard to making rules is in respect of regulating procedure. If R. 5 has the effect of restricting the power of the High Court as suggested by the party's Counsel, can it be treated merely as a rule of procedure? As I have come to the conclusion that, on its true construction, the rule has no such effect, it is unnecessary to decide this point. R. 4 provides that the Court may commit the person in contempt to jail for such a limited time as it thinks fit. Rule 5 then goes on to say that if at the end of the time limited in the warrant of imprisonment, the party persists in his disobedience, his property may be attached. The question is, what is the effect of this rule? It merely enacts that, on the expiry of a certain period, the Court may issue a certain process. This shows how the discretion of the Court may ordinarily be exer-

Gordon
Woodroffe & Co
v.
Radhakrishna
Chetty.

cised. In my opinion, no greater effect should be given to this rule. It would be wrong to hold by mere inference, that the power which the Court undoubtedly possesses is taken away.

"Statutes which limit or extend common law rights must be expressed in clear unambiguous language, such, as those which take away the jurisdiction of the High Court of Justice"—27 Halsbury, page 150.

"No statute operates to repeal or modify the existing law, whether common or statutory, or to take away rights which existed before the statute was passed, unless the intention is clearly expressed or necessarily implied"—p. 167.

Here, we are not dealing with a statute, but with a rule made by the High Court, and these maxims apply with greater force. It is not only natural but proper to construe the rule in question, in the sense that it is merely regulative of the discretion, which undoubtedly vest in this Court. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that attachment can issue against the property belonging to the party, although he is still in jail.

I was accordingly about to direct attachment but the party has cleared his contempt by paying the amount to the plaintiff's attorneys. They have reported satisfaction of the decree to the extent of Rs. 34,975, the entire sale proceeds, (I having disallowed the party in contempt not only the auctioneer's remuneration but also his charges for actual expenses incurred). The contempt having been cleared, there is no further need to attach his properties.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), S. 112—Proceedings to recover arrears of rent—Notice sent to Collector—Subsequent sale of holding by landholder—Right to continue rent proceeding.

The landholder legally initiates proceedings under S. 112 of the Madras Estates Land Act if he sends the notices contemplated by the section to the Collector in proper time. It cannot be said that the proceedings are initiated only when the ryots are actually served with those notices.

The landholder agreed on the 31st March, 1920, to transfer his rights in certain property to a stranger. In June, 1920, and on the 15th August, 1920, he instituted proceedings by sending the notices under S. 112 to the Collector in order to recover arrears of rent due to him in respect of that property. Subsequently, on the 16th August, 1920, he sold the property.

Held, that the landholder had the right to initiate proceedings at the time that he did, and that he could continue the same even after the sale.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.—The landholder proceeded to take steps under section 112 of the Estates Land Act to attach and sell the holding of the ryots for non-payment of arrears alleged to be due to him by the ryots. The ryots instituted the two suits, S.S. Nos. 242 and 250 of 1922, to set aside the attachment under section 112. Second Appeal No. 2242 relates to the suit filed to set aside the attachment in respect of the arrears for fasli 1329 and Second Appeal No. 2243 relates to the suit similarly instituted to set aside the attachment made by the landholder in respect of the arrears for fasli 1328. The main pleas raised by the ryots, the plaintiffs in these suits, were that the landholder had agreed on the 31st March, 1920, to transfer his rights as landholder in favour of a stranger. He took proceedings in respect of rent due for fasli 1329 on 15th August, 1920, and in respect of rent due for fasli 1328 in June, 1920. The sale-deed, however, was executed only on the 16th August, 1920. On these facts, the plea raised by the ryots that the landholder had no locus standi to take proceedings under section 112 of the Estates Land Act was overruled by both the Lower Courts. There was also a question raised on behalf of the ryots as to whether they had encroached on some portion of the Mulaimal land, and, if so, what rent was due by them in respect of the same for the faslis in question.

The first Court held that the encroachment was proved, whereas the Lower Appellate Court held that Ex. VI was not reliable, and that the alleged encroachment was not proved and consequently that the ryots were not bound to pay anything in respect of the alleged encroached lands. The ryots have preferred these second appeals.

The first point raised by the learned Advocate for the appellants in these cases is that the landholder is not entitled to take, or to continue, proceedings under section 112 of the Estates Land Act. The learned Advocate argued that the decision of the Privy Council in *Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh*¹ is an authority for the position that after a landholder transferred his interest as landholder in the lands to a stranger, he is not entitled to take any steps in respect of any past arrears under the Madras Estates Land Act. For the purpose of disposing of the present appeals, we think it is enough to confine our decision to the actual facts of these two cases. As already remarked, the landholder had initiated proceedings under section 112 of the Estates Land Act before he transferred his interest in the land to a third person. The case is not therefore one where a landholder, after a transfer of his rights in the lands, began proceedings under the Estates Land Act. The learned Advocate, however, argued that proceedings under section 112 could be taken to be initiated only when the ryots were actually served with notices. We are unable to agree with that contention. The landholder legally initiates proceedings under section 112 if he sends the notices contemplated by section 112 to the Collector in proper time. It is not disputed that the landholder's acts in sending the notices were in fact before he sold the properties to a stranger by a document dated the 16th August, 1920. In the Privy Council case their Lordships took care to remark at page 939:

"The right to proceed to sale in one case, in the other to eject, is dependent on the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant at the time when the remedy provided by law is sought to be enforced."

Having regard to the facts of the present case, the landholder had the right to initiate proceedings at the time that he did, and therefore the learned Advocate's argument on the first point is not, in our view, sustainable.

The second question raised was that the Lower Appellate Court had not made deductions in respect of interest and road cess, in respect of the ryots' claim allowed on appeal. We think that the Lower Appellate Court should have, when it decreased the amount of rent payable, also made a proportionate decrease in the amount of road cess and railway cess, and also interest payable. The decrees of the Lower Appellate Court will be modified accordingly, in that the landholder's claim to road cess, railway cess and interest will be proportionately decreased on the amounts disallowed by it.

The learned Advocate also argued that the rate at which the Lower Courts calculated railway cess and road cess was in excess of what was allowed by law. Such a question has not been raised in the Lower Courts and we cannot allow the learned Advocate to raise that point for the first time here in Second Appeal.

The last point that he raised was that patta was not properly served upon the ryots. This is not one of the points mentioned by the Lower Appellate Court to have been raised before it. In fact the Lower Appellate Court specifically remarks that, excepting the points dealt with by it, no other points were raised before it. Therefore we cannot allow this point to be raised before us in the circumstances.

Nor can we allow him to raise another point, namely, that the amount claimed in the attachment notices was not the amount actually due, because there were some subsequent payments.

For these reasons we think that, except in respect of the modification made above, the decrees of the Lower Courts should be confirmed. As the appellants have substantially failed, the Second Appeals will be dismissed with costs.

cability of S. 191, Madras Estates Land Act—S. 56 of Agency Rules if ultra vires—Scheduled Districts Act, 1874, S. 5 (a)—General and Special Acts—Rules of interpretation.

Held, (on a difference of opinion between Anantakrishna Aiyar and Curgenvven, JJ.), that the period of limitation applicable to appeals preferred to the Agent to the Governor of Vizagapatam from decrees passed by the Special Assistant Agent, Vizagapatam Agency, in suits for rent instituted under S. 77 of the Madras Estates Land Act is six weeks as provided for by R. 56 of the Vizagapatam Agency Rules, and not thirty days as provided for by S. 191 of the Madras Estates Land Act.

Held, also, that R. 56 of the Agency Rules is not ultra vires, because it is not a rule "restricting" the operation of the Madras Estates Land Act but is one merely "modifying" it within the meaning of S. 5 (a) of the Scheduled Districts Act.

JUDGMENTS. Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.—The Zamindar of Pachipenta filed a batch of suits in the Court of the Special Assistant Agent at Koraput under section 77 of the Madras Estates Land Act against the defendants therein, who are ryots of Sunki village, to recover rent due for Faslis 1332 to 1334. The defendants denied the plaintiff's right to rent, and alleged that there was no relation of landlord and tenant existing between the parties, that the lands belonged to some Mokhasadars of Sunki to whom they have been paying rent. They further pleaded that the suit Kadapa was not valid and binding on the defendants. The Trial Court found against the contentions of the defendants and decreed the suits in plaintiff's favour. The defendants preferred appeals to the Court of the Agent to the Governor, Vizagapatam. The learned Agent to the Governor, Vizagapatam, dismissed the appeals on the preliminary ground that the appeals were filed after the expiry of 30 days prescribed by section 191 of the Madras Estates Land Act. He held that the time allowed for preferring an appeal under the Estates Land Act was 30 days, and not six weeks as provided for by R. 56 of the Vizagapatam Agency Rules. The defendants have preferred these second appeals.

The learned Advocate for the appellants argued that the special period of limitation prescribed by the Agency Rules, which are in force in the Scheduled Districts, governs the case, and not the general period of limitation prescribed by section 191 of the Estates Land Act, which, he submitted, is the general law regulating the relationship between the landlord and tenant in the Presidency. He submitted that regard should be had to the well-known maxim of law that the general law must give way to the special law applicable, and he contended that having regard to the local conditions (of which difficulty of communication is one), the Agency Rules have prescribed a special period of limitation for appeals to be preferred in the Agency tracts to the Government Agent. The learned Advocates are agreed that if the period of limitation applicable to these appeals be six weeks, then the appeals were not barred by limitation, but that if the period of limitation be only thirty days, then the appeals were barred.

During the argument, the learned Advocate for the respondent contended that under section 6 of the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874), the Local Government may from time to time regulate the procedure of the officers appointed under the Act to administer civil and criminal justice, etc., "but not so as to restrict the operation of any enactment for the time being in force in any of the said districts." He argued that R. 56 of the Vizagapatam Agency Rules prescribing six weeks for appeals, if taken to be applicable to appeals, under the Estates Land Act, would restrict the operation of the Estates Land Act which is in force in the Scheduled Districts, and, as such, would be ultra vires.

I am unable to agree with that contention. The Local Government has got power under Act XIV of 1874 to regulate the "procedure" of the officers appointed under that Act; Statute of Limitation is part of law of "procedure". This proposition was, in fact, not contested before us, and it is only necessary to quote the following passage from the judgment of the Privy Council in the case reported in *Her Highness Ruckmaboye v. Lulloobhoy Mottichund*¹. The Privy Council observed:

"In truth, it has become almost an axiom in jurisprudence, that a law of prescription, or law of limitation, which is meant by that denomination, is a law relating to procedure having reference only to the lex fori."

Therefore, the Local Government has got power to provide periods of limitation applicable to various proceedings before such officers. The real question, therefore, is whether R. 56 of the Vizagapatam Agency Rules "restricts the operation" of the Madras Estates Land Act. As far as I could see, the "operation" of the Act could be restricted either with reference to particular classes of people, or with reference to any local area, or with reference to the time from which the Act is to have operation. If the rule in question does not restrict the operation of the Act in any of those, or similar, respects, I think it should be taken that the rule does not "restrict the operation" of any enactment within the meaning of section 6 of the Act. It may, of course, be said that any rule in any way (to however slight a degree) varying the substantial or the adjectival law contained in the Estates Land Act "restricts" the Act, in one sense; but I do not think that that is the meaning to be attached to the expression "restrict the operation of any enactment" occurring in the section.

The learned Advocates who argued the case were able to trace a similar rule, prescribing six weeks for appeal, from the year 1840; it is well known that even now as regards facilities of communication, people in the Agency tracts work under a very great disadvantage when compared with the people of other parts of the Presidency in general. One can, therefore, well understand why a comparatively long period of six weeks was fixed as the period of filing appeals, by R. 56, though in the other parts of the Presidency the period for preferring appeals has been for many years only thirty days, and is so even at present.

On the whole I have come to the conclusion that the rule in question is not ultra vires.

As regards the further question, I have no doubt that the Estates Land Act, which applies to the whole of the Presidency, should, in this respect, when considered in connection with the Agency Rules, be taken as a general law, whereas the Agency Rules should be taken as a special law, applicable to the Agency tracts. The Agency Rules have been framed to provide for the exceptional circumstances existing in that part of the Presidency. If the rules be not ultra vires, I think it is clear from them that the Legislature considered the special case of the Agency tracts, and provided a special period of limitation in respect of appeals to be presented to the Agent to the Governor. The maxim that the special rule must be applied in preference to the general rule should, in my opinion, govern the present case. Various passages from Maxwell on "Interpretation of Statutes," Beal on "Cardinal Rules of Legal Interpretation" and Craies on "Statute Law" were quoted before us. I do not think it necessary to refer to them in detail. At page 470 of Beal's book, the rule is considered with reference to "prior general and subsequent special statutes". It is there stated:

"Where there are provisions in a special statute which are clearly inconsistent with the provisions of a prior general statute, the provisions of the general statute must yield to those of the special statute. If the special statute gives in itself a complete rule on the subject, the expression of that rule will undoubtedly amount to an exception of the subject-matter of the rule out of the general Act."

Various authorities are quoted in support of the proposition at pages 470 and 471.

As, in my opinion, Agency Rule 56 is not ultra vires, I would allow these appeals, reverse the decrees of the Appellate Court and remand the appeals to the Lower Appellate Court for fresh disposal according to law. Costs here and in the Lower Appellate Court will abide the result. Court-fee paid on the second appeal memoranda will be refunded to the appellants.

Curgenven, J.—I regret that I find myself in disagreement with my learned brother as to the meaning to be attached to the words "so as to restrict the operation of any enactment" occurring in clause (b) of section 6 of the Scheduled Districts Act.

Section 5 empowers the Local Government to extend to any of the Scheduled Districts, or any part of any such district, any enactment which is in force in any part of British India at the date of such extension. Section 5-A provides that, in so extending an enactment to a scheduled district or part thereof, the Local Government may declare the operation of the enactment to be "subject to such restrictions and modifications" as it thinks fit.

In construing the words "restrict the operation" in section 6 we may, I think, consider what meaning should be attached to the grammatical variant of the same phrase occurring in the next preceding section—"the operation to be subject to such restrictions". Does it mean, or mean only, that the Local Government may restrict the operation of the enactment as a whole to a particular area, or a particular class or a particular time? Clearly not to a particular area, because the section elsewhere provides for this by permitting the enactment to be extended to a scheduled district "or part thereof". The extension of an enactment to a particular class, where but for such a restriction, it would apply more generally, would be so rarely called for that I cannot believe that the Legislature had in view any such object in drafting the section; nor do I think, if the Act intended to confer upon the Local Government power to withdraw an enactment once extended, it would not have conferred it in more express terms. Let us then see what powers it was clearly expedient to give to the Local Government in extending an enactment to an area hitherto not "brought within . . . the operation of the general Acts and Regulations and the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts of Judicature." Among those powers it was surely advisable to include (a) a power to exclude certain provisions of the enactment, and (b) a power to substitute for any provision a provision deemed more appropriate to the circumstances prevailing in the area. It appears to me that these two classes of power are intended to be conferred when it is said that the "Local Government may declare the operation of the enactment to be subject to such restrictions and modifications as that Government thinks fit." Deny to the word "restrictions" the meaning I seek to attach to it and it becomes very doubtful whether the Local Government by force merely of the word "modifications" would be competent to omit without replacement any provision of an enactment which it was extending.

Turning now to the meaning of the same phrase in section 6, we must, I think, endeavour to give it a construction if possible in keeping with the circumstances likely to arise and therefore in contemplation when the section was framed. Of the two meanings which the phrase may bear, should we choose that which would provide that by a regulation of procedure the Local Government may not withdraw the operation of the enactment from any area or class, or limit it to any period; or should we adopt the alternative construction which forbids the Government to override a statutory provision by prescribing a rule of procedure? I cannot myself easily conceive of any circumstances in which a Local Government might be tempted to secure a result of the former sort by a regulation of procedure, nor do I think that any such misuse of rule-making power can have been in contemplation when the section was framed. On the other hand in arranging to provide the scheduled districts with a body of law and of rules having the force of law, and, for the latter part of that purpose, in investing the Local Government with power to make rules, one would expect to find included in the enabling Act an interdiction against any rule that would conflict with the terms of, and thereby restrict the operation of, any enactment.

In the present case the conflict has arisen with regard to two rules of limitation, one laid down by statute, the other prescribed by rule. Something has been said before us as to the superior appropriateness of the period fixed by the latter means to the special conditions of the Agency tracts; but the answer may perhaps be that it was open to the Local Government by virtue of section 5-A to exclude statutory provisions relating to limitation if it wished to apply a six weeks' rule to all cases.

My view accordingly is that the rule of limitation contained in R. 56 of the Agency rules would, if applied to the appeals before us, offend against the terms of section 191 of the Madras Estates Land Act and, if deemed to prevail over that section, would pro tanto "restrict the operation of the Act". It is, therefore, ultra vires. I would, therefore, confirm the decrees of the Lower Appellate Court and dismiss the Second Appeals with costs.

Result.—As we are divided in opinion as to the decision to be given on the question,

"Whether the period of limitation applicable to appeals preferred to the Agent to the Governor of Vizagapatam from decrees passed by Special Assistant Agent (Vizagapatam Agency) in suits for rent instituted under section 77 of the Estates Land Act is six weeks as provided for by R. 56 of the Vizagapatam Agency Rules, or thirty days as provided for by section 191 of the Madras Estates Land Act," the matter will be placed before the learned Chief Justice so that the case may be heard by one or more of the other Judges of this Court as his Lordship may direct.

The Second Appeals having been referred to a third Judge the Court (Ramesam, J.) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—These second appeals have been referred to me by My Lord the Chief Justice on account of the difference of opinion between my brothers Anantakrishna Aiyar and Curgenvén, JJ., who first heard them. They are filed under the Agency Rules applying to the Scheduled Districts.

The Zamindar of Pachipenta filed suits for rents under section 77 of the Madras Estates Land Act against his ryots and they were decreed by the Assistant Agent. The ryots filed appeals to the Agent to the Governor at Vizagapatam.

These appeals were filed more than thirty days but within six weeks after the decrees. The time prescribed for appealing against a decree for rent to the District Collector is thirty days under section 191 of the Madras Estates Land Act, and six weeks under R. 56 of the Agency Rules. The Collector dismissed the appeals on the ground that they were barred by limitation applying section 191 of the Madras Estates Land Act. The ryots filed these second appeals against those decrees. The question is which rule ought to be applied.

The first point argued by the learned Advocate for the respondent is that R. 56 of the Agency Rules does not apply at all to appeals under the Estates Land Act, and only section 191 of the Act applies, and there is no question of conflict between the two sections. This argument does not seem to have been addressed before the learned Judges, or any rate, if it was, they apparently have not agreed with this contention. The contention is based on the fact that R. 1 defines the powers of the Agents and Assistant Agents followed by the heading "Civil Justice" which is the heading of the rules from R. 2 onwards. The learned Advocate contends that "Civil Justice" excludes judicial matters in Revenue Courts, that is, he takes the words "Civil Justice" in a narrow sense, namely administration of justice before ordinary civil courts of the land, such as the District Munsif, Subordinate Judge, District Judge and the High Court and Courts corresponding to them. But of course the word "Civil" has two senses—the narrow sense contended for by the Advocate and a larger sense, that is, as opposed to criminal only. In the Agency Rules of 1860, which were superseded by the present Agency Rules which were passed in 1924, the first six rules related to criminal justice and from R. 7 onwards they related to civil justice including Revenue Courts (vide Rule 10). When the Criminal Procedure Code of 1862 was passed the first six rules were repealed as the Code applied to the Agency tracts. But the rules from R. 7 onwards remained in force up to 1924, when they were superseded by the present rule; and a perusal of the present rules show that they were based on the former rules from R. 7 onwards. This comparison leads one to the view that the heading "Civil Justice" is used in the larger sense.

But the same conclusion can be reached without an examination of the former Agency Rules. Rule 1, sub-clause (2) says that the Agent to the Governor will have the same powers as are vested in the District and Revenue Courts in the ordinary districts and the Agency Divisional Officers will have the same powers as the Subordinate and Revenue Courts for the trial and determination of suits. That means that, for revenue suits also, the Agents and the Agency Divisional Officers were constituted Courts under whatever enactment the revenue litigation may arise. This paragraph is not confined to the Estates Land Act. Then the section says that these powers are vested "subject to the modifications contained in these rules," that is, the powers conferred upon the District, Subordinate and Revenue Courts under the enactment under which the litigation may arise are conferred upon the Agents and Agency Divisional Officers, but subject to the modifications contained in the Agency Rules, that is, rules from R. 2 onwards to the end. By the express language of these rules, therefore, Rr. 2 to 56 apply to the Agents and Agency Divisional Officers exercising the powers of Revenue Courts. Whether this provision is valid or is ultra vires is of course another matter. But on the face of the rules, R. 56 applies to the Revenue Courts.

Thammayya
v.
Dugaraj
Bahadur
Garu.
Ramesam, J.

The next question is whether R. 56 prevails over or otherwise stands in the place of section 191 of the Estates Land Act; and this question was considered by the learned Judges who first heard the second appeals from the point of view whether the rule is ultra vires. Before I address myself to this point of view, I wish to approach this question from another point of view, namely, that perhaps such a question, namely, whether R. 56 is ultra vires does not arise at all. For this purpose I proceed to refer to the old Agency Rules which were passed in 1860. In 1898 there was a notification of the Government extending the Rent Recovery Act (the Act repealed by the Madras Estates Land Act) to the Agency tracts. But under that Act there were no suits for rent but suits to cancel distraints lay before a Collector and appeals against the decrees of the Collector lay to the District Collector, in lieu of whom, we have got the Agent to the Governor in the Agency tracts. The question might have arisen whether the time for appeal is the thirty days provided in the Rent Recovery Act or the six weeks provided by the then Agency Rules. I am not aware of any case in which the point has actually arisen and to discuss it now is unnecessary. Matters continued like this up to 1908 when the Rent Recovery Act was repealed and the Estates Land Act was passed, and it applied also to the Agency tracts. Section 208 of that Act contains a provision somewhat similar

v.

Dugaraj

Bahadur

Garu.

to R. 1, sub-clause (2) of the present Agency Rules, that is, the Agent would be the District Collector or the District Judge and the Agency Divisional Officer would be the Collector for the purpose of the Estates Land Act. Under R. 16 of the old Agency Rules the time allowed for an appeal to the Agent was six weeks.

I now proceed to discuss the question whether in 1908, when the Estates Land Act was passed, section 191 of the Estates Land Act superseded R. 16 of the old Agency Rules for the purpose of appeals to the Agent under the Act or whether R. 16 continued to be in force unaffected by section 191.

At first sight it may appear as if it is the same question as the question whether R. 56 of the present Agency Rules should prevail over S. 191 of the Estates Land Act. But it is not the same question. In 1908, when the Estates Land Act was passed, it came after the Agency Rules. In 1924, when the new Agency Rules were made, they came after the Estates Land Act, and from the point of view of the question whether the Agency Rules are ultra vires, this makes a considerable difference. So it is not the same question; and as, if it can be answered in a particular way with reference to the old Agency Rules, the other question does not arise at all, I proceed to discuss it.

Both R. 16 and section 191 have got statutory force. One is an actual section of an Act and the other is a rule passed under statutory powers. The general rule is, the later statute repeals the earlier statute, if both are equally general. But this rule is subject to an exception that, if the later Act is a general Act, but the earlier Act is a special Act, the earlier Act is generally not repealed by the later Act. Vide Craies on Statute Law, p. 316, citing Seward v. "Vera Cruz".² In the present case, undoubtedly from one point of view the Agency Rules are special and the Estates Land Act is general. The Agency Rules apply only to a small area, Ganjam, Vizagapatam and Godavari, that is, they are similar to a local Act, whereas the Estates Land Act applies to the whole Presidency. But it is suggested by the learned Advocate for the respondent that the Estates Land Act is special and the Agency Rules are general from another point of view, that is, the Estates Land Act relates to the relationship between the landlords and the tenants but the Agency Rules do not relate to any particular class of whatever nature they may be. In this sense, no doubt the Agency Rules are general and the Estates Land Act is special. But in this sense, unless all the statute law of a country is contained only in one Code, most Acts are special even if they refer to a very large area; for instance, the Contract Act, the Specific Relief Act and the Transfer of Property Act, though they apply to the whole of India, are all special Acts because they relate only to certain branches of the law of the country.

Dugaraj
Bahadur
Garu.
Ramesam, J.

The question then arises, when there is a conflict between two such special Acts each of which may be described as special in some particular sense, how far the later Act should prevail over the earlier Act. In such cases, it would seem that the rule is that the Court should lean against repeal of the earlier Act by implication and, unless it is absolutely clear that the operation of the first Act has to be curtailed by the later Act, the previous Act should be held to continue in force, even though the later Act may be regarded as special in some other sense. Illustrations of this are afforded by the decisions cited by the learned Advocate for the respondent. For instance, in *Mary Seward v. "Vera Cruz"*², first we had Lord Campbell's Act relating to claims for damages for loss of life by reason of a tort and later on the Admiralty Court Act of 1861 was passed giving jurisdiction over any claim for damage done by any ship. In this case it may be said that each Act is a special Act from one point of view but general from the other point of view. It was held that the jurisdiction under Lord Campbell's Act was not affected and the Admiralty Court Act had no jurisdiction under the second Act. At page 68 Lord Selborne says:

"Now if anything be certain it is this, that where there are general words in a later Act capable of reasonable and sensible application without extending them to subjects specially dealt with by earlier legislation, you are not to hold that earlier and special legislation indirectly repealed, altered, or derogated from merely by force of such general words, without any indication of a particular intention to do so."

And he refers to the case of *Hawkins v. Gathercole*³. I may observe that he starts by saying: "Where there are general words in a later Act". He does not refer to the nature of the later Act, general or special. As I will presently show, though the Estates Land Act may be regarded as a special Act from one point of view, the provision in section 191 providing thirty days for first appeals is really a very general provision and not in the nature of a special provision.

Court Act giving jurisdiction over defendants who had employment within the city, though they did not dwell or carry on business there, and then came the County Courts Act of 1888. It was held that the first Act was unaffected by the second one. In *In re Smith's Estate. Clements v. Ward*⁵, an earlier Act — 43 Geo. 3, giving power to all persons to settle or devise lands or goods for any church, provided it was three months before death, was held not to be affected by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which gave absolute power to married women to dispose of property by will. Here the later Act is a special Act in the sense that it applied to married women and not to all persons, but the first Act is special in the sense that it dealt with property given to church, whereas the Married Women's Property Act dealt with all kinds of settlements and devises.

The general principle of a special Act not being repealed by a later Act was recognised by the Privy Council in a case from India in Unnoda Persaud Mookerjee v. Kristo Coomar Moitro.⁶ There their Lordships held that the rule of limitation under the Bengal Tenancy Act X of 1859 was not affected by the rule of limitation in Act XIV of 1859 which is a general Limitation Act. Now in that case, the first Act of course was a special Act as it related to the relation between the landholders and tenants in the Bengal Presidency, but from another point of view it may be said that the second Act is also a special Act because it relates only to one particular question of procedure, namely, limitation of actions, and does not deal with any substantial rights, whereas the earlier Bengal Tenancy Act deals not only with a question of procedure but with questions of substantial rights also relating to landlords and tenants. But from the point of view of the area to which the Acts applied, undoubtedly the first was special and the second was not. Their Lordships after relying on the general rule as laid down in *Fitzgerald v. Champneys*⁷ refer with approval to the Full Bench decision in *Poulson v. Madhusudan Pal Choudhry*⁸. In that case the learned Judges laid stress on the fact that the earlier Act was an Act applying to a smaller area and the later Act applied to a larger area. In *Thorpe v. Adams*⁹ Willes, J., said:

"The good sense of the law as laid down by my Lord is quite obvious: because, if a bill had been brought into Parliament to repeal the local Act, it never would have been allowed to pass into a law, etc., ... whereas, a general provision in a public Act is discussed with reference to general policy."

Thus it looks as if speciality in respect of locality is given greater importance rather than speciality in respect of the subject-matter; otherwise it would be impossible to compare the degree of speciality. *Khan Gul v. Lakha Singh*¹⁰ discusses a question of conflict between the Contract Act and the Evidence Act with reference to applying the rule of estoppel against a minor and it was said that that construction which avoids repugnancy and if possible gives effect to both enactments should be adopted. It seems to me therefore that section 191 of the Estates Land Act, unless it expressly says so, ought not to be held to have affected R. 16 of the old Agency Rules.

The same matter may also be put in another way. The thirty days rule of limitation in section 191 is not a special provision. It is really a general provision. That is the rule under the Limitation Act for all first appeals, and the whole of the Limitation Act was adopted in the Estates Land Act except a few sections with which we are not concerned. Vide section 211, clause (2) of section 211 brought in the whole part of the Limitation Act relating to appeals. So it looks as if the Estates Land Act has adopted wholesale the general provisions of the Limitation Act. But because the articles relating to appeals apply only to appeals under the Civil Procedure Code and therefore these articles in terms will not apply to some appeals under the Estates Land Act because there is a change of Courts, it enacted section 191 so as to make the thirty days rule applicable also to appeals from Collectors to District Collectors as well as to District Judges. So that we have a very general provision simply adopted and repeated for the purpose of the Estates Land Act and not a special provision modifying a general provision being specially adopted in a special law. So that even if the Estates Land Act is regarded as a special law, what we have is the general provision for first appeals adopted and repeated in it and not specially modified for its purposes. So that when we look at the specific provision now under discussion the Estates Land Act contains a general provision, whereas the Agency Rules contain special provisions for the tract or area to which they apply. From this point of view also I hold that section 191 did not affect R. 16 of the old Agency Rules. So that from 1908 up to 1924 section 191 of the Estates Land Act never applied to the Agency tracts and R. 16 continued to be in force, that is, six weeks was the period for first appeals to the Agent. Now in 1924 the new Agency Rules were promulgated. They are merely rules consolidating and repeating the old rules in the Agency tracts. Section 191 never having been in force in the Agency tracts, the notification issuing the Agency Rules did not seek to restrict the Estates Land Act as it had been prevailing in the Agency tracts. From this point of view the question discussed by the learned Judges, namely, whether R. 56 of the Agency Rules is ultra vires of the Madras Government, because of section 6 (b) of the Scheduled Districts Act does not arise, and I hold that R. 56 is the only rule that applies to appeals.

Assuming I am wrong in the above conclusion, I have to discuss the question on the footing that section 191 applied to the Agency tracts up to 1924. The question will then arise whether the new Agency Rules are ultra vires or not. Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., held that they are not because R. 56 is not a rule restricting the operation of the Estates Land Act. Curgenven, J., held to the contrary. The phrase "subject to such restrictions and modifications" occurs in S. 5 (a) of the Scheduled Districts Act. The suggestion of Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., is that the word "restriction" occurring in sections 5 (a) and 6 is properly applicable to restriction in relation to areas or classes of persons and things of that kind. With reference to this suggestion Curgenven, J., observed that it could not mean restriction as to area because "the section (the learned Judge meant the Act) elsewhere provides for this by permitting the enactment to be extended to a scheduled district or part thereof". He repeats the same idea lower down where he says:

"Let us then see what powers it was clearly expedient to give to the Local Government in extending an enactment to an area not hitherto brought within the operation of the general Acts and Regulations."

Section 5 refers to the extension to the scheduled district or part thereof of an enactment which up to the extension did not apply to the scheduled districts. But where we are dealing with an Act which from the inception applied to the Agency tracts and it is desired to limit the operation of the Act to a particular area, section 5 has nothing to do with such a case; and such limitation to one area and the omission of another area cannot be done under section 5. The power to do so must be conferred or refused by some other section. But the legislature thought it fit not to confer such power on the Local Government to make such restrictions and the word "restriction" in section 6 is necessary to cover the case of an area. I, therefore, do not agree with the reason given by my brother Curgenven, J., that restriction in section 6 cannot apply to area.

Thammayya

v.

Ramesam, J.

Then again, as to whether the restriction may refer to a particular class, Curgenven, J., observes that such a thing would be rarely called for. This is true. But that such a thing may be called for in the Agency tracts is clear from R. 9 of the old rules relating to the Zamindars, Bissoyees and other feudal chiefs, and R. 10 referring to succession of Hill Zamindaris. He then points out that the restriction was intended for the case of a power to exclude certain provisions in an enactment. I agree that the restriction may include such cases. But I do not agree that it is confined to this particular class. It may include also the cases of areas and persons. No doubt the word "modification" will not cover a case where it is intended to modify certain provisions of an enactment and the word "restriction" would be necessary. But where it is a question of substituting one provision by another provision which would be more appropriate certainly the word "modification" will do. Curgenven, J., seems to be of that opinion in the particular paragraph where he deals with this question. But, if so, R. 56 on the footing that it is sought to change the period in section 191 of the Estates Land Act is really a provision substituting one period, namely, six weeks, which was thought to be more proper for another period and, therefore, a modification. After all, some meaning must be given to the word "modification" which is mentioned in section 5-A but omitted in section 6. I am of opinion that the particular case with which we are dealing is a case of modification and not restriction. If the whole section is omitted one would perhaps say that it was restriction; but where it was a case of not omitting a section but substituting something for some other thing in it, I am of opinion that it is a modification. I, therefore, think that, even from the second point of view, R. 56 of the Agency Rules is not ultra vires.

I, therefore, hold that Rule 56 applied to the appeals before the Agent and they were not out of time. I, therefore, reverse the judgment of the Lower Court and remand the appeals to be disposed of according to law. The respondent will pay the costs of the S.A. No. 2107 to the appellant. No order as to costs in the other second appeals. The Court-fees in all the second appeals will be refunded.

I may add that, if it were necessary, I would excuse the delay committed by the appellants before the Agent's Court under section 4 of the Limitation Act which certainly applies to the Estates Land Act. But of course it is desirable to decide the point as excusing delay may not be available hereafter.

Association for religious purposes—Societies Registration Act (XXI of 1860)—Memorandum of Association—Resolution by the majority, opposed to the constitution—Ultra vires.

In a general body meeting of a Sabha formed by the disciples of the various Madhwa mutts "for the uplift of their doctrine," a resolution for giving priority to the head of one of the mutts in the receiving of thirtham was passed by the majority. The resolution being opposed fundamentally to the constitution of the association, it was sought to bring it within a clause of the Memorandum of the Association and the Rules and Regulations pertaining thereto, by which the council was empowered to frame such by-laws as were not inconsistent with the rules and regulations as the association might consider necessary for the conduct, maintenance, and upkeep of the Sabha.

Held, that the disciples of one mutt, though they formed the majority of the members, have no right virtually to drive the other members of the Sabha by the passing of a resolution which could give their Guru priority.

It is not open to the majority of the members of the association to alter the fundamental principles upon which the association is founded.

Per Pakenham Walsh, J.—A corporation can, no doubt, do what is incidental to the purpose of its business, but it cannot travel outside the same.

not inconsistent with the rules and regulations as it may consider necessary for the conduct, maintenance, and upkeep of the Sabha and a like power to alter, modify or rescind any such by-laws, so long as such by-laws are passed at the annual general meeting of the Sabha. If the matter related merely to the internal management without in any way affecting the fundamental basis on which the Sabha was started, the majority decision would bind the minority, however galling it may be;

wanted a scheme to be framed. However this may be, it seems to me that justice has to be done to the parties and mere expediency cannot entitle the Court to deny justice to the majority.

It is clear that it is not open to the majority to alter the fundamental principles upon which the Association is founded. I may refer to *Milligan v. Mitchell*¹ and Free Church of Scotland (General Assembly of) v. Overtoun (Lord). *Macalister v. Young*².

In *Milligan v. Mitchell*¹ it was held that it was not competent to the members of the Association to alter

‘the fundamental principles upon which the association was formed and destroy the trusts upon which the property was held, but only to altering the laws or making new laws, so far as might be consistent with such principles and trusts.’

In that case, a chapel was erected and dedicated exclusively as a place of worship for Presbyterians who conformed to the discipline and doctrines of the National Church of Scotland. Then there was a resolution passed subsequently, whereby other preachers were allowed to preach and the question was how far the resolution passed by the general body was valid. In Free Church of Scotland (General Assembly of) v. Overtoun (Lord). *Macalister v. Young*² Lord Davey observed at page 645:

“The question in each case is, What were the religious tenets and principles which formed the bond of union of the association for whose benefit the trust was created? I do not think that the Court has any test or touchstone by which it can pronounce that any tenet forming part of the body of doctrine professed by the association is not vital, essential, or fundamental, unless the parties have themselves declared it not to be so. The bond of union, however, may contain within itself a power in some recognised body to control, alter or modify the tenets and principles at one time professed by the association. But the existence of such a power would have to be proved like any other tenet or principle of the association.”

I may also, in this connection, refer to *Attorney-General v. Anderson*³. It was held in that case that where property was directed to be held in trust to be used as a meeting-house for Protestant Dissenters of the Presbyterian or Independent denomination, a resolution to transfer the chapel and congregation to the Presbyterian Church of England though passed by a majority was invalid.

In the view I take that the giving of precedence in the matter of thiritham will be a fundamental alteration of the principles on which the Sabha was (founded?) and is not a matter of mere internal management, it is unnecessary to refer to *Cooper v. Gordon*⁴ and the other cases cited by the respondents' advocate, as to the Court not interfering in affairs of internal management decided upon by the majority of members.

As the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the preliminary issues as to the maintainability of the suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code or the suit being not cognizable by a Civil Court was not seriously disputed before us, I do not think it necessary to refer to the decision cited by the Subordinate Judge in his preliminary judgment. I agree with him in deciding the preliminary issue in plaintiffs' favour.

The next question is as to what relief is to be granted. I think the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration that it is not competent to the majority of the members to make any distinction between the Mutts as regards thirtham or any other honours or to give priority to the head of any one Mutt over the rest in the distribution of thirtham or any honour.

[After holding that the articles and rules of the Association provided sufficient safeguards for its proper working in the future, his Lordship gave certain directions for the conduct of the meetings of the Sabha in future, held that the framing of a scheme was unnecessary and proceeded as follows:—]

I would reverse the decree of the Lower Court and pass a decree in the terms above stated. The Sabha (represented by its committee) and 12th respondent, the Guru of the Uttarathi Mutt, will pay the appellants' costs both here and in the Lower Court.

We fix the Vakils' fee in this Court at Rs. 500.

The decree I pass disposes of the Memorandum of Objections. No costs.

Pakenham
Walsh, J.

I hold that the defendants have failed to prove that there was any custom by which the Uttarathi Mutt received first thirtham and that the evidence both oral and documentary is distinctly in favour of the contention of the plaintiffs that there was no such custom. Even admitting that in practice any such thing arose, I should be inclined to agree with the learned Advocate-General in holding that legal recognition of such a claim would be subversive of the objects of the society and that even a majority resolution in its favour cannot be given effect to. There is a vast difference between mere practice in a matter of this sort and recognition of this practice as a right conferring a superior status in a society whose basic object is equality. The right to first thirtham may be, and is no doubt, considered as a mark of superiority in temples and other places; but that will not mean that there is to be superiority in a society of this sort. If I might quote a sort of analogy, I suppose it is likely that when His Majesty the King-Emperor attends a celebration of the Sacrament, he would be communicated before the other members of the congregation; yet, I feel little doubt that to recognize any such priority as of right would be fundamentally opposed to the entire conception of the Sacrament and would be in contravention of its basic idea.

It was suggested that the Sabha are not trustees and can therefore act as they pleased. This does not appear to be correct—vide Halsbury, Vol. IV, section 557, which says:

“As charitable corporations exist solely for the accomplishment of charitable purposes, they are necessarily trustees of their corporate property, whether the beneficiaries are members of the corporation, as in the case of hospitals and colleges, or not. Accordingly, like other trustees, charitable or otherwise, they are subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.”

A corporation can no doubt do what is incidental to the purpose of its business, but it cannot travel outside this—vide Dundee Harbour Trustees v. D. & J. Dicol.⁵ As to the power of a majority to change the fundamental purposes and principles of the main body, Free Church of Scotland (General Assembly of) v. Overtoun (Lord). *Macalister v. Young*² may be referred to where the majority of the Free Church of Scotland united with a body known as the United Presbyterian Church and it was held that, because the tenets of the latter body on the question of the Establishment principle and the Westminster Confession were not identical with those under which the Free Church held the property in dispute, the minority which adhered to the original view of the Free Church were entitled to the property—vide remarks at pages 613, 645 and 648. In such a case one dissentient is enough, *Attorney-General v. Anderson*³, and there is no power to alter the central conditions of the society—*vide Milligan v. Mitchell*¹, unless there is such power specially reserved, which must be proved. Of the cases quoted on the other side, there is only one that appears to be relevant and the remark there is obiter. This is the remark in *Cooper v. Gordon*⁴. In that case, by t of a congregation of Independents, a chapel, a ho property were vested in trustees for the use of tion, and to permit the minister for the time be the house. The deeds contained no express pro appointment or removal of a minister. In 18 Samuel Clarke Gordon was invited by a resc Church members of the congregation to become the then minister. In 1868, a majority of the Cl resolved that Gordon be dismissed, and the m trustees concurred in this resolution. Gordon cl his office for life, in the absence of immorality contrary to the tenets of the denomination, v charged. It was held that he was duly dismiss would present no difficulty, but there is a remar Stuart, V.C., to the following effect:—

“In his answer Mr. Gordon says, that, in the absen usage or rules, the will of every such congregation is i tained and their powers exercised by the votes of the persons in church fellowship worshipping at the particula adds this qualification—that the minority are bound by th points so long as such majority act consistently with doctrines and principles held by the whole body. Such futile, because as soon as the fundamental doctrines ar the majority, they cease to be the fundamental doctriir body, and unless the minority submit there is no longer a together by fundamental doctrines and principles.”

It appears to me that this remark which unnecessary for the determination of the case conciled with the ratio decidendi of *Free Chaur (General Assembly of) v. Overtoun (Lord). Young*², where the Lord Chancellor quoted at approval the dictum of Smith, B., in Dill v. l he said:

*Rāghunath Damodhar v. Janardhan Gopal*⁷ and *Lalji Shamji v. Walji Wardhaman*⁸ are cases relating to caste decisions where it was held that the decision was in the power of the majority of the caste for their own comfort and convenience and not a matter in which the Court could interfere. *Hasan Raza Sahib v. Hasan Ali Sahib*⁹ was merely a matter of election to a committee and *Ramados v. Hanumantha Rao*¹⁰ dealt with the right of the majority of the villagers to manage the temple. There is nothing in these cases to show that the majority of a body can alter the fundamental objects of the body unless such a power is specially reserved.

I therefore hold that the resolution is ultra vires and that this would not be altered by any practice having grown up of giving first thirtham to the representative of the Uttarathi Mutt. I further hold that by the constitution the majority have no power to declare one Mutt superior in the Sabha to any other Mutt. Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), S. 10 (2) (iii)—Partnership business—No borrowed capital—Profits earned by the partnership allowed to remain as capital—Interest on such profits paid to partners—Whether the interest payments can be deducted from the assessable income.

Where a partnership business with a large turnover could not possibly be conducted without some capital and a certain amount of the profits earned by the partnership was allowed to remain in the partnership as capital by means of which to carry on the partnership, interest payments made to the partners upon such profits do not come within the provision of S. 10 (2) (iii) of the Indian Income-tax Act, as the payments of interest were dependent on the earning of profits.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Subramaniam Chettiar, (1928) I.L.R. 51 Mad. 787: 55 M.L.J. 416 (F.B.), distinguished.

Case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, is as follows:—

This is a case of an unregistered firm consisting of V. P. Periaswami Nadar, P. P. Sivanandi Nadar and K. P. M. Shanmuga Nadar, who are the petitioners. The firm was assessed for the year 1928-29 on an income of Rs. 25,905 by the Income-tax Officer, Virudhunagar. In computing the profits the Income-tax Officer disallowed three sums aggregating to Rs. 7,633-4-0 being the interest paid to the three partners on the ground that these sums represented interest paid on the capital of the partners and not interest paid by the firm on any "loan". In its appeal to the Assistant Commissioner against the assessment the firm contended that the sums standing to the credit of the partners' accounts represented loans made by them to the partnership. Attention was also drawn to the fact that there was a sum of Rs. 38,993 standing at the credit of the Bad Debts Reserve Fund account on which no interest was charged. In disposing of the appeal the Assistant Commissioner reduced the total taxable income of the firm to Rs. 25,820 but did not alter the assessment, so far as the disallowance of the sum of Rs. 7,633-4-0 was concerned. The petitioners have now asked me to refer to the High Court under section 66 (2) the following questions alleged to be questions of law arising out of the order of the Assistant Commissioner:—

1. Whether under the circumstances stated above, the amount of Rs. 38,993 is the capital of the petitioners' partnership?

2. Whether interest payments made to partners in cases of firms which have no subscribed capital would be admissible charged under section 10 (2) (iii) of the Act?

3. Whether interest payments made to the partners of the petitioners' firm, under the circumstances mentioned in the petition and in the order of the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax are admissible items of expenditure, under section 10 (2) (iii)?

The only question which arises in this case is whether there was a legal loan to the firm by the partners. This question is clearly one of fact. The books do not show any account for capital other than the accounts standing in the names of the three partners. There is no agreement either defining the capital to be subscribed by the partners or setting out the manner in which loans are to be raised or laying down the terms on which the alleged loans have been advanced. On the other hand there is the fact that the amounts to the credit of the three partners stand in ledger folios headed "Muthalvaravu" account. The petitioners, however, contend that these amounts represent loans made by the partners to the business and do not constitute the capital of the business and in support of this claim they adduce the following arguments:—

(1) that it is possible to carry on a thriving business without capital and the nature of their business was such that no initial capital was necessary,

(2) that if any amount has to be treated as the capital it should be the sum of Rs. 38,993 at credit of the Bad Debts Reserve Fund account,

(3) that no weight attaches to the heading "Muthalvaravu" in the ledger folios, the correct equivalent of "capital" being "Moolathanam," and that, therefore, the sums in question are not capital,

(4) that, in the alternative, they should be held to be borrowed capital, and

(5) that the fact that interest is paid on the amounts in question is itself evidence of a loan.

It is no doubt possible in certain cases to carry on business entirely on borrowed capital, but in such cases it has to be proved that the capital employed is really borrowed capital and the question whether the capital is "borrowed" or not is purely a question of fact. In the present case, it has not been admitted by the Income-tax authorities that the petitioners' business needs no capital.

As regards the reserve for bad debts, I hold that this has been formed for the purpose which the name indicates and I find that it has undoubtedly been utilised for that purpose. It is to all intents and purposes a reserve fund and can in any sense therefore be regarded as subscribed capital and it has not been admitted by the Income-tax authorities that the amount of this fund is the capital or part of the capital of the business. The elaborate explanation that has been given regarding the Tamil equivalent of "capital" has no force. It is well known that the word "Muthalvaravu" is the term invariably adopted in Tamil accounts to represent capital. The final argument which is relied on as proof that the amounts in question are "loans" is that interest has been adjusted on these amounts. This, in my opinion, is no evidence that the amounts represent loans. The adjustment is no more than an arrangement adopted, in view of the fluctuating nature of the amount of capital advanced by the partners, to secure an appropriate variation of the shares of the three partners in the profits of the firm. I consider, therefore, that the authorities below rightly held that the petitioners have not proved the existence of a legal loan. On this finding no question of law arises. I therefore dismiss the application.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—On this petition we are asked to direct the Commissioner of Income-tax to refer the following question:—

"Whether interest payments made to partners of the petitioners' firm, under the circumstances mentioned in the petition, and in the order of the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax are admissible items of expenditure under section 10 (2) (iii) of the Indian Income-tax Act."

The assessee is a partnership firm carrying on business in the purchase and sale of cotton seeds and it appears now to be a very flourishing business. In the year of assessment, 1928-1929, it was assessed to income-tax in the amount of Rs. 25,095. In arriving at this assessment, the Income-tax Officer disallowed a sum of Rs. 7,633-4-0, which the assessee claimed to be entitled to a deduction of from the gross profits of the partnership. They based their claim, as is apparent from the question we are asked to direct the Commissioner of Income-tax to refer, on section 10 (2) (iii) of the Income-tax Act. That section allows a deduction "in respect of capital borrowed for the purpose of the business where the payment of interest thereon is not in any way dependent upon the earning of profits, the amount of interest paid". It was contended by the assessee that this sum of money was interest on capital borrowed from or at least a loan to the partnership by the individual partners and as such not assessable to income-tax. In this connection much reliance was placed by Mr. K. V. Sesha Aiyangar on the Full Bench decision in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Subramaniam Chettiar.¹ There a Full Bench of which I was a member held that where a partner genuinely lends money, beyond the initial capital; to the partnership at an agreed reasonable rate of interest and the money is used for capital expenditure, the interest paid by the partnership to him in the year of assessment must be deducted in computing the profits or gains of the partnership as provided by section 10 (2) (iii) of the Indian Income-tax Act. That is all that that case decides; and when the facts of the case are looked into, it will be seen that before the partnership started, there was an agreement in which the amount of capital contributed by each of the partners was set out and the rate of interest agreed to be paid upon the capital so contributed was also agreed upon. In this case there is no such agreement. Furthermore, in the agreement in that case, there was a provision that after the partnership started working, the partners might contribute further capital to the partnership, and that if they did so, they should receive interest at a certain rate on the capital so contributed. That case in no way, in our view, supports the contention of Mr. Sesha Aiyangar. There is no agreement whatever in the present case to contribute any capital or lend any monies nor is there an agreement to pay any interest. It is contended by the assesses that when the partnership started the business, the business was a very small one and that there was no initial capital. But it is quite obvious as the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax says in his order that a business with so large a turnover as this one could not possibly be conducted without some capital and that what happened in this case was that a certain amount of the profits earned by the partnership were allowed to remain in the partnership as capital by means of which to carry on the partnership. This is a very different case to the Full Bench case where there was a specific agreement to contribute further capital beyond the initial capital already contributed. There is a further difficulty in the way of Mr. Sesha Aiyangar, namely, that whereas in the Full Bench case there was an agreement to pay a fixed rate of interest, here, as I have already stated, there was no agreement to pay any interest at all. But as a fact it does appear that for a period of 17 years 12 per cent. interest was paid on the amounts allowed to remain in the partnership by the partners and it is therefore quite obvious that in those years the partnership earned sufficient profits to enable the partnership to pay that high rate of interest. It must also be equally clear that had there been no such profits, no such rate of interest could have been paid. Therefore, the payment of interest was dependent on the earning of profits. There is not as in the Full Bench case a definite and an enforceable agreement to pay interest. What was strenuously argued before us in that case so far as my recollection serves me was that, quite irrespective of any profits being earned the rate of interest agreed upon was payable. Mr. Sesha Aiyangar is, therefore, unable to bring himself within the provision of section 10 (2) (iii) of the Indian Income-tax Act.

Another matter which I think I ought to mention is that Thiruvengkatachiar, J., who was a member of that Full Bench in his answer to the question referred stated that this question is purely a question of fact, and with that statement I am inclined to agree.

Under these circumstances, we decline to direct the Commissioner of Income-tax to refer this case. The assessee will pay Rs. 150 costs to the Commissioner.

Hindu Law—Partition—Intention—Ascertainment of shares—Division contemplated in future—Parties to be governed by survivorship in the meanwhile—Effect—Construction—Family settlement.

Every endeavour should be made to ascertain from the document, read as a whole, what was the expressed intention of the parties to it. Each part must, if possible, be reconciled to the remainder, because it must be presumed, unless such presumption is forbidden by the language, that it was drafted to subserve a consistent purpose.

*Appeals Nos. 439 and 411 of 1925. Decided on 1st May, 1930.

A document styled a deed of partition and entered into between all the adult members of a joint Hindu family after providing for the immediate separation of one of the members, purported to divide the remaining properties into five equal shares to be taken by the five groups of remaining members. The document recited inter alia that all the members except the one who had been sent out should, during the life-time of the then oldest member of the family, live as members of a joint family, that after his death, partition should be effected according to the shares fixed and that so long as they continued joint, the family should be subject to the law of survivorship. The effect of this document was the question for consideration before their Lordships.

Held, partition or no partition is a matter entirely of intention. The mere ascertainment of shares of the remaining members on the separation of one of them does not per se operate as a disruption of status of all of them without a present intention to divide in status on the part of the remaining members. In all the cases where a definition of shares was held to have the effect of converting the joint tenancy of a coparcenary into a tenancy-in-common, there was a present intention to divide. Without such an intention the deed cannot as a matter of legal consequence result in the severance of the coparcenary. Appovier v. Ramasubba Aiyar, (1866) 11 M.I.A. 75: 20 E.R. 30; Balabux v. Rukhmabai, (1903) L.R. 30 I.A. 130: I.L.R. 30 C. 725 (P.C.); Parbati v. Naunihal Singh, (1909) L.R. 36 I.A. 71: I.L.R. 31 A. 412: 19 M.L.J. 517 (P.C.) and Syed Kasam v. Jorawar Singh, (1922) L.R. 49 I.A. 358: I.L.R. 50 C. 84: 43 M.L.J. 676 (P.C.), distinguished.

Palani Ammal v. Muthavenkatachala Moniagar, (1924) L.R. 52 I.A. 83: I.L.R. 48 M. 254: 48 M.L.J. 83 (P.C.); same case in the High Court in (1917) 33 M.L.J. 759 (H.C.) and Venkatachala Pillai v. Arunthavathachi, (1922) 17 L.W. 755, followed.

There is no doubt that at the time of partition the members may by general agreement distribute the property otherwise than as the Hindu Law provides and there seems no reason why such an agreement cannot be entered into beforehand, why the parties cannot agree to certain principles of partition, to be applied in futuro without becoming tenants-in-common. Lakshmi Chand v. Anandi, (1926) L.R. 53 I.A. 123: I.L.R. 48 A. 313: 51 M.L.J. 52 (P.C.), referred to.

The document is also binding in so far as it put an end to various family disputes relating, e.g., to the adoption of a member, to the question whether certain properties were the self-acquired properties of a particular member of the joint family and so on. "Just as where a number of creditors accept a composition, so in the general give-and-take and composing of differences the deed as a family settlement is binding upon its signatories and those claiming under him."

The accounts, on partition of such a family, should be taken on the basis of an undivided family, following the form in Sri Ranga Thathachariar v. Srinivasa Thathachariar, (1927) I.L.R. 50 M. 866 at 873: 53 M.L.J. 189.

SUIT FOR PARTITION.

The parties to the suit were members of a Hindu family who owned a considerable estate at Thannirkunnam (Mannargudi Taluk) and other properties in the Tanjore District. They were related to one another as shown in the genealogical table set out below:

From about 1890, there were certain disputes in the family. The plaintiff's father Sivavadivelu Odayar was alleged to have been adopted by Sendalangara Odayar; this was denied by others. Certain properties of the family were claimed by some of the members as their own self-acquisitions. There were also disputes as to who were entitled to share in the family properties and as to the share each was entitled to. Balasubramania Odayar, one of the two representatives of the second branch, wanted definitely to cut himself off from the family and on 25th November, 1895, all the members entered into a deed of family settlement by which they sought to put an end to all present and possible disputes. The document (Ex. A) ran as follows:—

“Deed of partition executed on 25th November, 1895, amongst us living in Thannirkunnam, Mannargudi Taluk, viz., (1) Muthu Odayar, son of Subramania Odayar Avergal, Malaiyamar, Saivite, Mirasdar; (2) Balasubramania Odayar, son of Kuppu Odayar Avergal, deceased, who is the son of the said Subramania Odayar Avergal by his senior wife; (3) Singaravelu Odayar, son of Samu Odayar, deceased, and grandson of the said Subramania Odayar’s younger brother Ramu Odayar; (4) Somasundara Odayar, son of the above person; (5) Sivasami Odayar; (6) Gopalaswami Odayar—the other sons of Samu Odayar; (7) Gopalaswami Odayar aforesaid, the guardian and father of his minor son Vijiaraghunathan, (8) Singaravelu Odayar aforesaid, the guardian and junior paternal uncle of the minors Balaguruswami and Balakrishnaswami, who are the grandsons of the said Samu Odayar and sons of Ayyadurai Odayar, deceased; and (9) Sivavadivelu Odayar, grandson of the said Subramania Odayar’s elder brother Sinnu Odayar and the adopted son of Sendalangara Odayar, deceased. In consideration of the fact that disputes might arise in our family in connection with partition and heavy loss might be sustained thereby, of the fact that the said Samu Odayar and his father Ramu Odayar aforesaid had been very prominent members of our family, carried on business, etc., acquired properties by hard work, and brought our family to a very prosperous condition, of the fact that towards the said Samu Odayar’s heirs—viz., Singaravelu Odayar, Sivaswami Odayar, Gopalaswami Odayar, Balaguruswami and Balakrishnaswami—the rest of us have natural affection, and of the fact that the other members have affection towards the said Balasubramania Odayar, the partition arrangements we have come to amongst us are as follows:—

1. Of our family properties, Balasubramania Odayar shall take one-fifth share, and the remaining four-fifths share inclusive of Muthu Odayar’s share (1) Singaravelu Odayar and Somasundara Odayar, (2) Sivaswami Odayar, (3) Gopalaswami Odayar and Vijiaraghunathan, (4) Balaguruswami and Balakrishnaswami, sons of Ayyadurai Odayar, and (5) Sivavadivelu Odayar—these shall divide off in equal shares, that is to say, in five equal shares.

2. (Paragraph 2 sets out the properties belonging to the family, the amount of kist, etc. The total kist is given as Rs. 15,531-5-0, the extent of the land is given as 3464 acres 58 cents.)

3. Out of the said properties, the sharers other than Balasubramania Odayar of us shall, for their four-fifths’ share, take the immoveable properties specified in List A hereunto annexed, etc., and the outstandings, with interest, mentioned in List C; and Balasubramania Odayar of us shall, for his one-fifth share, take the immoveable properties specified in List B, etc. And they (the sharers) shall enjoy them with all rights, from son to grandson and so on in succession, with power to make alienations by way of gift, exchange, sale, etc.

4. (Paragraph 4 makes provision for the enjoyment of the properties left out in Schedules A and B.)

5. (Paragraph 5 provides that out of the moveable properties belonging to the family Balasubramania Odayar received for his share Rs. 35,000 in the shape of paddy, cash, etc., and his claim was discharged and it further provides that Balasubramania Odayar is not liable for the debts contracted by the other members of the family and the other members are not liable for the debts contracted by Balasubramania Odayar.)

6. Inasmuch as, for the reasons that Muthu Odayar of us has natural affection towards Samu Odayar's heirs, viz., Singaravelu Odayar, Gopalaswami Odayar, Balaguruswami and Balakrishnaswami, and for the reason that they might get a smaller share and for various other reasons, Muthu Odayar of us has given away to them his share in the family properties as he has no heirs and as he is advanced in age, the rest of us to the exclusion of Balasubramania Odayar, shall, during the life-time of said Muthu Odayar, live as members of one family. After Muthu Odayar, partition shall be effected according to the shares given in paragraph 1 hereof. The said Muthu Odayar shall, during his life, be at perfect liberty to utilise, as he pleases, a sum of Rupees Four thousand per annum from and out of the income from the four-fifths share of properties aforesaid.

7. Gopalaswami Odayar of us shall perform the obsequies of Muthu Odayar as the son to a father. If, after the life-time of said Muthu Odayar, his wife Alamelu Achi does not find it convenient to live amicably in the family consisting of the sharers other than Balasubramania Odayar of us, the other sharers shall pay to her during her life, maintenance at the rate of Rs. 200 (Two hundred) per annum. If the other sharers aforesaid should effect a division amongst themselves, a sum of Rs. 2,500 (Two thousand five hundred) shall, from and out of the said four-fifths share of properties, be deposited as principal with Gopalaswami Odayar of us; and he shall, for the interest thereon, pay to the said Achi Rs. 200 per annum as stated above. The said Gopalaswami Odayar shall himself perform the said Achi's obsequies, and shall, after the life-time of the said Achi, take also the sum of Rs. 2,500 aforesaid.

8. So long as the sharers other than Balasubramania Odayar of us remain joint without effecting a division according to the shares mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, the family shall be regarded as if it were an ordinary undivided Hindu family subject to the law of survivorship.

9. If anything happens to be sold in the village of Thannirkunnam comprised in the said Lists A and B, which is our own place, and that an important one, out of the villages belonging to our family in Mannargudi Taluk, the same shall be sold to, and purchased by, any person from amongst ourselves. Hereafter, there shall be only friendship between Balasubramania Odayar and the other sharers but no monetary relationship. The amount mentioned in page 18 hereof as having been received by Balasubramania Odayar of us and thus discharged, the other amount of outstandings mentioned in the said page as due in the names of the other sharers and Kuppu Odayar, the other moveable properties, etc., and the amount given in List C and the interest thereon—these, all told, are below Rs. 1,75,000.

It will be clear from the terms of the document that Balasubramania Odayar immediately separated from the family with one-fifth share, Muthu Odayar relinquished his share in the properties and the remaining properties were divided into 5 shares; the other members were divided into 5 groups and each group was allotted a share (paragraph 1). It was further provided (paragraph 6) that during the life-time of Muthu Odayar, the parties should live together, that after his death, if and when they wanted to divide, they should take according to the shares fixed in paragraph 1, and that (paragraph 8) so long as they remained joint, they should be subject to the law of survivorship. The document was subsequently acted upon by the parties in the sense that the other members continued for all practical purposes as members of one family and there were several documents which showed they so treated themselves. On the other hand, certain properties were subsequently purchased in the name of the individual members of the family.

The plaintiff was born in 1898 about three years after Ex. A. Muthu Odayar died in June, 1903, without issue: Sivavadivelu Odayar in August, 1903 and Sivaswami Odayar in 1909 leaving behind him his widow, the 9th defendant in the suit. Singaravelu Odayar died in May, 1917, having before his death adopted the 6th defendant.

The plaintiff brought the present suit in 1919. He alleged that out of the three original branches, the second branch had become extinct, that the others had continued joint in spite of Ex. A, and, as the sole representative of the branch, he was entitled to a half-share of the entire properties. The 1st defendant contended that the effect of Ex. A was to create a division in status and that the clause in paragraph 8 of Ex. A providing for survivorship was inoperative in law and that the parties were each entitled to one-fifth share only. He further contended that he was entitled to the share of Sivaswami Odayar as his full brother, after the 9th defendant, to the exclusion of the other defendants, who were the descendants by another wife. Defendants 3, 5 and 7 contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to a half share but only to one-fourth, that out of the remaining three-fourths, defendants 1 and 2 were entitled to one share, defendants 3, 4, 5, 7 and 8 to one share and the 6th defendant to one share. The 9th defendant alleged in her statement that by virtue of Ex. A, the parties had become divided, that on her husband's death, she became entitled to her husband's share in the properties.

The Sub-Judge held that the deed operated as a division in status. He held the words of the deed were so plain and unambiguous that it was unnecessary to consider the subsequent conduct of the parties, that where a deed contained two clauses inconsistent with one another, the former alone should prevail, that no coparcenary could be created by contract and that as the devolution by survivorship meant the exclusion of female heirs, the clause providing for such a mode of devolution was inoperative in law. He also held that the plaintiff was estopped from questioning the validity of Exhibit A, as a bona fide settlement of family disputes. that he was not entitled to an account of his share during his minority as he had participated in the income of the family and that as he belonged to a different branch altogether, he was not entitled to any portion of the property of Sivaswami Odayar which lapsed in favour of the members only of that branch. In the result, the plaintiff was held entitled to one-fifth share, defendants 1 and 2 to one-fifth, defendants 3, 4, 5 and 7 to one-fifth, defendant 6 as the son of Sivavadivelu to one-fifth and defendant 9 as the heir to her husband to one-fifth.

Two appeals were filed, A.S. No. 439 of 1925 by the plaintiff and A.S. No. 411 of 1925 by defendants 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8. There was also a third appeal, A.S. No. 6 of 1926 by certain lessees who were impleaded in the suit but that is not material for purposes of the report.

In the view their Lordships took about the document, it became unnecessary for them to consider the question raised in A.S. No. 411 if a coparcenary could be created by act of parties. Only the main contentions of the parties in A. S. No. 439 are therefore outlined below.

The Advocate-General (with K. Narasimha Aiyangar and S. Venkatesa Aiyangar) for plaintiff.—The family continued joint in spite of Ex. A. The scheme of the document and the subsequent conduct of the parties support this view. Questions regarding status admit of no anomaly. Either it was a joint family or it was not. If it was divided, the plaintiff is entitled to an account of his share during his minority. The incidents of a divided status, comprising the rule of separate succession, the liability to account, etc., cannot be put an end to by the parties.

On the other hand, if the family continued joint, the plaintiff is entitled to a half share. The parties are not entitled to interfere with the incidents of a joint family, rule of survivorship, fluctuation of shares and the computation of shares by the application of the rule of per stirpes.

One co-owner in receipt of the income from the common property is liable to account to the others for their share of the income. See *Henderson v. Eason*¹; per Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in *Sivanarasa Reddi v. Doraiswami Reddi*²; Lindley on Partnership, p. 35 and Yerukola v. Yerukola.³ compatibility or inconsistency in such a contract and cited the analogy of impartible estates.

S. Varadachariar (with N. A. Krishna Aiyar) for 1st defendant.—Ex. A cannot be entirely ignored nor is it legally possible to give full effect to it. The only legal effect of Ex. A was to create a division in status and the subsequent clause for the devolution of property by survivorship was beyond the competence of the parties and so inoperative in law. There can be no question of reunion of which, even if possible, there is here no pleading or proof. The effect of the separation of one member on the status of the remaining members has been considered in several cases. See Balabux v. Rukhmabai,¹⁴ *Palani Ammal v. Muthuvengkatachala Moniagar*¹⁵, in the High Court, *Palani Ammal v. Muthuvengkatachala Maniagarar*¹⁶ and Durga Dei v. Balmakund.¹⁷ Unlike those cases the shares were specified here to fix their claims once and for all and not merely as incidental to the computation of the share of the outgoing member.

The plaintiff is not entitled to claim the benefit of survivorship on the death of Sivaswami Odayar as he belongs to a different branch.

Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar (with T. V. Ramanatha Aiyar) for 9th defendant adopted the arguments of S. Varadachariar.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—These are three linked appeals, namely, Appeal No. 411 of 1925, Appeal No. 439 of 1925 and Appeal No. 6 of 1926. Of these, Appeal No. 439 of 1925 was argued first as in that the main and the most important contentions between the parties had to be considered. I propose in my judgment to deal with all the three appeals together.

All these appeals arise out of O.S. No. 67 of 1919* in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam. That was a suit for partition. The parties to the suit were all members of an undivided Hindu family related to one another in the manner set out in Schedule A to the plaint. This Hindu family was possessed of considerable immoveable property and in the partition suit the plaintiff claimed a half share in the whole property. The plaintiff stands by himself representing one branch of the family. The genealogical table (Schedule A) shows that all the parties to the suit trace their descent back to one Sepperumal Odayar; and in the judgment of my learned brother Curgenvin, J., the genealogical table* has been described in detail and therefore it is unnecessary for me to explain any further how the parties stand in relationship to one another.

v.

Beasley, C.J.

In the Court below a preliminary decree was passed by means of which the plaintiff was given one-fifth share, defendants 3, 4, 5, 7 and 8 one-fifth share, the 6th defendant one-fifth share, the 9th defendant one-fifth share, and defendants 1 and 2 one-fifth share. The learned Subordinate Judge gave a decree for an account and also directed that the accounting was to be upon the basis of an undivided family although he found that the family had become divided in status by reason of a document, Exhibit A. This document has been the cause of all the trouble in the suit. Various constructions have been placed upon it by the contending parties both here and in the Court below and these appeals depend entirely upon what view we take of that document. In order that it can be better understood we have to go back to the year 1895. Exhibit A is dated the 25th November of that year and is described as a deed of partition. On that date there were alive Muthu Odayar who died in 1903, Balasubramania Odayar who died since the suit was filed, Singaravelu Odayar who died in 1917, Somasundara Odayar, his son, who subsequently died leaving a widow the 10th defendant, Sivaswami Odayar, who died in 1909 leaving a widow the 9th defendant, Gopalaswami Odayar and Sivavadivelu Odayar, the grandson of Sinnu Odayar and the adopted son of Sendalangara Odayar who was himself the son of Sinnu Odayar, the son of Sepperumal Odayar, the common ancestor. By this deed Balasubramania Odayar separated himself from the rest of the family and under clause 1 of the deed it was agreed that he should take one-fifth share of the whole property, the remaining four-fifths share being agreed to be allotted in five equal shares to (1) Singaravelu Odayar and Somasundara Odayar, (2) Sivaswami Odayar, (3) Gopalaswami Odayar and Vijayaraghunathan, (4) Balaguruswami and Balakrishnaswami, and (5) Sivavadivelu, father of the plaintiff. In Exhibit A his adoption by Sendalangaram is recognised and the learned Judge in the Court below has found that adoption proved. The consideration for this document is set out in the preamble to it and is stated to be the fact that disputes might arise in the family in connection with the partition and heavy loss might be sustained thereby, that Samu Odayar and his father Kamu Odayar (Nos. 4 and 11 in the genealogical table) had acquired properties by hard work and brought the family to a very prosperous condition and the natural affection towards his heirs, namely, Singaravelu Odayar, Sivaswami Odayar, Gopalaswami Odayar, Balaguruswami and Balakrishnaswami and also towards Balasubramania. Under clause 6 of the document Muthu Odayar gave away his share in the family properties as he had no heirs and was advanced in age; but there is a reservation that during his life-time he should be at liberty to utilise a sum of Rs. 4,000 per annum out of the income from the four-fifths share of the properties (ascertained in clause 1). Another clause of importance is clause 3 which provides that the sharers are to take the immoveable properties specified in List A and the outstandings in List C and that Balasubramania the outgoing member is to take the immoveable properties specified in List B. Clause 6 must again be referred to here as it is there provided that the sharers (as ascertained in clause 1) are during the life-time of Muthu Odayar to live as members of one family and that after him partition of the property is to be effected according to the shares given in clause 1. Then comes clause 8 which reads as follows:—

It is this clause that has given rise to the whole of the trouble. In the absence of such a clause it would be a very difficult task for the plaintiff to contend that Ex. A. did not effect a division in status between those members of the family who were parties to it, Balasubramania of course going out altogether and having by the deed separated himself entirely from the family. The construction of Ex. A. would then, in my view, have been quite a simple matter and it would have been that the family agreed to divide in status according to certain shares but to live together until the death of Muthu Odayar. The case would then, in my view, have been a plain sailing.

But there is clause 8 and this has enabled the Advocate-General on behalf of the plaintiff to contend that there was no division in status created by Ex. A and that Ex. A must be ignored altogether and the family dealt with in the partition suit as an undivided Hindu family subject to none of the provisions of Ex. A. This, he contends, entitles the plaintiff to a half share of the family property upon a division. Alternatively he argues that clause 8 is so inconsistent with the other clauses in the document that it alone must be applied. On the other hand it is contended by Mr. Varadachari for the 1st defendant that, if clause 8 is inconsistent with clause 1, then the former must be cut out and the parties governed by clause 1. Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar for the 6th defendant contends that full effect must be given to Ex. A, that its provisions are not inconsistent with one another and that both clause 1 and clause 8 can be taken together and a meaning given to the document. In this contention he is supported by Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar for the 14th respondent. The conflicting contentions of the parties, therefore, may be briefly stated as follows:—The plaintiff wishes to ignore Ex. A altogether and treat the family as an undivided family and the defendants contend for the position of a division in status brought about by Ex. A and an agreement under it to live as if the family were an undivided family but not really an undivided family and an agreement to divide by metes and bounds at a later date in accordance with the shares as ascertained in clause 1 of the document. Mr. Varadachari and Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, however, do not go the whole way together in that argument. The latter argues that clause 8 is not repugnant in any sense and that what it means is that although the family is a divided family it is to be treated as if it were an undivided family and as if the members of it at the time of the execution of the document had agreed together to dispose each of their shares to the others in the event of their dying without male issue. Mr. Varadachari, on the other hand, contends that there could be no such disposition in law or in fact and that clause 8 itself is repugnant to the rest of the other clauses in the document. The Advocate-General also contends that the evil of this clause is that it is an agreement to alter the ordinary rule of succession and, therefore, is quite inconsistent with the position of a division in status which creates a tenancy-in-common because it is provided that the property is to go by survivorship instead of by inheritance as it would do in the case of a tenancy-in-common. The learned Subordinate Judge having held that under clause 1 of Ex. A there was a disruption of the joint family and, therefore, a tenancy-in-common says that clause 8 creates a coparcenary with the rights of survivorship, and where there is a disruption of the coparcenary the right of survivorship is gone and that a coparcenary is purely a creature of law and cannot be created by the act of parties. He has, therefore, held that clause 8 is wholly inconsistent with the scheme of division set out in the previous paragraphs and has rejected clause 8 on the ground that where there are two clauses in a deed which are wholly inconsistent with and irreconcilable to each other the former prevails. He has further held that clause 8 relating to the right of survivorship prevents the devolution of property to female heirs and is void since it alters the line of succession allotted by the Hindu Law.

We have first of all to consider whether the claim to a half share in the property now put forward by the Advocate-General can possibly be sustained. If a document is unambiguous in its terms, then little difficulty arises. So far as the terms of the document itself are concerned, it is contended by the learned Advocate-General and Mr. Varadachari that it is impossible to hold that they are unambiguous; and we have been addressed at great length for very many days as to the meaning or possible meaning or impossible meaning of its provisions. It is obvious that when clause 8 is contrasted with the other clauses, they are, without a consideration of the intention of the parties, irreconcilable. We have therefore to see whether we can gather from this document what the intentions of the parties to it were coupled with their conduct subsequent to it as it is the duty of the Court to give effect to a document if it possibly can. The Advocate-General invites us to reject the document altogether except as bringing about the separation of Balasubramania from the rest of the family. But I am unable to agree with the suggestion put forward by him that all that was intended by the parties to this document was by it merely to separate Balasubramania from the rest of the family. To begin with in the preamble it is stated:

"In consideration of the fact that disputes might arise in our family in connection with partition and heavy loss might be sustained thereby."

It cannot, in my view, have been intended by this merely to refer to disputes between Balasubramania and the other members of the family as it seems to me obvious that it refers to possible disputes between all the members of the family on a partition. Then again in clause 1 the remaining four-fifth shares are divided up into five equal shares and allotted to groups 1 to 5. If the document was merely entered into for the purpose of separating Balasubramania from the rest of the family, it was unnecessary to deal with any of the remaining four-fifths share by dividing them equally into five shares. All that it was necessary to do was to give Balasubramania his one-fifth share and let him go out. Then under paragraph 6 Muthu Odayar gives up his share in the family having no heirs and being advanced in age; and there is the provision already referred to that the other sharers are during his life-time to live as members of one family and after his death to effect a partition. The parties to the document must have had some intention when they made that arrangement. Having ascertained the shares in clause 1, in clause 6 not only do they agree after Muthu Odayar's death to effect a partition but to effect it according to the shares as ascertained in clause 1. Then in clause 8 a division according to the shares mentioned in clause 1 is referred to. Therefore, in my opinion, it is impossible to hold that the intention of the parties by this document was merely to separate Balasubramania. The document must be given a meaning. There appear to be two possible alternatives, namely, that the parties intended by this document to divide in status but to remain, although divided in status, as an undivided family and after Muthu Odayar's death to effect a division by metes and bounds in accordance with the shares agreed upon by clause 1, that they recognised that by executing Ex. A they were dividing in status but wished to live together as one family until Muthu Odayar's death and that they decided that during that time and until they did effect a partition by metes and bounds the rule as to the devolution of property in a Hindu undivided family should apply. The other possible alternative is that they did not intend to divide themselves in status by Ex. A, that all they intended to do was to postpone a division until some future date and that when they did divide the division was to be in accordance with clause 1 of the document. But before the latter alternative is considered, we have to consider whether the execution of Ex. A, quite irrespective of what the intentions of the parties might be, did bring about a disruption of status and upon this point there are some cases which have to be considered. The first of these is Appovier's case—*Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar*¹, a decision of the Privy Council. There it was held that according to the true constitution of an undivided Hindu family no individual member of the family, whilst it remains undivided, can predicate of the joint and undivided property, that he has a certain definite share. The proceeds of undivided property must be brought to the common chest or purse, and there dealt with according to the modes of enjoyment by the members of the family. But if the members of an undivided family agree among themselves with regard to particular property, that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership, in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject-matter so agreed to be dealt with; and each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share in the estate which he may claim to receive and enjoy in severalty, although the property itself has not been actually severed and divided. Where, therefore, a deed of partition was made and executed by the other members of an undivided family, dealing with and making actual partition of a portion of the joint estate but leaving the remainder to be divided at a future period in the same manner such deed was held to be a division of right operating as a conversion of the tenancy and a change of status in the family so far as the property specified (was concerned) changing as it were the joint tenancy thereof into a tenancy-in-common and by operation of law making the members of the previously undivided family a divided family in respect of such property. At page 89 Lord Westbury in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee states as follows:—

“Certain principles, or alleged rules of law, have been strongly contended for by the appellant. One of them is, that if there be a deed of division between the members of an undivided family, which speaks of a division having been agreed upon, to be thereafter made, of the property of that family, that deed is ineffectual to convert the undivided property into divided property until it has been completed by an actual partition by metes and bounds. Their Lordships do not find that any such doctrine has been established; and the argument appears to their Lordships to proceed upon an error in confounding the division of title with the division of the subject to which the title is applied. According to the true notion of an undivided family in Hindu Law, no individual member of that family, whilst it remains undivided, can predicate of the joint and undivided property, that he, that particular member, has a certain definite share. No individual member of an undivided family could go to the place of the receipt of rent, and claim to take from the Collector or receiver of the rents, a certain definite share.”

He then proceeds to say that the members of an undivided family can agree amongst themselves that the property shall be the subject of ownership in certain defined shares and this alters the character of undivided property, that joint enjoyment is taken away from it and the member has a right to claim to receive and enjoy it in severalty and that by such an agreement therefore the joint tenancy is converted into a tenancy-in-common. In *Balabux v. Rukhmabai*² the Privy Council held that there is no presumption when one coparcener separates from the others that the latter remain united, that where it is necessary, in order to ascertain the share of the outgoing coparcener, to fix the shares which the others are or would be entitled to, the separation of one may be said to be the virtual separation of all and that an agreement amongst the remaining coparceners to remain united or to reunite must be proved like any other fact. There can be no question in this case of any agreement to reunite as there were minors in existence and such minority renders any such agreement impossible. The importance of this decision lies in its placing the burden upon those who maintain that there has been no division in status of displacing the presumption which this judgment holds arises. In a later case *Parbati v. Naunihal Singh*³, another decision of the Privy Council, it was held that where one member of the family effects a separation of himself from the family and where the ascertainment of the shares of the remaining members of the family is merely incidental to that one member's separation, the presumption is that the other members remain undivided. Both Appovier's case and the case in *Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu*⁴ were considered and the principles laid down in them followed but it was stated that the High Court had proceeded in an erroneous method in considering whether each document was by itself sufficient to rebut the prima facie presumption that as the family was joint before 1861 it continued to be joint, and omitting to take into account the cumulative effect of all the documents which taken together showed that all the transactions for many years could only be reconciled and made consistent on one hypothesis, namely, that the important document was a genuine document and the agreement in it embodied a real agreement. There, after the death of one of the members of the joint family in 1861 the other members mutually agreed that the joint property should thenceforth be held and enjoyed by the various members of the family in certain defined shares which they specified in a petition to the Collector to have their names entered to that effect in the official papers of the village. This was done, the petition was filed and it was held that on the evidence and in the circumstances of the case a partition of the property had been effected in 1861 and that the transactions and conduct of the members of the family with respect to the management of the property had been on the basis that it was held in separate shares from that time. In a later case, namely, *Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Momiagar*⁵, the Privy Council held that when a member of a joint family has separated, an agreement by the remaining members to continue undivided may be inferred from the way in which their business is carried on after the separation. On page 257 it is stated in the judgment:

"In coming to a conclusion that the members of a Mitakshara joint family have or have not separated, there are some principles of law which should be borne in mind when the fact of a separation is denied. A Mitakshara family is presumed in law to be a joint family until it is proved that the members have separated. That the coparceners in a joint family can by agreement amongst themselves separate and cease to be a joint family, and on separation are entitled to partition the joint family property amongst themselves, is now well-established law."

Then a reference is made to Appovier's case and it proceeds:

"But the mere fact that the shares of the coparceners have been ascertained does not by itself necessarily lead to an inference that the family had separated. There may be reasons other than a contemplated immediate separation for ascertaining what the shares of the coparceners on a separation would be."

The result seems to me to be that where the ascertainment of the shares of the remaining coparceners is merely incidental to the separation of one of them, no presumption arises that the family hitherto undivided has become divided. The High Court judgment in this case is reported in *Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Maniagarar*⁶. On page 780 Kumaraswami Sastri, J., after reviewing a number of authorities upon the question of whether the separation of one member ipso facto effects a separation between all the others, stated his opinion to be that where the consideration of the shares of the others is only incidental for the purpose of giving the relief which the plaintiff wants (as it is not possible to arrive at the share of one coparcener without knowing how many coparceners there are and their shares) and the status of the others is unaffected by a decree or division in favour of one member.

*Syed Kasam v. Joravar Singh*⁷ is another case to which we were referred. There a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara claimed his share of the family property and the members of the family agreed to appoint an arbitrator to partition the property among them and to accept his partition and it was argued that this agreement to appoint an arbitrator effected a severance of the joint estate. This contention the Privy Council accepted and at page 92 Viscount Cave states as follows:—

But the facts of this case are very different to those in that case on account of clause 8 of the present agreement. Whilst that remains, it seems to me that it cannot be held that the ascertainment of the shares of the coparceners in the earlier clauses of it necessarily brings about a division in status. It seems to me that in all the cases to which we were referred upon this point, upon the facts of them that a present intention to divide in status was apparent. In this case, as I have already said, in the absence of clause 8, such an intention is discoverable. But effect has to be given to this agreement, and to clause 8, unless it can be shown that whatever the intention of the parties to the agreement may have been, the ascertainment of the shares of the remaining members of the family must in law operate as a division in status. No authority for this proposition has been put before us and I am clearly of opinion that such a proposition as that cannot be supported by reference to any of the cases referred to. One fact must not be overlooked and that is that Ex. A was drafted by a vakil and it is hardly likely that he would have drafted a document intending in the earlier part of it to convert the estate into a tenancy-in-common and yet in the latter part of it to preserve the coparcenary. He cannot have intended to disrupt the status of the family and yet to apply the principle of survivorship to it. This would, in my view, have created an impossible position. What, therefore, was it that the parties intended? It was contended before us that the wishes of Muthu Odayar were intended to be given effect to and they were that the family should remain an undivided family during his lifetime. He was an old man and willing to give up his share in the family property to the others. I think that this contention is well founded and that in deference to Muthu Odayar's wishes the family agreed to remain undivided during his lifetime and had no present intention at the date of the execution of Exhibit A to divide in status at all. Clearly there had been disputes in the family. The adoption of Sivavadivelu was open to question and in Exhibit A that matter was set at rest. There were also other matters which required adjustment and there is nothing unreasonable in supposing that when the parties came together for the purpose of dividing themselves from Balasubramania, they took that opportunity of settling once and for all, all the matters then in dispute and likely to cause disputes thereafter—indeed it is so stated in the document—that there never was any intention to become divided in status but that they agreed to a future partition and that when the occasion for it should arise there should be no dispute as to the shares of the coparceners on such a partition. No other view of the intention of the parties seems to me possible and I have no difficulty in thinking that such was the intention. That such was the intention of the parties was nobody's case in the appeal but the comment to be made upon that is that all the parties to the appeal were trying to get a larger share of the family property and that this case suited no one. The view that I have taken is strongly supported by the subsequent conduct of the family. They continued to live as an undivided family throughout and it was not suggested that there was any documentary evidence faintly suggesting a previous division in status except Exhibit VI (a), a letter addressed to the Chairman, Municipal Council, Kumbakonam, and signed by Sivaswami Odayar. Certain voters took exception to the candidature of Sivaswami Odayar at the Municipal Elections because Sivavadivelu was already a Municipal Councillor and the rules framed by Government allowed only one member of an undivided Hindu family to be registered as a person qualified to be elected or to vote and it was therefore claimed that the nomination of Sivaswami Odayar should be rejected and Ex. VI (a) represents Sivaswami Odayar's answer to this objection. Whilst setting out other answers the following answer is given:—

“Even admitting for the sake of argument that the rule referred to is capable of the interpretation put upon it by the petitioners our family might for the purpose of this objection be legally considered as a divided one under the terms of a registered document entered into among the members thereof, dated the 25th November, 1895. Each member is therefore entitled to have his name registered separately provided he possesses the requisite qualifications.”

This answer is by no means definite. Certainly it does not unequivocally state that the family was a divided one; on the contrary it seems to admit that it is not but ought for the purpose of the objection to be considered as such. I cannot take this answer as in any way indicating that the family considered that a division had taken place by means of Ex. A. This is the only document which by any possible stretch of imagination can be said to support the respondent's case. On the other hand there are a number of documents which indicate that the family remained undivided. In Ex. D, a petition, dated 1904, Sivavadivelu is described by the 1st defendant as his undivided brother. Ex. KK is the written statement filed by Singaravelu Odayar in O.S. No. 42 of 1908 in the Sub-Court, Kumbakonam, and in paragraph 4 of it it is stated:

"Myself, the defendants 8 to 11 and the deceased Sivaswami Odayar are members of an undivided family."

Sivaswami Odayar died in 1909 before this written statement was filed. Then again in paragraph 9 it is stated:

"The said Sivaswami Odayar and ourselves were members of an undivided family."

This written statement was adopted by Gopalaswami Odayar, the 8th defendant in that suit, for himself and as guardian of the minor 11th defendant and also by Balaguruswami Odayar and Balakrishna Odayar. Written statements in O.S. No. 132 of 1917 in the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Tiruvarur were also filed of which Exhibit C-13 is an example and there also Gopalaswami Odayar stated that the 2nd defendant in that suit was his undivided brother. There are other documents, such as Exhibits CC, CC-1 and PP, which are quite incompatible with any other position than that of an undivided family.

Much was addressed to us in argument upon the meaning of the words in clause (8) "the family shall be treated as an ordinary undivided Hindu family." It was contended that the use of the word "treated" implied that the family was not actually an undivided family because "treated" is to be read as "deemed" but although upon a strict construction of the word "deemed" it may possibly imply something different to actual, I do not think that when the whole of the clause is read, it means anything else than an actual ordinary undivided Hindu family. The Vakil who was responsible for drafting the document cannot have intended to say that a tenancy-in-common was nevertheless to "be deemed to be an undivided Hindu family subject to the law of survivorship." I think that it is more probable that he had in mind the possible result of the earlier ascertainment of the shares of the members of the family and that in clause (8) he decided to make it clear that there had been no division in status by that ascertainment and so emphasised the retention of the undivided status in order to remove any possible misconception. This is the conclusion I have arrived at as to the construction of Exhibit A and, in my view, it cannot be argued that it is not binding upon the plaintiff. It is an agreement which, in the absence of any authority to the contrary, can be validly entered into and was entered into by his father Sivavadivelu and was an agreement between all the adult members of the family. There was certainly consideration for it in that it settled the dispute between the parties and recognised the adoption of the plaintiff's father and in fact gave him a somewhat larger share than he would have got by reason of such adoption and furthermore there was a relinquishment of Muthu Odayar's share. In view of this finding that there was no disruption in the family on the date of Ex. A, even in status and that the family remained undivided, it is unnecessary to deal with the arguments of counsel based upon a division in status effected on the date which Exhibit A bears. On the question of upon what basis the accounts are to be taken, it follows from this decision that it must be on the basis of an undivided family from 5th November, 1917 and following the form in Sri Ranga Thathachariar v. Srinivasa Thathachariar^s I have arrived at the same conclusion upon this point as that of the learned Subordinate Judge but of course for different reasons, because he found that Exhibit A did effect a division in status. I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge also in rejecting the plaintiff's claim to past mesne profits in respect of Items C-5 and C-7 against the 27th and 28th defendants as he has found that they were not in adverse possession and I am not inclined to disagree with that finding. The result of this, therefore, is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Two sets of costs to respondents. Defendants 1, 2 and 9 in one group and defendants 3, 4 and 6 in the other group. (Defendant 28 does not ask for any costs.)

With regard to Appeal No. 411 of 1925, the only question in that was the construction to be placed upon clause (8) of Exhibit A. That only fell for discussion in the event of our holding that Ex. A effected a division in status and as we have held that it did not, this appeal is not capable of further argument but is allowed to the extent indicated in the judgment of Curgenvén, J. Costs of all parties to come out of the estate.

Curgenven, J.—These three appeals arise out of a suit for the partition of the joint property of a family of Odayars known as the Thannirkunnam family. This property comprised the whole or portions of several villages in the Tanjore District, as well as moveables and outstandings, the whole amounting, according to the plaint valuation, to some four and a half lakhs.

The following is the family genealogical table. [The table will be found set out in the statement of facts.]

The family lived in a condition of undisputed jointness until 1895, but not without disputes regarding certain matters which will be referred to later. In that year all the adult members subscribed to a partition deed, Ex. A, and it is upon the construction of this document that the first two of the three appeals have to be decided.

The questions to which the document Ex. A gives rise are, firstly, what does it mean, and, secondly, is it binding upon the signatories to it and those claiming under them. Very long and elaborate arguments have been addressed to us upon the former of these two questions, the parties ranging themselves into three main groups, each with its own construction to put forward. How these groups came to be formed, and in what circumstances the document originated, need to be borne in mind in attempting to discover the intention underlying the deed.

The family, as the genealogical table shows, consisted in 1895 of three main branches, those of Sinnu, Subramania and Ramu Odayar. Sinnu's branch depended for its existence upon the fact of the adoption of Sivavadivelu, a member of Ramu's branch, by Sinnu's son Sendalangara. Subramania's branch was represented by two members, Balasubramania and Muthu. The third branch, that of Ramu, included a number of persons, Ramu's son Samu having had five sons. All those defendants who belong to the family are representatives of this branch. Up to 1895, as has been said, the family formed a single coparcenary, although being possessed of extensive property and engaged in various activities its members may have exhibited some external marks of separateness. Some time before the date of Ex. A various disputes arose. One, it is said, had reference to Sivavadivelu's adoption. Another was concerned with the nature of some of the property, whether it was self-acquired or joint. Balasubramania, of the second branch, evinced a desire to get his share divided, while Muthu, of the same branch, was strongly of opinion that the whole family should remain joint. It was a question, therefore, whether to agree to his division, and if so, what share he should get. Some of these circumstances will need to be considered again when the binding character of the document is inquired into. It is sufficient to say here that Balasubramania had his way and split off from the remainder of the family; and this seems primarily to have afforded occasion for the deed. At the same time there is no doubt that the opportunity was availed of to compose the other outstanding questions, and to settle once for all how upon a general partition the property was to be allotted.

The document begins by calling itself a deed of partition between the signatories, a description which the cleavage with Balasubramania would in itself justify, and adverts to the danger that disputes might arise in connection with partition and heavy loss be occasioned thereby. Grounds are then found in the services to the family of Ramu Odayar and his son Samu Odayar for giving their branch special consideration. Accordingly, "the partition arrangements we have come to amongst ourselves are as follows." Then follow nine clauses setting forth these arrangements. Of these, the language of clauses (1), (3), (6) and (8) must decide the construction to be placed upon the document. Clause (1) assigns to Balasubramania a one-fifth share and provides as regards the remaining four-fifths that the division is to be into five equal shares—four to go to the four sub-branches of the third branch, and one to Sivavadivelu. Clause (3) defines Balasubramania's share by means of a list, and collects the remaining property, comprising the family property of the remaining members, into two other lists. Clause (6) recites that Muthu Odayar, out of natural affection for Samu Odayar's heirs, and because they would otherwise get a smaller share, gives them his share in the family property, being himself without heirs and advanced in years. In view of this, "the rest of us shall during the lifetime of Muthu Odayar live as members of one family. After Muthu Odayar, partition shall be effected according to the shares laid down in clause (1)." Clause (8) runs as follows:—

"So long as the sharers other than Balasubramania Odayar of us remain together without effecting a division by metes and bounds according to the shares mentioned in clause (1), the family shall be regarded as an ordinary undivided Hindu family subject to the law of survivorship."

The meaning of these clauses, as I have said, has been variously interpreted. The plaintiff, while very willing to avail himself of the document so far as it confirms his father's adoption, contends that clause (8) shows that the family remained joint and that the specification of shares in clause (1), being repugnant to the notion of a joint family, is invalid. He asks for a half share in the entire remaining property, including that resigned by Muthu Odayar. A directly contrary view is pressed upon us on behalf of the 1st, 2nd and 9th defendants. One of Samu Odayar's sons, Sivaswami, died subsequent to the execution of the document, leaving a widow, the 9th defendant. Of course if the family remained joint she will only be entitled to maintenance. But if Ex. A created a severance of status, the question whether or not she is to take her husband's share will depend upon whether, in spite of that circumstance, the rule of survivorship is to be applied under clause (8). She, therefore, contends for the virtual rejection of this clause. The 1st defendant is the sole surviving full brother of Sivaswami Odayar, and supports the widow in consideration of his reversionary interest. The third group—descendants of Ayyathorai Odayar (defendants 3, 4, 5, 7 and 8) and Singaravelu's adopted son (6th defendant)—contend that although clause (1) may have effected a severance of status, yet it is possible to give legal effect to clause (8) in such a manner as to apply what is, within certain limits, a rule of survivorship. The Principal Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the construction contended for by defendants 1, 2 and 9. This has given rise on the one hand to an appeal by the plaintiff (A.S. No. 439) and on the other an appeal by defendants 3 to 8 (A.S. No. 411).

In approaching the construction of the document, no authority is needed for the principle that every endeavour should be made to ascertain from it, read as a whole, what was the expressed intention of the parties to it. Each part must, if possible, be reconciled to the remainder, because it must be presumed, unless and until such presumption appears to be forbidden by the language, that it was drafted to subserve a consistent purpose and course of action. Observation of this principle would seem to require that those constructions which would reject either clause (1) or clause (8) should, to begin with at least, be put on one side; because it seems clear that the adoption of either must frustrate some part of the intention with which the settlement was executed. There remain two interpretations to consider. The first supposes clause (1) to have effected a division in status, while clause (8) preserves the rule of survivorship. The second, which none of the parties finds it in his interest to support, but which may not be the less worth considering on that account, would construe clause (1) as no more than an agreement into what shares the property should be divided after Muthu Odayar's death, and not as evidencing a resolve immediately to sever in status. The clause would then plainly be reconcilable with clause (8).

Dealing with the merits of these two views, it may be conceded that, but for the existence of clause (8), the natural view, and the view supported by authority, would be that a severance of status resulted from the declaration contained in clause (1). So far as the partial partition of Balasubramania's share was concerned, all that was needed was to specify his one-fifth, and to leave the remaining members as an undivided family in possession of the remainder. Without doubt, therefore, a further intention is denoted by the apportionment of the four-fifths remaining into five equal shares. It has been urged that, whether that intention was to divide prospectively or immediately, the mere definition of shares in law converted the joint tenancy of a coparcenary into a tenancy-in-common; because an essential incident of a coparcenary is that no member can predicate what his share would be upon a partition. Before considering the case-law upon this point, a few elementary considerations need to be stated. The members of a coparcenary own their property jointly, and the interest which each member has in it fluctuates with the number of other members, as some are born and some die. It fluctuates by operation of the rule of survivorship, and since that rule is a necessary incident of the status, so must be the liability to fluctuation. Hence abrogation of the rule, rendering the shares fixed, necessarily involves a disruption of the joint status. The members become tenants-in-common, each possessed of individual rights which they may dispose of as individual property. They have substituted the rule of inheritance for the rule of survivorship. But if they retain the rule of survivorship, it is not easy to understand how they can be said to have fixed their shares, because by the terms of their agreement those shares are still subject to the fluctuation produced by the rule operating upon them. Merely to specify, therefore, that on partition the property will be divided according to a certain method, and until then the members will remain joint, would not seem, on first principles, necessarily to precipitate a severance. A simple illustration of the distinction I seek to draw may be given. Suppose four brothers and a cousin (son of a deceased paternal uncle) compose a joint family. Upon a partition, the cousin would take half the property, the primary division being per stirpes, and the four brothers would each take one-quarter of the other half. Suppose, however, that these five members come to a settlement whereby they agree that, when a partition takes place, it is to be per capita throughout instead of per stirpes in the first instance, so that each member would obtain one-fifth, the family in the meanwhile to remain joint. There has been a substitution of one rule for another for the ascertainment of shares, but the shares are not thereby any the more or the less ascertained. Much less has any division of rights been effected. Yet that is very much what has occurred here. What the parties in effect said was, "We will recognise Sivavadivelu's adoption, but when we come to divide we will ignore it, and count this member as though he occupied his natural place as a son of Samu Odayar": though it may be a question how the rule of survivorship should be applied to such an arrangement. I do not think that there is any authority for the view that such an agreement necessarily causes a division of status. The dicta of Lord Westbury in Appovier's case, *Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar*¹, do not apply to such circumstances, because there the family members agreed that thenceforth the property should be subject to ownership in certain defined shares, so that there was a division of rights, although it was not followed up by an actual partition. In *Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu*² the members of a joint family executed an ikrarnama, and the question was whether it effected a division in status. Their Lordships experienced "no difficulty in the construction of the ikrarnama, in which it is stated in unambiguous terms that defined shares in the whole estate had been allotted to the several coparceners," and that they were thereby converted from joint tenants into tenants-in-common. In the present case, assuming the retention of the rule of survivorship, the conversion of the joint tenancy into a tenancy-in-common can scarcely have occurred. Another case in the same line of Privy Council decisions is *Parbatī v. Naunihal Singh*³, which related to an agreement by the members of a joint family that the family property should be thenceforth held and enjoyed by the various members of the family in certain defined shares. In deciding that the agreement produced a division in status their Lordships were, I think, more concerned with the construction of the documents evidencing the agreement than with their legal effect, once it was found that an immediate division into shares was intended. The use of the word "thenceforth" will be noted.

Another and not dissimilar case is *Syed Kasam v. Jorawar Singh*⁹ of some assistance here because of an observation that the agreement was "quite sufficient to effect a severance in interest and to prevent the share of Nain Singh from passing by survivorship". Only by holding that clause (8)* of the present agreement cannot operate, can the agreement itself be held to effect such a severance.

I think it will be found that in each of these cases a present intention to divide in status was discovered, and none of them is authority for the view that the parties cannot agree to certain principles of partition, to be applied in futuro without becoming tenants-in-common. This in my view disposes of the contention that the family members here, irrespective of their own wishes, and irrespective of the terms upon which they proposed to hold their property until Muthu Odayar's death, must be regarded as severed in status. Before going further, it will be convenient to consider what their actual intention seems to have been. The document was drafted by a vakil, and although unfortunately it has given rise to this costly litigation, it is not unreasonable to suppose that it was drafted with due regard to the principles of Hindu Law. It can hardly be supposed that any one conversant with those principles would draw an instrument of so hybrid a character that in one place it divides status and makes the signatories tenants-in-common, while in another it applies to their property so well understood an incident of the joint family status as the rule of survivorship. It is not too much to say that this rule is the logical outcome of conditions wholly at variance with the incidents of a co-tenancy. If Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, in his endeavours to reconcile the two things, has convinced me of one thing it is the extreme difficulty of the task which was set him. He had to admit that the survivorship principle could only be applied with modification; and Mr. Varadachariar found no difficulty in suggesting problems and anomalies to which its application would give rise. Let us then see what the members of the family would seem to have desired. One thing is clear—that very great deference was paid to the wishes of Muthu Odayar. He was the only surviving member of his generation, and, as the document says, "advanced in years". His name stands first in the deed. He was to give up his share to the others, and, as the evidence shows, he was most anxious that apart from Balasubramania's separation, which he deplored, the family should remain joint. Doubtless some slur may attach to family members who dispute and divide. It was, therefore, provided that so long as he lived there should be no further partition. I can see no reason to suppose that during his lifetime a division even of status was intended. After all, although such a severance is a familiar enough legal conception in the Courts, the necessity for partition first by status and then by metes and bounds does not very commonly arise in practice. Nor, again, if such was the intention, are the parties likely to have nullified its main legal effect by the addition of clause (8). Accordingly I cannot escape the conclusion that what they wanted was to remain joint until after Muthu Odayar's death while settling how the property should then be divided. I have myself no difficulty in construing Ex. A as an expression of such an intention. It has been asked why, if no immediate division was intended, the parties should have been at pains to declare in clause (8) that "the family shall be treated as (or 'deemed to be') an ordinary undivided Hindu family subject to the law of survivorship"; and stress has been laid on the word "treated" or "deemed" as indicating a consciousness that the family was not in fact joint. No doubt the phrase "deemed to be" is commonly used in statutes to extend the application of a provision of law to a class not otherwise amenable to it. But, as the learned Advocate-General observes, one cannot apply to a mofussil document rules of construction that would be appropriate in the case of a statute. I think the reasonable view to take is that the draftsman, having in mind such decisions on Appovier's case and realising that clause (1) might imperil the joint status (a fear, as the sequel shows, not unfounded), inserted clause (8) as a precautionary measure. A case which bears some resemblance to this one was one decided by Krishnan and Ramesam, JJ., in Veitkatachala Pillai v. Arunthavathachi.¹⁰ The second of three brothers was adopted out of the family, the other two remaining joint. All three entered into an agreement to put their property together and live as members of a joint family, and when a division should take place to divide into three equal shares, subject to the operation of the law of survivorship. It fell to be decided whether the agreement had occasioned a severance of status, and there, as here, it was argued that the deed "as a matter of legal consequence, whatever the parties might have intended, resulted in the severance of coparcenary"; but the learned Judges observe that the document recited that no party to it was to assert that any portion of the property belonged to him separately or exclusively, and provided for future born children to be made sharers. It was further suggested that the fixing of the shares at one-third each was an indication that a division was intended, and *Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu*⁴ was cited in support of this contention. The answer to this, equally applicable I think to the present case, was that the definition of shares amounted to nothing more than a mere statement as to what each person would be entitled to in case of a division if no brother were born.

I should be prepared to hold then that the document is not ambiguous of the intention to remain joint, and is not ambiguously expressed. But conceding that there may be ambiguity, it is permissible to look at the subsequent conduct of the parties to ascertain if it favours the one view or the other.

A number of documents throw light upon this question. The earliest is a petition (Ex. D) filed in 1904 by the 1st defendant asking to be appointed to the Negapatam Devasthanam Committee in the vacancy caused by the death of Sivavadivelu, whom he describes as his undivided brother. Sivavadivelu was of course his natural brother though his cousin brother by adoption. Sivaswami Odayar, who was very largely conducting the family affairs, died in 1909 and his death gave occasion for a number of applications in pending suits. Ex. KK is a written statement filed by Singaravelu Odayar in a suit on a promissory-note in which he was impleaded after Sivaswami Odayar's death. The terms of this statement throughout are only compatible with the existence of an undivided status. The present 1st defendant and the 3rd and 4th defendants adopted this statement in Exs. KK-1 and KK-2. The C series of documents again are compatible only with joint family membership, as for instance Ex. C-4, where the members of family of Sivaswami, claiming to be his coparceners, asked to be brought on for purposes of executing the decree. The widow would of course have been the proper representative had the deceased man not been joint with the other family members. Ex. PP is a promissory-note executed by Singaravelu Odayar in 1911 in renewal of a debt contracted by Sivaswami Odayar, whom he describes as his undivided brother. Ex. CC is an application by Singaravelu Odayar to the Receiver of the Palace Estate at Tanjore to transfer to his undivided younger brother Gopalaswami Odayar (1st defendant) the registry standing in his name of certain lands. The record shows that reference was made to the head karnam who reported that the family was an undivided one. A statement of the same effect is contained in a letter, Ex. CC-1, which the 1st defendant wrote to the Receiver in the same connection. In 1917, a few days before his death, Singaravelu Odayar on behalf of himself, his adopted son and all the members of Ayyathorai's branch sent the remainder of the family a notice Ex. N that they should be held thenceforward to be divided. The notice says:

"Although yourselves and ourselves have been, till now, living as members of an undivided family, as we think that we should become divided from you, we have become divided from now. You have no right to the properties belonging to our share. In the same way, we have no right to the properties belonging to your share. We strictly inform you that henceforward there shall be between us only relationship by blood, but no interest with regard to property."

Whatever the circumstances in which this notice was issued it contains no allusion to the partition deed of 1895 and expressing as it does an unequivocal intention to become divided in status, it cannot easily be reconciled with the theory that an earlier division of this kind had already taken place. In fact, no further action seems to have been taken and this notice remained as much a dead letter as the suit partition deed itself. I have left to the last the only document which can in any manner be construed as suggesting a divided status. In 1899 Sivawami Odayar offered himself as a candidate at a municipal election in Kumbakonam and Ex. VI is a protest addressed by a number of voters to the Chairman, objecting to his candidature on the ground that his brother Sivavadivelu was already a municipal councillor and that the rules precluded more than one member of an undivided Hindu family from sitting on the Council. Ex. VI-(a) is Sivawami Odayar's reply. His primary argument is that where in an undivided family the property is sufficient to qualify more than one individual for a seat, the rule referred to had no application. He then goes on to say that admitting that the rule is capable of the interpretation placed upon it by the petitioners, his family "might for the purpose of this objection be legally considered as a divided one under the terms of a registered document entered into among the members thereof, dated the 25th November, 1895". It seems clear to me from the terms of this letter that Sivawami Odayar's own view was that he was undivided from his brother and that he merely put forward the possible legal effect of the partition deed as a means of gaining his object. If he had indeed believed that it divided the status, his reply would surely have been in different terms. From a consideration of all the available documentary evidence therefore I think that no other conclusion is possible but that those members of the family whose views are ascertainable from these documents entertained the view that they were still undivided in status.

My conclusion then is that the family members intended to remain joint until Muthu Odayar's death, while entering into this agreement as to what their shares should be thereafter. I have already expressed the view that an agreement of this nature does not necessarily disrupt the status. Nor has any authority been shown for the position that the members of a joint family are incapable of entering into such an agreement. There is no doubt that at the time of partition the members may by general agreement distribute the property otherwise than as Hindu Law provides, and there seems no reason why such an agreement cannot be entered into beforehand. In the Privy Council case *Lakshmi Chand v. Anandi*¹¹, two brothers, while remaining joint, agreed that, if either died without male issue, his widow should take a life-interest in half the estate, thereby abrogating the rule of survivorship. It was held that the agreement was valid because a co-sharer may with the consent of the remaining co-sharers mortgage or charge the share to which he would be entitled upon a partition; and, on the same principle, he may deal otherwise with such a share. If, therefore, all the family members enter into a settlement whereby some will, upon a partition, receive less than what under Hindu Law would be their share, the latter cannot afterwards plead that they were legally incompetent so to agree. Nor, I think, can the plaintiff succeed in attacking the agreement on the ground that, being without consideration, it is not binding upon him. It was entered into by his father, Sivavadivelu Odayar, before he was born, and although Sivavadivelu lived until 1903 he never repudiated it. So far as the other signatories are concerned it settles the question of his adoption, for which it seems there is extremely little independent evidence—a batch of four sale-deeds (see Exs. Z and Z-1) in which this relationship is recited being the only documentary evidence (if indeed they are legal evidence at all) originating before Ex. A upon the record. On the other hand, the evidence of the 1st and 3rd defendants as D.Ws. 18 and 13 shows that there were disputes within the family about the adoption, and this is borne out by two other witnesses, D.Ws. 4 and 5. If Ex. A goes, therefore, the plaintiff's status, following Sivavadivelu's status as an adopted son is at least in jeopardy, and as that would be fatal to the claim he makes to a half share in the property, he does not handle this two-edged argument very confidently. It seems incontestable that Ex. A is binding for the sufficient reasons that it was an agreement between all the adult members of the family, and that it put an end—for the time being at least—to the disputes between them. Besides the matter of the plaintiff's father's adoption, there was the connected question of the share which Balasubramania Odayar was to take. If the adoption was to be recognised he would get one-sixth of the whole, if not, one-fourth. A mean was struck, and he received one-fifth. It appears, too, that there was a disagreement whether certain property was self-acquired by Ramu and Samu Odayar or joint family property, a question which would affect the shares to be taken by each branch. Lastly, the settlement included Muthu Odayar's resignation of his own share, subject to the payment to him annually of a sum of Rs. 4,000. Altogether, there can be no question, but that, just as where a number of creditors accept a composition, so in the general give-and-take and composing of differences Ex. A as a family settlement is binding upon its signatories and those claiming under them.

The result of these findings will be that the undivided share of Sivaswami Odayar will pass by survivorship to the remaining members of his own branch, viz., (1) the descendants of Ayyathorai, defendants 3 to 5, 7 and 8, (2) the 6th defendant as representing his adoptive father Singaravelu, and (3) Gopalaswami and his son, defendants 1 and 2. Each of these will receive one-third of one-fifth share in addition to his or their own one-fifth in all four-fifteenths each, this fraction being further sub-divided in the case of the first branch, equally between the 3rd and 4th defendants' sub-branches. The decree of the Lower Court will be modified accordingly. The plaintiff, belonging to a different main branch from Sivaswami Odayar's cannot benefit by his death, but will take the one-fifth already awarded him by the Lower Court. As regards the other orders to be passed in A.S. Nos. 411 and 439, I agree to the terms of them as proposed by my Lord.

Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation, 1793—Indian Income-tax Act, 1922—Income derived by zamindar from permanently-settled estates—Liability to assessment to income-tax.

Held, on the true construction of the Bengal Regulations of 1793, and particularly of Regulation I of 1793 (The Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation), that while the Regulations contain assurances against any claim to an increase of the jama based on an increase of the zamindari income, they contain no promise that a zamindar shall in respect of the income which he derives from his zamindari be exempt from liability to any future general scheme of property taxation, or that the income of a zamindari shall not be subjected with other incomes to any future general taxation of incomes.

Held, accordingly, that notwithstanding the Permanent Settlement Regulation I of 1793, income derived by a zamindar from land in permanently-settled estates, other than "agricultural income", is liable to assessment to income-tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, sections 6 and 12.

Judgment of the majority of the Full Bench of the High Court, Calcutta, in Emperor v. Probhat Chandra Barua, (1927) I.L.R. 54 Cal. 863 (F.B.), affirmed.

Appeal No. 90 of 1928 from two judgments and orders of the High Court, Calcutta, dated the 14th March, 1927 and 11th May, 1927, respectively, which were passed on a reference under section 66 of the Income-tax Act, 1922, by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Assam.

The main question on the present appeal was whether income from land, which was permanently settled under the Bengal Regulations of 1793, was liable to be assessed to income-tax subject only to the exemptions specifically conferred by the Income-tax Act, 1922.

The material facts of the case, and the relevant provisions of the Income-tax Act and the Bengal Regulations, are fully set out in their Lordships' judgment and in the report of the case in the Court below, *Emperor v. Probhat Chandra Barua*¹.

We submit that the learned Judges who were in the majority in the present case overlooked the distinction between a tax on income from land as such, and a tax on an individual landowner—in common with the rest of the community—on something else which might cause him to pay a further amount out of the income from his land.

According to the decision of Lord Lyndhurst in *Freeman v. Fairlie*⁶, which the Board approved in *Gunga Gobind Mundul v. The Collector of the Twenty-four Pergunnas*⁷ the ownership of the soil was not in the Crown. That being so, the jama could only be a tax and not a rent or a rent charge: Field's Bengal Regulations. To impose a further tax on the profits from the zamindari is virtually to increase the jama, which the Regulations distinctly declared, was "fixed for ever".

The Income-tax Act, 1922, does not either expressly or even impliedly repeal the guarantee contained in the Regulations. Unless and until the Government expressly repeals or repudiates the Permanent Settlement Regulations, they should be held binding on the Government. The Income-tax Act contains no provision repealing or altering the effect of the Permanent Settlement Regulations or charging any of the items in question: Mayor, etc., of London v. Netherlands Steamboat Company,⁸ *Associated Newspapers, Ltd. v. City of London Corporation*⁹ and *Pole-Carew v. Craddock*¹⁰. The judgment of Lord Sumner in *Attorney-General v. Exeter Corporation*¹¹ is distinguishable.

There is abundant authority for the proposition that a tax cannot be imposed without clear and express words for that purpose. "When the Legislature assume to impose a tax on the subject, they must do so in clear and distinct terms; if the matter remains in doubt, the subject is entitled to judgment", per Lord Esher, M.R., in *Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Angus*². There should be no further burden on income, where the Government demands had been commuted under a Permanent Settlement: *The Chief Commissioner of Income-tax v. Zamindar of Singampatti*².

Dunne, K.C., (with Wallach) for respondent.—We submit that the appellant's contention that the Government was not the owner of the soil and therefore the jama was a tax and not a rent or rent charge, is untenable. The Board's judgment in *Secretary of State for India v. Srinivasachariar*¹³, shows that the Ruling Power in India had some proprietary interest in the land. It was thus competent to impose a rent charge. In the Permanent Settlement Regulation the term "proprietor of the soil" meant only the person who was to pay the Government revenue. There was no grant of the estate to the zamindars, and the Permanent Settlement gave them no rights in the soil. The Government merely assigned to the zamindars their (the Government's) right to collect from the ryot the land revenue. The observations of Lord Lyndhurst in *Freeman v. Fairlie*⁶, that "I think it is to be collected from those Regulations (i.e., the Permanent Settlement Regulation of 1793) that the proprietors of land in India had an absolute ownership and dominion of the soil" are pure obiter dicta, and are not well founded. The appellant contends that *Freeman v. Fairlie*⁶ was approved by the Board in *Gunga Gobind Mundul v. The Collector of the Twenty-four Pergunnas*⁷, but the decision in the latter case does not touch the point at all. *Freeman v. Fairlie*⁶ was only cited there to show that individual ownership of lands could exist in private persons, if there is a grant from the Government.

"Such a settlement (i.e., for revenue) does not establish proprietary rights in the land, but is made with Government as to their claim to the khiraj or revenue": *Juggut Mohini Dossee v. Mussumat Sokheemoney Dossee*¹⁴. The words "proprietor of land" in the Regulation have a technical significance: per Sir Barnes Peacock in *The Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani*¹⁵.

[LORD RUSSELL.—The expression “proprietors of the land” in the Regulation is, according to your contention, not inconsistent with the theory that the Government was the proprietor of the soil.]

The zamindars were merely stewards or administrators of the Government’s share in the land: *Raja Lelamund Sing Bahadur v. The Government of Bengal*¹⁵.

The Permanent Settlement was virtually a contract between the Government and the zamindars, a bargain evidenced by documents sanads and kabuliyats: *Secretary of State for India v. Raja Jyoti Prashad Singh*¹⁶. The effect of the settlement was that the zamindars obtained for the first time an entirely new estate, namely, a permanent, heritable and alienable tenure in the land, subject to the payment of a fixed assessment charged upon the estate.

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN.—The appellant is Zamindar of the Permanently Settled Estate of Gouripur, and he appeals to His Majesty in Council in the circumstances herein set forth.

By an assessment note of the Income-tax Officer, of Dhubri, dated the 28th August, 1925, the appellant was assessed under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, to income-tax in respect of income arising from his said estate. On appeal the assessment was confirmed by order of the Assistant Commissioner, dated the 22nd December, 1925.

At the request of the appellant the Commissioner of Income-tax, Assam, acting under section 66 of the said Act, submitted certain questions for the decision of the High Court.

The questions so submitted were three in number, and (as amended in the course of the hearing) they were in the following terms:—

“I. Whether the following sources of income are agricultural and therefore exempted from assessment to income-tax under section 4 (3) (viii) of the Act? [Then follow 10 items which it is unnecessary to set out here.]

“II. Whether income derived from such of the above sources as were not taken into consideration at the time of fixing the Jama at the Permanent Settlement is assessable for income-tax purposes?

“III. Whether, having regard to the terms of the Permanent Settlement Regulation, income derived from land in permanently settled estates, subject to the exemptions provided by the Legislature, is liable to assessment to income-tax?”

In view of a diversity of judicial opinion already existing in regard to the proper answer returnable to the third question, both questions II and III were, by an order of the 21st May, 1926, referred for decision of the Full Bench, the consideration of question I being in the meantime deferred.

The case was argued before the Full Bench consisting of five Judges of the High Court, with the result that Ghose, Buckland and Panton, JJ., took one view and Mukerji and Suhrawardy, JJ., took a different and opposite view.

The majority of the Judges held that questions II and III should both be answered in the affirmative. In the opinion of the minority, question III should be answered in the negative, from which answer it would follow that question II would not arise.

By order, dated the 14th March, 1927, the reference to the Full Bench was disposed of in accordance with the opinion of the majority of the Court.

The remaining question I was decided by the High Court on the 11th May, 1927. The appellant confined his claim for exemption to three items out of the specified ten items, but the High Court held that none of the three items were exempted as agricultural income, and accordingly question I was answered in the negative.

By an order of the High Court, dated the 7th November, 1927, the application of the appellant for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the said judgments or orders of the 21st May, 1926, the 14th March, 1927, and the 11th May, 1927, was granted.

It is in these circumstances that the matter came before this Board.

There can be no doubt as to the importance or difficulty of this case, which, in their Lordships' opinion, depends primarily, if not entirely, upon the consideration of question III. It is sufficient to state that the problem of the correct answer to question III has been now considered before different High Courts in Madras, Patna and Calcutta by thirteen Judges. As their Lordships read the various decisions, it would appear that five of the thirteen Judges would answer question III in the affirmative and eight would answer it in the negative.

The argument for the appellant on question III was presented to their Lordships in great, but not excessive, detail, and covered a wide ground. It may be summarised thus:—

That at the time of the Permanent Settlement in 1793 definite guarantees and assurances were given by the governing authority, and were embodied in the Bengal Regulations of 1793 (hereinafter alluded to as the Regulations) to the effect that the income of the Zamindar from his estate would not, beyond payment thereof of the jama, be further touched or taxed; that the imposition of a tax on the income of a Zamindar derived from his zamindari would be a breach of those guarantees and assurances; that the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, does not, according to its true construction, purport to impose a tax on the income of a Zamindar derived from his zamindari; and that, if such a tax could be said to be imposed under or by virtue of the language used in the Act, nevertheless the language used was not so clear and explicit as to operate as a repeal of the legislative provisions of the Regulations.

Such in outline was the appellant's contention.

Incidentally to this argument the Board was invited to consider, and indeed pronounce upon, the question, mainly historical, of the position of the governing authority immediately before the Permanent Settlement in regard to ownership of the land or of some proprietary interest therein. The attention of their Lordships was called to the various views expressed in such works and documents as Field's "Regulations of the Bengal Code," Phillips's "Land Tenures of Lower Bengal" and Shore's Minutes. Their Lordships were also referred to certain reported decisions of the Courts.

Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that there is here no occasion for any pronouncement by them upon the question of the exact nature of the rights and interests in relation to the land which existed in the governing authority before 1793, but that this appeal falls to be determined upon a consideration of the language of the Regulations and of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

In view of the argument that the Act does not according to its terms purport to impose a tax on the income of a Zamindar derived from his zamindari, their Lordships propose in the first instance to examine the language of the Act, and then, if the Act does according to its terms, actually impose such a tax, to consider if the imposition of the tax is to any, and what extent, inconsistent with the provisions of the Regulations.

The Act of 1922 is a consolidation and amendment Act. Section 1 refers to its title, sphere of operation and commencement. Section 2 is a definition section. The rest of the Act is divided into ten chapters, of which only Chapters I and III seem relevant to the present purpose.

Chapter I is entitled "Charge of Income-tax," and consists of sections 3 and 4. Section 3 is so framed as to charge income-tax at the rate which may from time to time be enacted. The income-tax is stated to be "in respect of all income, profits and gains of the previous year of every individual." Section 4 (1) provides that the Act is to apply to all income, profits or gains as described or comprised in section 6 from whatever source derived, accruing or arising or received in British India or deemed under the provisions of the Act to accrue or arise or to be received in British India. Section 4 (2) affords an instance of profits and gains accruing or arising without British India being deemed to accrue or arise in British India. Section 4 (3) enumerates a list of classes of income to which the Act shall not apply. Income derived from a zamindari is not included in the list, but "agricultural income" is included.

It would appear that the purpose of section 3 is to charge income-tax at the current rate for the time being, and that the purpose of section 4 is (by sub-section 1) to confine the tax to income actually or artificially accruing or arising or received in British India, and (by sub-section 3) to exempt specified classes of income from tax.

Although Chapter I is entitled "Charge of Income-tax," the real charging section would appear to be section 6, which occurs in Chapter III.

Chapter III is entitled "Taxable Income," and is composed of sections 6 to 17 inclusive. Section 6 provides that "save as otherwise provided by this Act, the following heads of income, profits and gains shall be chargeable to income-tax, in the manner hereinafter appearing, namely:—"

- (i) Salaries.
- (ii) Interest on securities.
- (iii) Property.
- (iv) Business.
- (v) Professional earnings.
- (vi) Other sources."

P. C.
 Raja Prokhat
 Chandra
 Barua
 v.
 The King-

 Lord Russell.

Each of the next following six sections deals severally with each of the six heads of income, profits and gains specified in section 6, and states with greater particularity the items in respect of which the tax shall be payable by the assessee under the particular "head," and gives details of allowances and exemptions in regard to the different heads. Section 9 accordingly deals with the head "Property," and a perusal of it makes it clear that the "income, profits and gains" charged under the head "Property," are confined to the annual value of "buildings or lands appurtenant thereto," in other words, to the annual value of what may be conveniently called house property. The income of a Zamindar derived from his zamindari would not be chargeable under that head. If chargeable in the result it would be under the head "Other sources."

Section 12 deals with that head, and requires close attention. Section 12 (1) provides that the tax shall be payable by an assessee under that head—

"In respect of income, profits and gains of every kind and from every source to which this Act applies (if not included under any of the preceding heads)."

These words appear to their Lordships clear and emphatic, and expressly framed so as to make the sixth head mentioned in section 6 describe a true residuary group embracing within it all sources of income, profits and gains provided the Act applies to them, i.e., provided that they accrue or arise or are received in British India or are deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India, as provided by section 4 (1), and are not exempted by virtue of section 4 (3).

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the income derived from a zamindari was never brought into charge at all, because, in section 6, the words "other sources" must mean sources other than those described above, and therefore could not include any source which could properly be described as "property."

Incidentally it may be pointed out that this argument, if successful, could not be confined to the income derived from a zamindari; it would free from liability to income-tax all income derived from land which did not consist of buildings or lands appurtenant thereto, and it would seem to render unnecessary the specific exemption of agricultural income.

P. C.
 Raja Probhat

Their Lordships, however, feel unable to accede to the argument. In section 6 the words "other sources" used in relation to the word "property" would naturally mean sources other than the source which the word "property" connotes in this Act. But if there were any doubt on this score, it would disappear in the light of section 12, the meaning and effect of which have been indicated above.

Upon this part of the case therefore their Lordships are of opinion that the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, by sections 6 and 12, brings into charge for the purposes of income-tax the income derived from a zamindari, and that a Zamindar is assessable in respect of income, profits and gains derived from that source.

Before leaving this part of the case their Lordships deem it right, in view of discussions in the course of the arguments before the Board, to make a further statement as to the liability of the appellant to pay income-tax upon the income derived from his zamindari.

The tax is upon "income, profits and gains." It is not a tax on gross receipts. With this fact in view, each section which deals with one of the first five "heads" specified in section 6 contains, where proper, specific provisions for the necessary deductions and allowances to be made for the purpose of arriving at the taxable balance. Section 12, which deals with the general residuary group, is necessarily framed in general terms and authorises the allowance of any "expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of making or earning such income, profits or gains."

Their Lordships were unable to ascertain upon what footing the appellant had been assessed in respect of the income derived from his zamindari, i.e., whether on the gross income or after some allowance had been made in respect of the jama assessed and paid upon the lands. Their Lordships are of opinion that, in assessing the appellant to income-tax in respect of the income derived from his zamindari, his income, profits and gains from that source should be computed after making proper allowance in respect of the jama assessed and paid.

Their Lordships now proceed to consider the question whether the imposition of income-tax in respect of the income derived from the zamindari is to any and what extent inconsistent with the provisions of the Regulations.

In regard to this part of the case their Lordships desire to make this observation. The Bengal Regulations of 1793 are lengthy and numerous. In the course of the arguments before the Board attempts were made to support the respective arguments by a phrase picked from one Regulation or a passage chosen from another, even though the particular Regulation only purported to deal with some matter incidental to the Permanent Settlement. In the opinion of their Lordships this part of the case falls to be determined primarily upon a consideration of the language of Regulation I of 1793. While bearing in mind the passages in other Regulations to which their attention was drawn, their Lordships feel that the above-mentioned Regulation is the master Regulation for the immediate purpose before the Board, and that its provisions constitute the overriding feature in the present case.

It bears date the 1st May, 1793, but is retrospective and operates as from the 22nd March, 1793. This last-mentioned date was the date of a Proclamation, to certain Articles of which the Regulation gave legislative effect.

In so far as it relates to the case of the appellant, the Regulation may be conveniently summarised.

Articles I and II of the Proclamation (paras. 2 and 3 of the Regulation) contain a notification by the Governor-General in Council to all Zamindars in the province of Bengal that he has been empowered by the Court of Directors for the affairs of the East India Company to declare the jama which has been or may be assessed upon their lands under the Regulation for the decennial settlement of the public revenues of Bengal passed on the 18th September, 1789, fixed for ever.

Article III of the Proclamation (para. 4 of the Regulation) contains a declaration to the Zamindars with whom a settlement had been concluded under the Regulation of the 18th September, 1789, that at the expiration of the term of the settlement no alteration will be made in the assessment which they have engaged to pay, but that they and their heirs and successors will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever.

Article VI of the Proclamation (para. 7 of the Regulation) is of great importance and appears to their Lordships to embody the legislative statements and provisions which are most favourable to the arguments advanced on behalf of the appellant. The first sentence recites as facts well known in Bengal (1) that the public assessment upon the land has never been fixed; (2) that the rulers have from time to time demanded an increase of assessment from the proprietors of land; (3) that for the purpose of obtaining this increase not only have frequent investigations been made to ascertain the actual produce of the estate, but it has been the practice to deprive the proprietors of the management of their lands. The second sentence of Article VI recites that the Court of Directors considers these usages and measures detrimental to the prosperity of the country, and states that the Zamindars with whom a settlement has been or may be concluded, are to consider the orders fixing the amount of the assessment as irrevocable and not liable to alteration. The third sentence runs as follows:—

“The Governor-General in Council trusts that the proprietors of land, sensible of the benefits conferred upon them by the public assessment being fixed for ever, will exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands, under the certainty that they will enjoy exclusively the fruits of their own good management and industry, and that no demand will ever be made upon them, or their heirs or successors, by the present or any future Government, for an augmentation of the public assessment, in consequence of the improvement of their respective estates.”

It is upon this third sentence of Article VI that the appellant mainly relies for his contention that the imposition of income-tax in respect of the income derived by him from his zamindari would be a breach of and inconsistent with the provisions of the Regulations. He alleges that the jama was a tax and not a rent or rent-charge, and that by the Regulations a legislative assurance or guarantee was given that no tax beyond the amount of the fixed jama would be imposed upon the income of the permanently settled estate.

To this contention the respondent makes answer:—(1) that what the Permanent Settlement accomplished was to fix for ever the quantum of the Government's share of the produce of the land; and (2) that upon their true construction the Regulations do not purport to exempt the Zamindar from taxation in respect of the income derived from his zamindari.

Their Lordships, after careful consideration of the Regulations, have arrived at the conclusion that the argument of the appellant cannot succeed.

They are unable to find in the Regulations any statement or assurance that a Zamindar will never be liable to taxation in respect of the income derived from his zamindari, or (to put the matter from another point of view) that a Zamindar will, as to so much of his property as consists of income derived from his zamindari, be exempt from schemes of taxation applicable generally to the incomes of the inhabitants of British India.

The language used in Regulation I, Article VI, does not, in their Lordships' opinion, mean anything other than this:—"You have in the past been liable to have the amount of the jama increased according as the actual produce of the estate increased; to enable the Government to obtain this you have been subjected to frequent investigations to ascertain the actual produce and you have even been deprived of the management of your estates. All this shall cease. You shall have fixity of payment and fixity of tenure. If you improve the revenue of your zamindari you shall enjoy the fruits of your improvements without fear of the Government claiming that because the revenue produced by the estate has increased the payment you make to Government as a condition of holding that estate shall be increased also."

Their Lordships have ventured to paraphrase Article VI, but they think that their paraphrase expresses with sufficient accuracy the true intent and meaning of the Article. In their Lordships' opinion, while the Regulations contain assurances against any claim to an increase of the jama, based on an increase of the zamindari income, they contain no promise that a Zamindar shall in respect of the income which he derives from his zamindari be exempt from liability to any future general scheme of property taxation, or that the income of a zamindari shall not be subjected with other incomes to any future general taxation of incomes.

Their Lordships agree with the views expressed by Ghose, J., in the following passage from his judgment:—

"There was no promise or engagement of any description whatsoever by which the Government of the day surrendered their right to levy a general tax upon incomes of all persons irrespective of the fact whether they are Zamindars with whom the Permanent Settlement was concluded or not."

It follows that in their Lordships' opinion Question II and Question III should both be answered in the affirmative.

Question I was but faintly argued before the Board. As to it their Lordships need only say that they have not been furnished either with materials or reasons which would justify them in suggesting that any of the 10 specified items could properly be described as agricultural income within the definition of agricultural income contained in section 2 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. Their Lordships accordingly agree with the negative answer which has been given to Question I.

Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913), Ss. 168, 227 and 229—Winding-up by Court—Debts due from the Company—Interest on, when payable—Contracts by Company subsequent to winding-up—Validity.

When a Company has been ordered to be wound-up, the interest upon debts payable by the Company ceases to run from the date of the winding-up order, unless the Company is solvent. The Company's solvency is established if, after payment of the principal and interest up to the date of winding-up there are some assets sufficient to meet the liability on account of interest accruing after the commencement of the liquidation.

JUDGMENT.—I have to deal with this claim in the winding-up proceedings. A creditor, Pola Sankariah by name, applied to the liquidator for payment of his debt. He failed to comply with the request and I have now to decide whether the creditor's claim is well founded.

To make the point at issue clear, I must briefly set forth the course taken by these liquidation proceedings. The petition to wind up this Company (The Sabapathi Press Co., Ltd.) was filed on the 8th of May, 1922. Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri dismissed the petition on 30th November, 1922, holding that no valid grounds existed for making an order of compulsory winding up. Against this order an appeal was filed and, on 5th November, 1924, the Appellate Court set it aside and remanded the petition to the Original Side for fresh disposal. The matter then came up before Mr. Justice Beasley and on the 9th of April, 1927, he made an order referring two questions to the Official Referee. With one of those questions we are directly concerned. That related to the debt now claimed as due by the creditor. It was then pleaded that that debt was discharged either by payment or adjustment on 31st of December, 1921. The Official Referee submitted his report, finding inter alia that the debt due to the applicant was not discharged as alleged. Mr. Justice Beasley (as he then was) accepted the Official Referee's findings, found that the Company's affairs were in a very unsatisfactory state and made an order, dated 16th November, 1927, directing the Company to be compulsorily wound up. Mr. Venkata Rao, by dubious methods (this is the effect of the judgment of Mr. Justice Beasley), acquired a dominant position in the Company and by adopting an aggressive and high-handed attitude, used that position to gain dishonest advantage for himself, his relations and friends. A firm known as "K.V.S.R." which, as the learned Judge observed, was Venkata Rao's own firm, was appointed treasurers of the Company and some of the Company's factories were leased to this firm on terms highly detrimental to the Company. This K.V.S.R. firm in their turn sub-leased the factories making a large profit, to a joint family concern of which the present applicant Pola Sankariah was a member. There were two factories, one at Tadpatri and the other at Adoni. The sub-lessees effected certain repairs to these factories and a large sum became payable to them on this head by the Company. The debt became due before December, 1921. It amounted to about Rs. 25,000. This fact is not disputed. Before proceeding further, I may mention that the winding-up order made by Mr. Justice Beasley was confirmed on the 18th of April, 1929.

The question to be decided is, whether the debt due to the creditor was discharged by payment on the 31st of December, 1921. Mr. Venkata Rao, I have said, raised this incidental question and it was decided in favour of the creditor. As the liquidator raises the point again, I shall deal with it fully.

The account books of the Company containing entries of the 31st December, 1921, have been produced. There are some entries to be found which were made apparently after the accounts were closed and the balance was struck on that date. It is among such entries that those relating to the alleged payments find a place. The applicant alleges that these entries were fraudulently interpolated. Mr. Venkata Rao, the Chairman of the Board of Directors, annexes to his affidavit, dated 13th June, 1922, as Ex. B, what he calls an "unaudited balance sheet". It purports to disclose the state of affairs of the Company as at the end of December, 1921. The amounts due to the applicants are shown in that balance sheet under the heading "Liabilities". There are two amounts shown as due in respect of the two concerns, and the total is given as Rs. 25,546-2-1. This then is an admission by Venkata Rao as representing his Company. According to it, the debt due to the applicants was not discharged by payment on 13th June, 1922. From this the inference must follow that the entries showing payment in the books of the Company are spurious and fraudulent. It will be seen from what I have said that their very position, and the manner in which they were made, render them extremely suspicious. Added to this, there is the further fact that Mr. Venkata Rao admitted on 13th June, 1922, that the debt was subsisting. It is, therefore, fairly clear that these entries of payment were made not on the 31st December, 1921, the date they bear, but some time subsequent to 13th June, 1922. There was an "audited balance sheet" prepared in September, 1922, as distinguished from the "unaudited balance sheet" to which I have referred. In this balance sheet the debt due to the creditor is shown as having been discharged. I understand that among the numerous charges made in this winding-up petition, there is a complaint against the accuracy of this balance sheet. With that I am not at present concerned, but the fact that emerges is, that the impeached entries must have been made after 13th June, 1922, the date of Venkata Rao's affidavit, and before 27th September, 1922, the date of the "audited balance sheet". It is also noticeable that in the unaudited balance sheet, the amount shown as cash in the hands of the treasurers is Rs. 33,000 odd, whereas in the audited balance sheet it dwindles down to a little over Rs. 12,000. This is of course consistent with the theory of payments having been made between these two dates. Such payments must necessarily diminish the cash in the hands of the Company's treasurers. So much for the payment alleged on the 31st December, 1921.

The liquidator asks me to deal with another suggestion, namely, that the payments were made on the 31st December of the following year. It is not the account books of the Company that are relied on for this purpose, but the liquidator says that he is perplexed by the entries in the account books of K.V.S.R. & Co., the Company's treasurers. In their books, certain adjustment entries were made on the 31st December, 1922. The applicants are credited with the amounts which the Company owed them, those sums being debited against the Company. In other words, the applicants' position is changed, K.V.S.R. & Co. being substituted as their debtors in the place of the Company itself. The entries refer to, and purport to derive their authority from, the Company's audited balance sheet of September, 1921. How can these entries in the account books of K.V.S.R. & Co. bind the applicants? Before they can be bound, it must be shown that there was an arrangement amounting to a novatio to which they were also parties.

These later entries show that it is not even pretended that actual payments were made to the applicants. K.V.S.R. & Co., instead of holding the monies due to the applicants as the Company's treasurers, continue to hold them in their individual capacity. This, in short, is the effect of these dubious entries. This is the kind of evidence that the liquidator places before me in support of his suggestion that the debt has been discharged. I therefore find that neither on the 31st of December, 1921, nor on the 31st of December, 1922, was the debt due to the creditor discharged by payment or adjustment.

Then there is another question that the liquidator raises. I have already said that the petition for winding up was originally dismissed in 1922. Till the winding-up order was made in 1927 Mr. Venkata Rao continued to act as the Chairman of the Board of Directors. On the 10th of December, 1926, in that capacity, he entered into a settlement of accounts with the creditor in question. It was found that the debt was reduced to Rs. 19,987-3-9. The creditor wants to abide by this settlement, and the question is, is it binding upon the liquidator? The capital of the Company is represented by 500 shares. Mr.

Somayya appears for persons owning 342 shares and Mr. Venugopala Mudaliar for a gentleman holding 9 shares. On behalf of these shareholders I am asked to treat the settlement as binding. Then there are three creditors of this Company, two represented by Mr. Somayya and one by Mr. T. Krishnaswami Aiyangar. On behalf of these creditors also it is stated that the settlement should be treated as binding. In the view that the settlement is beneficial to the Company the liquidator now concurs. My decision, therefore, is that the settlement, dated the 10th of December, 1926, must be taken as binding.

In regard to this debt there is a further question raised. In the case of a winding up by the Court, the winding up dates from the presentation of the petition. (Section 168 of the Indian Companies Act.) In this case, nearly six years elapsed between the presentation of the petition and the winding-up order. I have already said that the petition was presented on the 8th of May, 1922, and the winding-up order was made on the 9th of April, 1927. The question I am asked to decide is, whether interest is to be computed or not subsequent to the winding up. It is not disputed that the debt carries interest. The law on this point is stated thus in Palmer's Company Law, 12th Edn., p. 439:

"When a Company has been ordered to be wound up, the interest upon debts which carry interest ceases to run from the date of the winding-up order, unless the assets are enough to pay all debts in full."

The point was first fully considered in *In re Humber Iron-works and Shipbuilding Co.*¹ The position of the creditors Selwyn, L.J., observes, must be considered under two aspects—first when there is, and next when there is not, a surplus. Where the estate is insolvent, nothing should be allowed for interest, but the opposite rule applies where the estate is solvent, that is, where there is a surplus. In the latter case, in whatever manner the dividends may originally have been made, if it turns out that there is an ultimate surplus, the account must be taken as between the Company and the creditors in the ordinary way; that is, by applying each dividend in the first place to the payment of the interest due at the date of such dividend and the surplus, if any, to the reduction of the principal. The rule that interest is payable notwithstanding the winding up, when there are surplus assets, is also laid down in *In re Duncan & Co.*² This is now treated as settled law. This question was considered in a Lahore case and this principle was applied. Shadi Lal, J., after stating the rule in the terms I have just mentioned, proceeds to lay down the test of solvency. The Company's solvency is established if, after payment of the principal and interest up to the date of winding up, there are some assets sufficient to meet the liability on account of interest accruing after the commencement of the liquidation. (*Gansham Das v. The Public Banking and Insurance Co.*³) The same view was taken in another Lahore case, *Devi Ditta Mal v. The Official Liquidator, Amritsar Bank, Ltd.*⁴ In the present case, it is admitted that even after all the creditors are paid in full there will be a substantial balance available for meeting the claims of the contributories. I, therefore, hold that interest has not ceased to run from the date of the winding-up order.

These, I understand, are the only three points in regard to which the liquidator wants my direction in respect of this debt. In the light of my judgment, the parties are directed to bring in a statement showing the amount due to the applicant.

The matter will stand adjourned a week for this purpose.

The applicants' costs, which I fix at Rs. 400, must be paid out of the assets. I do not propose to allow the liquidator his costs, but, as he does not press for them, I need not give my reasons.

I shall now deal with the question of unpaid dividends. During the pendency of the petition for winding up, dividends were declared for 1921-25 (both years inclusive). Mr. Venkata Rao, as a part of the general policy he has been pursuing, preferred such of the shareholders as were his friends and relations and paid them the dividends due and made default in regard to the rest. Some of the shareholders belonging to the latter class now apply that the liquidator should be directed to pay them also the dividends declared. To place all the shareholders on a footing of equality, I must comply with this application. The liquidator, after satisfying himself that the dividends claimed are due, shall make the payments. If he feels any doubt, the matter may be brought up before the Court.

Next as regards Hanumanthappa's claim: the liquidator will examine this and state in one week what his view is.

I shall now proceed to deal with the claim of Messrs. R. D. Lakshmi Das & Co., represented by Mr. T. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, their counsel. They claim Rs. 3,381-13-6 in respect of goods supplied to the Company between the commencement of the winding up, that is, the presentation of the petition and the winding-up order. The effect of a winding-up order under section 227 (2) is to avoid all dispositions of the property of the Company made between these two dates, unless the Court otherwise orders; that is to say, the winding-up order has a retrospective effect. What are avoided under the section are dispositions by the Company of its property. But even payments by the Company after the commencement of the winding up are avoided unless sanctioned by the Court.

Where payments are honestly made and in the ordinary course of business, it is usual for the Court to allow them.

Palmer's Company Law, 12th Ed., page 220.

In regard to dispositions pending petition, the practice of the Court is to allow them if made honestly and in the ordinary course of business.

But what we are here concerned with is neither a disposition of property nor a payment. The Company contracted to purchase goods and actually took delivery of them. Section 227 (2) does not in terms apply to such a transaction; but in *Gosling v. Gaskell*⁵ Lord Herschell seems to assume that once the winding-up order is made, the Company becomes as from the date of the petition incapable of entering into contracts without the sanction of the Court (page 591). In the present case, it is conceded that the goods were purchased by the Company in the ordinary course of trade. I, therefore, confirm the transactions.

As regards the amount, it is admitted that Rs. 50 must go out from the amount claimed. Out of a balance of Rs. 3,331-13-6 I authorise payment of that sum less Rs. 500 with interest at 9 per cent. per annum from the 1st of January, 1927. As regards the sum of Rs. 500 shown against the 15th of December, 1926, it is described as a hand loan paid to Mr. Venkata Rao, who purported to receive it as the Chairman of the Board of Directors. Whether the liquidator is bound to pay this sum or not, I do not wish to decide at present. Granting that the liquidator is not bound to pay this sum from the assets of the Company, it may be open to the creditor to ask that it should be paid over to him from any amount to be found payable by the Company to Mr. Venkata Rao. This point I must reserve for future consideration. The applicant's costs which I fix at Rs. 150 shall come from the assets. The liquidator may pay himself Rs. 50 for his costs. I also direct that Mr. Gopalaswami Mudaliar be paid from the assets the costs of his application, which I fix at Rs. 50.

In pursuance of my judgment, dated 25th August, 1930, a statement has now been brought in, showing that the amount due up to 31st August, 1930, to Pola Sankariah is Rs. 20,369-4-10 including the costs awarded. By consent, this figure is accepted. The principal amount of Rs. 16,781-0-2 shall carry further interest at 6 per cent. per annum till date of payment.

The amount due to Hanumanthappa is by consent declared to be Rs. 2,756-8-6. This amount shall carry interest at 9 per cent. per annum from 28th December, 1926, to the date of payment. The liquidator shall pay Hanumanthappa's costs, which I fix at Rs. 150, from the assets. The liquidator's costs I fix at Rs. 50. This sum he may retain out of the assets.

Receiver—Remuneration fixed on basis of collections—Conversion of old Government of India Bonds into new loan—Right of Receiver to commission—Power of Court to give further direction. •

G. R. Naidu
v.
Savitramma.

The Court appointed joint Receivers to an estate pending the disposal of a suit and fixed their remuneration on the basis of collections made. The estate was possessed of Government of India 1930 Bonds of a certain value which were kept in deposit in the Imperial Bank of India as security for an overdraft. When the Bonds were about to mature, the Master directed the Receivers to convert the same into the new 1933-36 Bonds issued by the Government of India. Thereupon certain of the parties to the suit apprehending that the Receivers would, for the purpose of earning commission, receive money for the old Bonds and re-invest it in the new loan, applied to the Master to authorise the Bank directly to make the conversion. The Master having ordered accordingly,

Held, in appeal, that the Receivers were not entitled to insist on collection and reinvestment of the amount, and that they could not claim commission in respect of the conversion as ordered.

Haigh v. Grattan, (1839) 1 Beav. 201; 48 E.R. 916, relied on.

Held further, that even granting the matter admitted of any doubt on the construction of the order appointing the Receivers, the Court had the power to direct that, under the circumstances of the case, the Receivers were not entitled to commission in respect of the transaction.

V. Radhakrishnaiya for Receivers.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—I do not think I can accede to Mr. Radhakrishnaiya's contention. The short point is, can the Receivers claim commission on the 1930 Bonds which have been directed by the Master to be converted into 6 per cent. 1933-36 Bonds under the Government of India Loan just announced? The estate is possessed of 1930 Bonds of the face value of Rs. 1,10,000. They have never been handled by the Receivers and are in deposit with the Imperial Bank of India, Madras, as security against an overdraft. These Bonds would, in the ordinary course, mature on the 14th of August, 1930, and it has been notified that the subscriptions for the new loan might not only be in cash but also inter alia in 6 per cent. Bonds 1930. The request for conversion should, I understand, be made before the 6th of August. Certain of the parties to the suit apprehending that the Receivers would, for the purpose of earning commission, receive money for the old Bonds and re-invest it in the new loan, applied to the Master to authorise the Bank directly to make the conversion instead of paying cash to the estate. The Master has made an order accordingly.

Two of the three joint Receivers question the correctness of the Master's order, urging that their right to receive commission on the sum of Rs. 1,10,000 should not be affected by the transaction. Mr. Radhakrishnaiya's argument may be put thus. It must be assumed that cash is received for the old Bonds and that the same amount is re-invested in the new loan. The act thus involves, he contends, first a collection and then an investment. Under the order of appointment, the Receivers are entitled to remuneration on collections and it follows (so he contends) that they can claim commission on the amount in question. I cannot accept this contention which involves a double fiction, to import which there is absolutely no warrant.

To adopt the Receivers' argument would be to strain language and no Court would countenance it merely for benefiting the Receivers at the expense of the estate. Then it is stated that the original order directs that all monies shall be collected by Mr. A. K. Ramachandran, one of the joint Receivers. Does this confer on him a right to insist on receiving cash for the Bonds merely to entitle the Receivers to commission? I feel no doubt that the answer must be clearly in the negative. But if authority be needed, there is a direct decision on the point. In *Haigh v. Grattan*¹, although a party offered to bring in the money, the Receiver claimed that he should be allowed to collect the amount and then pay it into Court; and it was urged for him that to prevent him from doing so would be to deprive him of the poundage. Langdale, M.R., overruled the contention, observing that the Receiver had no vested interest entitling him to collect the amount. The facts are parallel and I declare that the Receivers are not entitled to the commission claimed.

v.
Savitramma.

I should further observe that even granting that as a question of construction the matter admits of any doubt, it is open to the Court to give such directions as the justice of the case may require. It is strongly urged that having regard to the fact that the Receivers have already taken by way of commission about Rs. 25,000 it would be inequitable to burden the estate with a further sum of Rs. 5,500 (this is the amount now claimed) when the transaction involves no work and no labour on their part. I have no hesitation even on this ground in holding that they are not entitled to this commission.

There has been some discussion as to in whose names the new Bonds are to be taken. Mr. Venkataramana Rao suggests that they should be taken in the name of the Registrar, in order to avoid any claim being preferred by the Receivers to commission, when the Bonds have to be re-assigned to the party to be declared in the suit as entitled to the Bonds. As I am prepared to give a ruling at once that the Receivers have no such right, I direct that the Bonds may be taken in the name of Mr. A. K. Ramachandran, Joint Receiver, as this appears to me the course most in conformity with the previous orders made in this case.

It is unnecessary in the view I have taken, to decide the effect of the provision in the order, dated the 20th of Decem-

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 421—Reasonable opportunity.

There is no absolute rule of law that before the Court dismisses the appeal under S. 421, there should be a special posting of the appeal some time after the presentation of the papers or that the Court should call for the records of the case, though, as a rule of caution and sound procedure, it may be advisable to do so. The only question under the section is if the appellant or his pleader had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal.

Out of the fine, P.W. 1 was awarded Rs. 30 as compensation. They appealed to the Joint Magistrate of Rajahmundry. The petition of appeal and a copy of the judgment of the Sub-Magistrate were presented to the Joint Magistrate on the 5th August, 1929, when he was on tour, by a pleader on behalf of the petitioners. The Magistrate having heard, as he reports, the pleader in support of the appeal, dismissed it under section 421, Criminal Procedure Code. His judgment is brief. After stating that the judgment of the Sub-Magistrate sets out the evidence fully, it goes on to say that the attack on the complainant took place in daylight in the open and that the defence of alibi was a tissue of falsehood, and winds up with the remark that the appellant's pleader has shown no grounds for interference. For the petitioners it was represented at the time this petition came on for admission that according to the petitioner's pleader who presented the appeal, the Joint Magistrate personally perused the judgment and the grounds of appeal, and asked him whether he conducted the case in the Lower Court, to which he said that he did not conduct it throughout, that then the Magistrate asked him if he had anything to say in support of the appeal, that the pleader then asked for time to argue the case as he had not fully gone through the record, that no time was granted and the appeal was summarily dismissed under section 421. This representation for the petitioners was communicated to the Joint Magistrate, who has sent a report, dated 6th December, 1929, that the appeal was presented to him at the Amalapur Travellers' Bungalow in the morning, that on perusing the judgment of the Lower Court he informed the pleader who presented it that it appeared to fall into the class of appeals which he usually dealt with under section 421, Criminal Procedure Code, that the pleader voluntarily launched into the merits of the appeal rather fully, and was heard for at least half an hour, that no application for further opportunity to argue the case was made to him, that if such application had been made it would have been given, and that finally the Magistrate intimated his intention of dismissing the appeal summarily.

The question before me is whether the procedure adopted by the Joint Magistrate was in the circumstances substantially in accordance with the provisions of section 421, in other words, whether the petitioners or their pleader had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal.

On this point a decision of Mr. Justice Ramesam has been brought to my notice, namely, *Turka Hussain Saheb In re*¹. That decision seems to lay down as a rule of law that a criminal appeal should not be heard at the time of presenting the papers even for the purpose of dismissal under section 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and that there must be a special posting of the appeal after a reasonable time for the purpose of hearing under section 421. It also appears to lay down as a rule that an appeal raising questions of fact ought not to be disposed of under section 421 without the original records being called for

Narasimha-

from the Lower Court. If either of these two requirements was a necessary condition before action under section 421 could be lawfully taken, there would be no further question in this petition, because neither of these was done. The appeal was dismissed on the very day it was presented and it was not posted a week later for the purpose of the hearing. Also the records were not sent for. Without entering into the matter more fully, because in the nature of the conclusion at which I have arrived in this petition it is not necessary to do so, I do not think that the learned Judge intended to do more than indicate that as a rule of caution and sound procedure it is better to post an appeal for being heard even under section 421 and to send for the original papers. So far as the section itself is concerned, neither of those requisites would seem to be laid down by the words. The section says explicitly that "on receiving the petition and copy under section 419 or 420 the Appellate Court shall peruse the same and if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering may dismiss the appeal summarily" and then the proviso says that "an appeal presented under section 419 should not be dismissed unless the appellant or his pleader had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal." In sub-clause (2) it is distinctly said that "before dismissing an appeal under the section the Court may call for the record in the case but shall not be bound to do so." In the face of this express declaration that the Court shall not be bound to send for the papers, I do not think it was intended to be laid down in the decision cited by the petitioners that the Court was bound to send for the papers before taking action under section 421. No distinction is made in the section between appeals relating to facts and appeals raising questions of law. The provision is perfectly general. Similarly as to posting the case to a subsequent date after the presentation for the purpose of being heard under section 421, the words of sub-section (1) seem to me to be plain that, so long as a reasonable opportunity is given to the appellant or his pleader to be heard in support of the appeal, there is no legal requirement as to any postponement of the hearing after the presentation of the appeal. I quite appreciate that in the great majority of cases, when an appeal is presented, neither the appellant nor his pleader may be in a position to straightway argue in support of the appeal, and therefore it may be a wise rule in proceeding under section 421 to give sufficient time to the appellant or his pleader and to inform him that he will be heard on a particular day in support of the appeal with a view to action being taken under section 421. More than that I do not think that the section really requires, nor do I think that Mr. Justice Ramesam intended to lay down.

Narasimhamurti, In re

In this case, the question really is whether the petitioners' pleader had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal, although undoubtedly he was allowed to address some argument to the Joint Magistrate. On the whole, I have come to the conclusion that the pleader had not the required opportunity for the simple reason that he had not got all the records with him and had not fully conducted the case himself. It is not necessary to go into the slight discrepancies as to what happened between the accounts respectively given by the pleader and the Joint Magistrate. One thing, however, is clear, that whatever the pleader said may be, the Joint Magistrate conceived the idea that the occurrence took place in open daylight, whereas in fact it took place after 8 P.M. Such a hearing could not have been well informed on the part of the pleader or anything but casual on the part of the Joint Magistrate. Holding that the petitioners' pleader had not the opportunity given to him to which he was entitled under the section, the dismissal of the appeal will be set aside and the appeal will be sent back to the District Magistrate of East Godavari to be heard by him or by some other competent Magistrate other than the one who disposed of it.

Contract—Doctrine of implied term.

A stipulation not expressed in a written contract should not be implied because the Court thinks that it would be a reasonable thing to imply it. Such an implication can be made only if, on a consideration of the terms of the contract in a reasonable and business manner, the Court is satisfied that it should necessarily have been intended by the parties when the contract was made.

another Company in which they were interested, he was appointed the sole distributing agent for the sale of their products in Madras and Ceylon for a period of ten years. The terms of the agency were defined by another memorandum but there was no undertaking by the Company to supply any products at all to the agent and no products were in fact sent. The action was brought by the Official Assignee representing the estate of K for damages for breach of an implied condition of the contract to supply a reasonable quantity of the products.

Held, no such obligation could be implied, as it would be inconsistent with the liberty reserved to either party to cancel the agency by three months' notice.

Bhashyam Aiyangar, J.—This is an appeal by the Official Assignee and as such the assignee of the estate and effects of one Kancherla Krishna Rao, an insolvent, against an order of Waller, J., dismissing an application made by him in the said insolvency, for an order directing both or either of the two respondents, namely, Frank Johnson Sons & Co., Ltd. and the United Refineries, Burma, Ltd., to pay him damages for breach of agreement. The United Refineries, Burma, Ltd., the 2nd respondent, was an incorporated Company formed in 1920 by the Indo-Burma Oilfields, Ltd. and Yomah Oil Co., Ltd., who were both engaged in the production of crude oil in Burma, for erecting, maintaining and operating a refinery for crude petroleum oil and marketing the products of such refinery, and it had its registered office in Burma. Frank Johnson Sons & Co., Ltd., the 1st respondent, who apparently did business both at Rangoon and Calcutta, had been appointed the sole selling agents in India of the petrol and other products which might be produced by the 2nd respondent. The agreement which we have to consider was in writing and entered into on the 12th of December, 1921, between the present insolvent and the 1st respondent, the latter acting as selling agents of the 2nd respondent. It consisted of two memoranda, by the first of which Kancherla Krishna Rao undertook to purchase debenture stock in the Indo-Burma Oilfields for £20,000, and the 1st respondent, in consideration thereof, appointed him as the sole distributing agent for the sale of the products of the 2nd respondent, in the Presidency of Madras, including its Native States, French Possession and the Colony of Ceylon; for a period of ten years. The second memorandum laid down and defined the terms of this agency and fixed the rights and liabilities of the parties thereto in detail. It is common ground that Kancherla Krishna Rao paid for the debentures undertaken to be purchased by him, but no products of the 2nd respondent were sent to him for sale. It was alleged on behalf of the 2nd respondent and not disputed by the appellant, that, for some reason, the 2nd respondent was unable to produce and did not produce any petrol or other products on any commercial scale. The question now emerges and it is the only one argued before us, whether Kancherla Krishna Rao was, and the appellant, who now represents him, consequently is, entitled to hold both or either of the respondents liable in damages for their omission or failure to supply him with the products for the sale of which he obtained the sole agency.

Now, the primary question of liability undoubtedly turns on the construction of the written agreement above referred to. And that agreement, notwithstanding its formal and detailed nature, does not contain any clause imposing any obligation on either respondent to supply any products to Kancherla Krishna Rao, the agent for sale. If there was no undertaking or promise by the respondents to supply goods or products, it is obvious that no damages could be claimed by Kancherla Krishna Rao, or, the appellant, against the 1st respondent or, much less, the 2nd respondent, for any omission or failure to supply them. The learned Advocate for the appellant has contended that, although the written agreement is silent on the point, a promise for the supply of products should be read into it by implication under the circumstances of this case. When he was pressed to particularise the promise which he wanted to have implied in the agreement, with reference to the quantity of the various products and the time of their supply, he could only say that a reasonable quantity of the products produced by the 2nd respondent should have been supplied to Kancherla Krishna Rao.

Whether an implication should or should not be made in a particular case depends on and must be answered with reference to the special facts and circumstances thereof, but the principles which should guide us in the matter have been laid down in several leading cases. The judgment of the learned Trial Judge refers to the most important of them. The principle is well settled that a stipulation not expressed in a written contract should not be implied merely because the Court thinks that it would be a reasonable thing to imply it. Such an implication can be made only if, on a consideration of the terms of the contract in a reasonable and business manner, the Court is satisfied that it should necessarily have been intended by the parties when the contract was made. See *Hamlyn & Co. v. Wood*¹ and *Lazarus v. Cairn Line of Steamships, Ltd.*² Is it possible in the present case to say that, when the present insolvent and the 1st respondent entered into the contract in question, the former necessarily bargained for, or the latter held out, any definite obligation that the 2nd respondent should refine and send out to the insolvent any products of the kind referred to in the agreement? It seems impossible to answer this question in the affirmative. It will be observed that the implications sought for will be inconsistent and collide with one of the important terms in the agreement, namely, that either party was at liberty to cancel or terminate the agency by merely giving three months' notice in writing. The agreement must, no doubt, have proceeded on the expectation that the 2nd respondent would produce a large quantity of refined products and be in a position to supply Kancherla Krishna Rao with any required quantities thereof for commission sale, but the question is whether there was any and what bargain on these matters. It is not suggested that there was any negotiation or understanding as to the quantities of the products which the 2nd respondent should supply or the present insolvent should receive, or as to any other particulars regarding their consignment. This omission, no less than the absence of any stipulation in the formal agreement on such an important point, clearly cuts at the root of the implication urged on behalf of the appellant.

Going to the authorities, it may at once be mentioned that *Ogdens, Ltd. v. Nelson*³ cited by the learned Advocate for the appellant does not really help us. The facts of that case were essentially different and, although there is a reference to the principle of implication in the judgment of Collins, M.R., in the Court of Appeal, the decision really turns on the construc-

The other material cases are *Turner v. Goldsmith*⁴ and *Rhodes v. Forwood*⁵. It was argued for the appellant that the facts of the present case more nearly resemble those in *Turner v. Goldsmith*⁴, which the Trial Judge has distinguished in his judgment, than *Rhodes v. Forwood*⁵, which has been followed by him, but we are not prepared to accept this argument. It seems to us that the present case is entirely on all fours with *Rhodes v. Forwood*⁵. Here, as there, the contract was one of sole agency; the agency was confined to a specified area; the agent was to sell for commission, the contract was for a fixed period determinable earlier by either party on notice and there was no express term obliging the principal to send any goods to the agent for sale in his area. The House of Lords held under these circumstances that no implied contract binding the principal to supply the agent with goods could be discovered. In the other case, *Turner v. Goldsmith*⁴, the facts are materially different. In the first place the relationship between the principal and the agent appears to have there approximated more to that of an employer and a servant than a manufacturer and a local commission agent for sale. Compare the observations of Phillimore, J., in *Northey v. Trevillion*⁶. Secondly, although the contract in that case resembles that in *Rhodes v. Forwood*⁵ and the present case in being for a fixed term of years, there is this essential difference that, whereas in the latter the parties provided for the termination of the agency by notice even within the prescribed period, there was no such provision in the former and the contract was terminable by notice only as from the expiry of the period. Thirdly, the principal in *Turner v. Goldsmith*⁴ employed the agent for sale not merely of the goods manufactured by him but of those which he could have procured by purchase or otherwise for sale. It appears to us, therefore, that the present case is dissimilar to *Turner v. Goldsmith*⁴ and falls within the scope of the decision in *Rhodes v. Forwood*⁵.

It was pressed on behalf of the appellant that the purchase of the debentures of the Indo-Burma Oilfields, Ltd., for £20,000 which is recited in the agreement in question as consideration for the appointment of the present insolvent as agent makes an essential difference, but we think it has no bearing as to whether or not a stipulation to supply goods should be implied. Whether a stipulation should or should not be implied is a question relating to the construction of the agreement and does not depend on the nature of its consideration.

It must be held in the result that the order appealed against is right. The appeal is dismissed with costs (one set).

Customary right—Reasonable exercise—Power of Court to limit extent—Part of communal land assigned by Government as house sites—Remaining portion not proved to be insufficient—Restriction of user—Finding as to land being communal—Interference in Second Appeal—Entry in Settlement Register—Evidentiary value.

The plaintiffs who represented a body of villagers claimed a certain plot of land as communal land used for herding cattle and as a thrashing floor. It appeared that the land was originally described at the Settlement as Mandai poramboke, but the Government had subsequently transferred it to the category of Natham poramboke. The suit plot, which was about a fifth in extent of the entire item of communal land, had been allotted by the Government as house sites and granted to certain residents of the village. It was not proved that the remaining area was not sufficient having regard to the needs of the community.

Held, that the plaintiffs' customary right was not an absolute one and the Court could, considering the altered circumstances, restrict the user to the remaining portion of the land.

Semle: In such a case not only may the extent of the land be abridged, but if there be other land more or less equally suitable, the Court may for proper reasons substitute that land for the original property.

Rule regarding reasonable exercise of customary right stated and applied.

Whether the communal character of the land has been proved is a mixed question of fact and law and if it appears that the Lower Court did not apply correct principles the High Court can interfere with its finding.

The description of certain property in the Settlement Register as Mandai (cattle-stand) poramboke is only some and not conclusive evidence that the land has been set apart for communal purposes.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises an important question regarding customary rights. The plaintiffs are inhabitants of a village known as Melagaram in the district of Tinnevely. They have filed the suit under O. 1, R. 8, Schedule I, Civil Procedure Code, as representing the whole body of the villagers. They claim the suit land of the extent of 1 acre and 95 cents to be communal land and allege that it has been, so far as living memory goes, used for certain communal purposes. In the plaint, the purposes are thus set out:

1. for herding cattle,
2. for grazing of cattle,
3. as a cart track,
4. as a thrashing floor,
5. as a burial ground for Brahmini children, and
6. as a seat of the guardian deity.

The plaintiffs strongly rely upon the fact that at the Settlement of 1875 and again at the Re-settlement of 1911, the land was classed as Mandai (cattle-stand) poramboke. In 1918, the land was transferred by the Government from the category of Mandai poramboke to Natham poramboke. The 1st defendant is the Secretary of State. The defendants 2 to 8 are persons belonging to the Potter community, who have built huts on sites granted to them by the Government out of the suit land. The District Munsif has held that the customary right has been proved in regard to three out of the six uses referred to in the plaint, namely, (1) for herding cattle, (2) as a thrashing floor, and (3) as a seat of the guardian deity. I may remark that the other uses alleged by the plaintiffs do not require serious notice. The Subordinate Judge seems to find (though his finding is not express) that the communal nature of the land has not been proved. In any event, he appears to think that at the most, the only use by the community that can be said to have been made out is that of a cattle stand. This he infers from the fact that the land was described only as Mandai poramboke and no other purpose was mentioned in the Settlement Registers. First, as regards the stone image, I am not prepared to hold that it is an object of public worship. The image is an exposed one and is within the land granted to defendants 2 to 8. They have no objection to the plaintiffs removing the image from the land.

Then remain two purposes of those mentioned, namely, (1) for herding cattle, and (2) as a thrashing floor. The Subordinate Judge is disposed to discredit the plaintiffs' version, as their conduct is inconsistent with their case. Several persons belonging to their party had themselves applied for grants of house sites out of the plot in question. The first application was made so far back as 1908. Again in 1918, subsequent to the classification of the land as Natham poramboke, several requests were made by them for grant of sites. The Subordinate Judge argues that this can hardly be the conduct of persons conscious of the right now put forward. He has accordingly dismissed the suit.

Mr. Sitarama Rao for the plaintiffs attacks the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court. He first relies upon *Kuar Sen v. Mamman*¹ for the position that the English rule does not apply, namely, that in the case of a customary right, it must be shown to have been immemorial. I agree; for, it may now be taken as settled, that no fixed period of enjoyment is laid down by law as necessary to establish such a right. (See *Palaniandi Thevan v. Puthirankonda Nadan*², which follows the Allaha-bad case.) Mr. Sitarama Rao next distinguishes *Collector of Godavari District v. Pedda Rangiah*³ and *Taluk Board, Dindigul v. Venkataramier*⁴ on the ground that those cases related to Natham poramboke, whereas the plot with which we are concerned is Mandai poramboke. As regards Natham poramboke, Benson and Bhashyam Aiyangar, JJ., observe thus in the first mentioned case:

"They throw rubbish on it, graze their cattle on it, use it as a latrine, and the like, and they are rarely interfered with. But it is always understood that this use is permissive on the part of Government, and that Government has the right at any time to appropriate it for any special public purpose or grant it to an individual for building purposes."

In the second case, Mr. Justice Ayling remarks that where the land is Natham, the enjoyment is patently of a permissive kind and cannot give rise to any customary right. Mr. Sitarاما Rao's contention is this. When the Government describes a particular plot of land as Natham poramboke, it declares in terms that it is building site, that, in such a case, any different mode of enjoyment, however long, may be presumed to be permissive in its origin and that the Government may, at its pleasure, resume, as it were, such land and dispose of it as it likes; but, argues the learned counsel, the very description of the land in the present case as Mandai poramboke involves a recognition on Government's part that it is a cattle stand, and the cases cited, therefore, do not apply. There is force in this contention, but, as the learned counsel himself admits, the description in the Settlement Register is only some, and not conclusive evidence, that the land has been set apart for that purpose. Whether the communal character of the land has been proved is a mixed question of fact and law, and if I thought that the Lower Court did not apply correct principles, I would interfere with its finding; but I consider it unnecessary to pursue this, having regard to my view on the next point, with which I shall proceed to deal.

That point arises thus. The suit plot is Survey No. 71 and measures 1 acre, 95 cents. The extent granted to the potters is 41 cents, or, roughly a fifth of the total land. There is thus a balance of more than an acre and a half available for being used as cattle stand or thrashing floor, as the case may be. It is not pretended that this area is insufficient, having regard to the needs of the community. Moreover, there is another plot in the village, Survey No. 76, measuring 2 acres, 77 cents. Regarding this the Collector observes, that it is just a few yards from the suit plot, that it is fit for being used as cattle stand and thrashing ground and that the potters' houses need not therefore be removed from the site in question. Is the plaintiffs' customary right then an absolute one, in the sense that it has to remain intact and inviolate through all time, irrespective of changed conditions or circumstances? The answer is, in my opinion, decidedly in the negative. Is a right, say of free pasturage, acquired at some remote era by a village, once thickly inhabited, to continue undiminished or unaffected, even after it has become a dwindling hamlet? Supposing its right extended at one time to 10 acres, must it remain undiminished through all time, even though the village has declined? It is stated in Halsbury:

"The nature of the right enjoyed, and also the extent of the land over which it is exercised, are capable of reasonable modification and extension"—Vol. X, p. 236.

A very clear exposition of the doctrine is contained in the judgment of Farwell, J., in *Mercer v. Denne*⁵ (affirmed by the Court of Appeal in *Mercer v. Denne*⁶). In that case, certain fishermen claimed a right to spread their nets and dry them on the beach ground of the defendant, a private owner. On behalf of the latter, it was argued that the plaintiffs may dry their nets only on the condition of fishing for such fish and at such times and with such nets as the fishermen in the reign of Richard I used to do. Farwell, J., observes that if this contention is sound, "All improvements and progress are debarred." Its effect, the learned Judge remarks, "is to discard the kernel for the shell, and might result in making an arrangement that was in its inception reasonable, because of public benefit, become actually injurious to public interests."

A custom derives its validity from its being very reasonable in its inception. By the expression "that it is reasonable" is meant, that it is for the benefit of the Commonwealth. Can, then, a customary right, reasonableness being of its very essence, be so exercised as to be injurious to public interests? Care must be taken not to confuse reasonableness, an essential element of a valid customary right, with reasonable exercise of that right. The word "reasonable" in one case refers to the origin of the right; in the other, to the present exercise of it. The distinction is brought out very clearly in the judgment of Tindal, C.J., in *Tyson v. Smith*⁷ cited by Farwell, J.:

"It is obvious that this is not an argument against the custom being reasonable in its original commencement . . . it is an objection only as to the mode of exercising the right so claimed. . . ."

5. (1904) 2 Ch. 534.

6. (1905) 2 Ch. 538.

7. (1838) 48 R.R. 539: 112 E.R. 1265.

That the contention that the right is absolute and inviolable is unsound, appears again from the observations of Lord St. Leonards in *Dyce v. Hay*⁸ also relied on by Farwell, J.:

"There is no rule in the law of Scotland which prevents modern inventions and new operations from being governed by old and settled legal principles.....The law of this country, as well as the law of Scotland, frequently moulds its practical operation without doing any violence to its original principles."

Ramaswami
Aiyar
v.
The Secretary of State for India.

Thus, the fishermen were allowed to exercise their rights according to the varying exigencies of the fishing industry and the requirements of improved nets. (Page 549.) This decision also shows that the right or obligation, as the case may be, is not one-sided but reciprocal. The right of the fishermen to reasonably vary the mode of enjoyment is recognised, as I have said, in the portion of the judgment to which I have referred. But what of the right of the land owner? In that case, it was urged that there was a gradual accretion by the receding of the sea and that the fishermen were not entitled to exercise their rights over the added extent. This contention was rejected. But, then, it was hypothetically argued, supposing there were now a mile or more of such accretion, would the plaintiffs be still entitled? Farwell, J., answers, in the first place, it would hardly be possible to get evidence of actual user over more than the fringe near the sea and in that case "the extent of the custom could be limited by such user"; but granting that such user could in fact be shown, even then "the landowner's right of free enjoyment would only be limited by a reasonable exercise of customary rights and it would probably be held unreasonable to insist on drying nets over a large tract of land." Of the cases referred to at the Bar, no case, I think, contains a clearer statement than this, of the principle in regard to the reasonable exercise of a customary right.

This is consistent with the view taken by the Judicial Committee, of the law in this country, regarding customary rights. In *Bholanath Nundi v. Midnapore Zamindari Co.*⁹ the plaintiffs, resident cultivators of village belonging to the defendants, the proprietors of an Indigo concern, claimed a right of free pasturage over the waste lands of the villages. Their Lordships, while upholding the claim, guard themselves by saying that it will be advisable to insert a provision, that the decree should not prevent the defendants from improving their property provided sufficient pasturage were left. That this is not a casual remark, is shown not only by the judgment but also by the point having been expressly raised in the argument of the respondents' counsel. This case is referred to and followed in *Syed Ali v. Sarjan Ali*¹⁰. The learned Judges observe:

"But if there is nothing to show that the land in suit differs in any respect from other waste and if there is plenty of pasturage left in the village, the plaintiffs are not entitled to relief."

They also refer (as a circumstance to be considered) to the possibility of the cattle having to be driven to an unreasonable distance in order to obtain pasture. The principle recognised in these cases was again applied in *Kartar Singh v. Ralla*¹¹, where the judgment shows that the Court may have regard in deciding what is reasonable exercise to changing and fluctuating circumstances.

I may lastly point out, that the limitation is not only quantitative, that is, not only may the extent of the land affected be abridged; but, if there be other land more or less equally suitable, the Courts may, for proper reasons, substitute that land for the original property. The cases to which I have referred deal with private owners of lands, but the reasoning applies even with greater force to a case like the present, where the Government as the party affected, is under a clear duty to have regard to public interests under changing conditions.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs (two sets).

On appeal from the order of the Honourable Mr. Justice Beasley, dated 25th January, 1929, filing a complaint under section 476, Code of Criminal Procedure, charging the appellant under section 193, Indian Penal Code, in respect of the evidence given by him at the trial of C.S. No. 250 of 1926 in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court.

Appellant not represented.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Curgenven, J.—This is an appeal against an order of Beasley, J., as he then was, under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, making a complaint under section 195 (i) (b) of the same Code against one M. Numberumal Chetty in respect of an offence punishable under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. The appellant is not represented before us. We have perused his memorandum of appeal and the order of the learned Judge and we have heard the learned advocate for the respondent, who has raised the preliminary point that no appeal will lie in the circumstances of this case.

Curgenven, J.

The complaint was filed not at the instance of any applicant but suo motu by the learned Judge, and the learned advocate's argument is that in such circumstances the terms of section 476-B do not provide for an appeal. As an authority for this position he refers us to *Mt. Satto v. Emperor*¹, which is a decision by a single Judge of the Lahore High Court based upon what he terms the genesis of the present section. He appears to read the words in that section "such a complaint" as meaning not merely a complaint under section 476 or 476-A but, further, a complaint on an application by some person; but we are of opinion that any analogy which is to be drawn between the terms of the present sections and those of the corresponding sections of the old Code is likely to be misleading inasmuch as the procedure has been radically altered and whereas, under the old Code, a Court could give sanction to prosecute and that sanction to prosecute on application could be made the subject of an appeal, all that has now been swept away and it is for the Court itself in all cases, whether of its own accord or on application, to make a complaint. We cannot see accordingly why the appealability of an order should depend upon the special circumstances of an application having been made; nor do we think that the terms of the section itself support that view.

Coming to the merits, the learned Judge has delivered a very detailed and comprehensive order containing all the materials from which the offence in his view may be established; and the only criticism that we can discover in the grounds of appeal is that under the terms of section 476 there should be not only a finding to the effect that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made but also a complaint. In the present case it appears that the proceedings are embodied in a single document. But we think that that document itself serves the dual purpose of a finding and also of a complaint, because a mere perusal of it will show that the learned Judge has set forth the particulars in respect of which he considers that false evidence was given and the nature of the proofs that that evidence is in fact false and, since these particulars serve the double purpose of a finding and a complaint, we see no reason why they should not be held sufficiently to comply with the requirements of the section, although in that form.

We have been referred to one case, *Bhuban Chandra Pradhan v. Emperor*², where the objection was raised that the learned Judge who made the complaint had not recorded a finding that it was expedient in the interests of justice to complain, and this was disposed of with the observation that

“the order showed clearly the learned Judge’s opinion that the appellant had given false evidence before him. That order by itself, and in view of the proceedings started under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, carries the implication that the learned Judge must have felt that the ends of justice required that an inquiry before a Magistrate should take place.”

We think that the same implication is clearly to be gathered from the order which the learned Judge has passed in this case; and we can find no grounds for interfering with it in appeal. The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Three persons were jointly tried by a Sub-divisional Magistrate for being associates in a course of criminal conduct under S. 110 (a), (d), (e) and (f) of the Criminal Procedure Code, since S. 117 (5) of the same Code clearly gave the Magistrate, if he thought it just, the power to deal with all the accused in the same enquiry.

Held, that there was no error or irregularity in the Magistrate dealing with them together, provided the evidence of reputation admitted against them was not against each accused separately but against all together.

Petition under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Session, South Arcot Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 3 of 1930, preferred against the order of the Court of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Chidambaram in Mis. Case No. 17 of 1929.

P. Viswanatha Aiyar for petitioner.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—It is urged that the joint trial of the petitioner with two other persons who did not appeal to the Sessions Judge and have not applied to this Court was illegal.

The allegation against them was that all the three of them were together associates in a course of criminal conduct such as to bring them under clauses (a), (d), (e) and (f) of section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In such cases section 117 (5) clearly gave the Magistrate, if he thought it just, the power to deal with all the accused in the same enquiry. But it is said that joint enquiries under section 117 are not legal where part of the enquiry is under clause (f) of section 110 and for this the decision in *In re Kutti Goundan*¹ which itself cites *Hari Telang v. Queen-Empress*² is relied upon. There is a sentence in the latter decision which is incorporated into the former to the effect that there can be no connection between them (the accused) in regard to their characters so as to make them dangerous persons. But this was not the ground of decision in those cases which were decided on the ground that where several accused are being jointly tried under section 110 evidence of misdeeds against each of them singly should not be admitted against the others as this will naturally prejudice these others. And Walsh, J., makes this clear in *Empress v. Angmu Singh*³. More than this I think none of the cases cited before me go and I find myself unable to agree to the general proposition that where proceedings are taken under section 110 (f) several persons should not be dealt with together. The evidence of reputation admitted against them should, of course, not be against each accused separately but against them all together.

In this case as the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge shows, the evidence was clear that the petitioner along with the other two men were pursuing a course of extortion and terrorising for which they were all equally responsible and on which they had jointly earned the evil reputation to which several respectable witnesses spoke.

I can see no error or irregularity in the trial. The petition is dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), Ss. 222 (2) and 403—Scope of—Separate charges for separate amounts misappropriated—Validity.

S. 222 (2) permits the consolidation of a number of separate charges as a matter of convenience. The only effect of the section is that where the accused has once been tried for the misappropriation of a gross sum between specified dates, he cannot be put on trial in a subsequent case for the other amounts alleged to have been misappropriated during the same period. But no such consolidation is compulsory and there is nothing to prevent separate charges being framed in respect of separate amounts misappropriated.

No. 82 of 1929.

P. V. Rajamannar for P. Venkataramana Rao for petitioner.

N. S. Mani for The Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—The only point argued in this petition is that the petitioner against whom charges under sections 408 and 477-A have been framed in C.C. No. 82 of 1929 now pending against him cannot be tried or convicted for those offences because the petitioner was in a previous case filed by the same complainant, namely C.C. No. 84 of 1928, tried and convicted for criminal breach of trust in respect of sums collected within the same period as that covered by the alleged offences in this case.

The facts are as follows: The petitioner was a clerk under the complainant who is a trader in paddy and rice. The duty of the accused was to sell rice, collect the price from his customers and pay the amounts collected to the complainant and keep correct accounts of all receipts. In C.C. No. 84 of 1928 the petitioner was charged with having received sums of money on two days, namely Rs. 60 on 10th August, 1928; and two sums of Rs. 16-12-0 and Rs. 54-4-9 on 24th September, 1928 and misappropriated the same without properly bringing them into account. For this he was tried and convicted in that case. The present complaint which was subsequently filed and which is pending was in respect of three amounts, namely Rs. 20 collected on 14th August, 1928, Rs. 21 collected on 5th March, 1928 and Rs. 5 collected on 22nd March, 1928. Although the charge was framed originally in respect of the three above amounts, it appears that the charge in respect of the amounts collected on 5th March, 1928 and 22nd March, 1928, have been struck out, so that the only charge now pending against the petitioner is that in respect of money collected on 14th August, 1928.

The petitioner's argument is that he having been previously convicted for criminal breach of trust in respect of amounts collected on the 10th August and 24th September, 1928, cannot now be tried again for criminal breach of trust in respect of an amount collected on an intermediate date, namely, the 14th August, 1928. This argument is sought to be based on section 403 read with section 222 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Reliance was also placed upon a decision of this Court reported in *In re Appadurai Aiyar*¹ and a decision of the Calcutta High Court in *Sidh Nath Awasthi v. The Emperor*². The Public Prosecutor on the contrary relies upon the case in *Nagendra Nath Bose v. Emperor*³, following the decision in *Emperor v. Kashinath Bagaji Sali*⁴. If the decision of this Court in *In re Appadurai Aiyar*¹ is applicable I am bound by it. But it seems to me that it is not applicable to the facts of this case. From the report it seems that in that case there was a previous trial of the same accused for misappropriation of a gross sum between two dates. The accused was thereafter charged for misappropriation of another gross amount not included in the first amount but misappropriated on dates within the same period. In those circumstances the Court held that the intention of the legislature in enacting section 222 of the Criminal Procedure Code is that where there is to be a trial for misappropriation of a gross sum there should be only one trial for all such offences committed within the period covered by the defalcation. The charge in the previous case in such circumstances should be taken to include all the items misappropriated by the accused during that period, and therefore the accused cannot be put on trial in a subsequent case for other amounts alleged to have been misappropriated during the same period. That decision has no bearing to this case because the former case against this petitioner was not for misappropriation of a gross sum misappropriated within two dates but was for misappropriation of specific sums of money received on specific dates. Where that is the case section 222 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code does not come into play at all. All that the section in my opinion says is that instead of charging the accused under separate counts for defalcation of each particular amount separately received and misappropriated which is the general rule laid down in section 234, an exception is made, necessitated by convenience, that all the defalcations within a year may be joined together and the total amount of defalcation and the dates within which the defalcation took place need alone be mentioned in the charge and a charge so framed is to be deemed to be a charge for one offence within the meaning of section 234. This does not mean that, if that is more convenient, separate counts should not be charged for separate amounts misappropriated on different dates. In other words, section 222 (2) is an enabling provision which permits what otherwise would be a large number of separate charges to be joined together for the purpose of convenience. Nowhere is it prescribed that separate charges in respect of separate amounts misappropriated shall not be resorted to and that if an accused has misappropriated several sums within a year they all should be added together and made into one gross sum and tried as one charge. All that the decision in *In re Appadurai Aiyar*¹ means is that where a trial of misappropriation of a gross sum within an interval of time has already taken place, the prosecution cannot be heard to say that certain items of misappropriation were left out from the gross sum first charged or to bring fresh cases on those omitted amounts. As the learned Judges say, in such a case the charge in the previous case should be taken to include all the items misappropriated by him in the course of the same transaction during that period. As that decision has no application to this case I need not further consider it.

The decision in *Sidh Nath Awasthi v. The Emperor*² is really against the petitioner's contention. There the prosecution knowing well what was the gross sum in respect of which an accused had committed criminal breach of trust elected to proceed on three separate items and got the accused convicted. Then they picked up three other items and got the accused tried a second time and convicted. The Court says that though section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, may not strictly apply in terms to a case like this, still there is abundant authority for the view that a second trial in circumstances such as this ought not to have been allowed to be held, by which I understand that the High Court would, in an appropriate case, stop the trial if it was shown to be oppressive or an abuse of the process of the Court. But so far as the legality of the conviction was concerned, the Court held that there was nothing illegal in it and contented itself with reducing the sentence. This decision does not support the argument of the petitioner that the trial is illegal. It only says that in an appropriate case this Court has power to stop the trial as oppressive and an abuse of the process of the Court. The decision in *Emperor v. Kashi-nath Bagaji Sali*⁴ is a direct authority against the petitioner. There the accused was tried for the offence of criminal breach of trust as a public servant in respect of Rs. 12 and odd and was acquitted. He was again tried for the same offence in respect of another sum of Rs. 19 misappropriated during the same period as that to which the Rs. 12 related and was convicted. The Sessions Judge acquitted the accused on the ground that his previous acquittal was a bar to the second trial. The High Court of Bombay reversed the order of acquittal holding that the previous acquittal did not operate as a bar to the accused's conviction at the second trial. This was followed by the two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the decision reported in *Nagendra Nath Bose v. Emperor*³. On the authorities there is no ground for the petitioner's contention that having regard to the form of the charge in the former case the charge now pending against him cannot be heard.

Nothing has been urged at the hearing to show that this is a fit case in which the trial should be stopped to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court under section 561-A. The complaint stated that the complainant did not, when he brought the former case, know that the accused had misappropriated the sums now charged. I have not been shown that this is untrue. I, therefore, see no reason to interfere and dismiss this petition.

(i) Wrongful seizure of moveable property is not a continuing wrong within the meaning of S. 23 of the Limitation Act.

(ii) Art. 29 applies to all cases of attachment before judgment where specific property is wrongfully seized and limitation begins to run from the date of seizure and not from the date when the seizure is declared wrongful by the Court. It is not permissible, having regard to the plain provisions of the Article, to read into the third column anything that would make the starting point a different one.

(vi) Art. 29 would apply both to cases of seizure under orders passed by a Court without jurisdiction and to cases of seizure under orders passed by a Court having jurisdiction but on insufficient grounds. JUDGMENTS. Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—Defendants are the appellants. This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff firm against the defendant firm claiming a sum of Rs. 10,000 as damages which the plaintiffs alleged they sustained by reason of the defendants having wrongfully attached before judgment the properties in the defendant firm.

The plaintiffs and the defendants were merchants who were carrying on business in partnership. The plaintiffs were carrying on business at Bellary and the defendants were carrying on business at Gadag. It is alleged that the plaintiffs filed a suit in the Bellary District Court for winding up the business and for taking accounts. The defendants brought a suit against the plaintiffs and two other firms in the Court of the 1st Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar for a breach of contract claiming Rs. three lakhs twelve thousand odd. The defendants filed an affidavit on the 30th of March, 1920, and applied for attachment before judgment of certain properties of the plaintiffs in Bellary and obtained a conditional order. The Subordinate Judge after hearing the parties confirmed the attachment before judgment on the 21st of April, 1920, and ordered the plaintiffs to give security on failure of which the attachment was to continue. It is alleged in the plaint that both in getting this order and in carrying out the attachment the defendants were guilty of various acts of misconduct. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court of Bombay against the order of the Subordinate Judge and the High Court reversed the order of the Subordinate Judge holding that the defendants did not establish any proper grounds for the attachment before judgment. The judgment of the Bombay High Court is reported in *Sennaji Kapur Chand v. Pannaji Devichand*¹.

The defendants filed a written statement stating that they acted bona fide. They denied that in carrying out the attachment they acted in any illegal manner as alleged in the plaint. They denied that the plaintiffs were entitled to any damages and stated that the suit was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs did not prove the various acts of misconduct alleged in the plaint, but he was of opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled to damages on the ground that the attachment was not obtained bona fide. He observed:

"In the result I find that the attachment made from the 10th to 12th April, 1920, was malicious in the sense that it was sought not under an apprehension that the plaintiffs were closing the shop to defeat the debt due to the defendants but in order that it may be easy for the defendants to realise their moneys in case they obtained a decree."

As regards damages, he awarded Rs. 3,000 damages and directed the parties to pay and receive proportionate costs. As regards limitation, the point was considered by the District Judge before the suit was transferred to the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge on the authority of *Manavikraman v. Avisilan Koya*² was of opinion that, where the moveables of the defendants were attached before judgment, the seizure cannot be regarded as wrongful and that Art. 29 did not apply. The District Judge applied Art. 49 and as the date of the seizure was the 9th of April, 1920, i.e., within three years before the suit he held that the suit was in time. The Subordinate Judge said that that ruling concluded the matter but he also added that as it was necessary for the plaintiffs to prove that the prior proceedings terminated in their favour, limitation began to run from that date, that the attachment was a continuing wrong and that S. 23 of the Limitation Act would apply. Hence the appeal.

In appeal, it is contended that the suit is barred by limitation and that the Judge was wrong in holding on the facts that the attachment before judgment was obtained maliciously and without reasonable cause and that in any event the damages are excessive.

As regards limitation, I am of opinion that the suit is barred by limitation. The order of the Subordinate Judge of Dharwar was on the 31st of March, 1920, and the attachment is said to have been on the 10th and the 11th of April, 1920. The suit was filed on the 26th of October, 1921. The suit was one for damages for obtaining a wrongful attachment of the properties of the plaintiffs.

Art. 29 of the Limitation Act runs as follows:—

"For compensation for wrongful seizure of moveable property under legal process—one year—the date of the seizure."

Sas'ri, J.

It is contended by the appellants that this case falls within Art. 29, that the suit is for compensation for wrongful seizure of moveable property under legal process, that the period is one year commencing from the date of the seizure, that according to the allegations in the plaint, the seizure was wrongful from the date when the property was seized, that the fact that it was held to be wrongful by the High Court of Bombay on the 14th of September, 1921, does not convert a proper seizure into an improper seizure and that consequently the date of the order of the High Court of Bombay has nothing to do with limitation. It is also argued that seizure which is wrongful is not a continuing wrong within Art. 23 of the Limitation Act.

For the respondents it is argued that there is a difference between cases where the property of the defendant is attached and cases where the property of third parties is attached, that Art. 29 only applies to cases where the property of third parties is attached, and that if the property of the defendant is attached the proper article would be Art. 36, which provides for compensation for any malfeasance, misfeasance or non-feasance independent of contract and not specially provided for by the Limitation Act and a period of two years is prescribed, the period commencing from the date when the malfeasance, misfeasance or non-feasance takes place. or Art. 49, which provides for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining movable property where three years is the period of limitation beginning from the time when the property is wrongfully taken or injured or when the detainer's possession becomes unlawful. It is also argued that wrongful attachment is a continuing wrong until the property is released from attachment in which case the suit was not barred by limitation as it is admittedly within one year of the release order of the High Court setting aside the attachment. It is also contended that as in actions for malicious attachment under legal process the termination of the proceedings is necessary, limitation begins to run only from the termination of the proceedings or the period when the proceedings were going on should be excluded in computing the one year.

The difficulty of applying either of the Arts. 36 or 49 is that before these articles can be attracted, it has to be shown that the specific Art. 29 which applies to suits for compensation for wrongful seizure of movable property under legal process is not applicable. I do not think it can be held that wrongful seizure of moveable property is a continuing wrong. No doubt the party is deprived of the possession and use of the property during the period it is taken out of his possession, but it seems to me that that does not make it a continuing wrong within the meaning of section 23.

No authority has been cited for holding that in such actions limitation does not begin to run until the plaintiff obtains a restoration of the property. I do not think the wrongfulness or otherwise of the seizure depends upon the adjudication of the Court on an objection taken by the person whose property is attached. If, unless certain facts are alleged and proved, the attachment is an invasion, the wrongful nature of the attachment does not depend upon the adjudication of the Court on the objection. It is not rightful when the Court makes an order on allegations which are subsequently found to be unproved and become wrongful only when the Court on investigation of the facts holds that the plaintiff had no justification in attaching the properties. It is wrongful ab initio.

As regards the argument that there is no cause of action until the attachment has been declared to be wrongful and that the plaintiff must allege and prove the termination of the proceedings in his favour, the effect of upholding this contention would be to read into Art. 29 words that are not there. The period of limitation runs from the date of the seizure and not from the date when the seizure is declared wrongful. It should be noted that in other articles where termination of proceedings is necessary to give the plaintiff a cause of action, the Limitation Act specially provides for that contingency. For example, in Art. 19 which refers to compensation for false imprisonment, the period of limitation begins to run from the date when the imprisonment ends. In Art. 23 which refers to compensation for malicious prosecution, the period of limitation runs from the date when the plaintiff is acquitted or the prosecution is otherwise terminated. In Art. 42 which refers to compensation for injury caused by an injunction wrongfully obtained, the period of limitation is three years commencing from the time when the injunction ceases. The legislature has however in dealing with compensation for wrongful seizure of moveable property under legal process fixed the period as one year from the date of seizure. I may also point out that Art. 28 which refers to compensation for illegal, irregular or excessive distress gives one year from the date of the distress. Having regard to this marked distinction I do not think I would be justified in reading into Art. 29 words which are not there.

And even assuming for purposes of argument that it is necessary in case of compensation for wrongful attachment to allege and prove that the attachment proceedings have been terminated in favour of the plaintiff, it is difficult to see how the period during which the proceedings regarding the attachment are alleged to be pending can be excluded. Under section 9 when once time has begun to run, no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it and none of the sections in Part III of the Limitation Act relating to computation of period of limitation have any application to cases like the present. I find it difficult to see why any distinction should be drawn between cases where the property of the defendant is attached and cases where the property of third parties is attached. Both the cases fall under Art. 29. There is wrongful seizure of movable property under legal process and the seizure is no less wrongful because it is the property of the defendant. The distinction to my mind is purely artificial. The hardship is the same.

Turning to the authorities, there are no doubt some cases which draw this distinction, but there are other decisions where Art. 29 has been applied to cases where the defendant's property has been distrained or attached.

In *Hughes v. The Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Howrah*⁸ the suit was for the recovery of damages on account of a fine imposed by the Municipality of Howrah and the detention of an omnibus. The fine was set aside by the High Court and the detention pronounced to be wrongful. The question was as to when the cause of action arose and as to the period of limitation, the Calcutta Municipal Act giving a period of three months. Sir Richard Couch, C.J., observed:

"The cause of action was the seizure of the omnibus, which took place on the 5th of July. Either that seizure was a lawful one by virtue of proceedings to recover the fine which had been legally imposed by the Municipal Commissioner, acting as a Magistrate, or it was a seizure without any justification, in which case there would be a cause of action. The Judge of the Small Cause Court is mistaken in supposing that the cause of action arose upon the order of the High Court being made It is a mistake to suppose, as I observe is often done, that where a proceeding is illegal and may be a cause of action, the cause of action does not arise until the proceeding has been set aside by the Court. There may be cases in which before an action can be brought it is necessary to have the proceedings set aside but where there is an entire want of jurisdiction, where the alleged wrong-doer is not acting judicially and would have no protection from his judicial capacity, it is not necessary to wait until his illegal and unfounded proceedings are set aside. In this case, if the plaintiff had any cause of action, it accrued upon the seizure of the omnibus, and he was bound to bring his suit within three months from the time of the seizure. He could not, under the circumstances, treat the continued detention of the omnibus as fresh causes of action from day to day."

In *Jaggivan Jawherdas v. Gulam Jilani Chaudhri*⁴ it was held that a suit to recover money wrongfully taken under a decree is governed by Art. 29 of the Limitation Act of 1877 and that the same article applies to cases where compensation for the loss of interest on the money is claimed. This was a case where the property of the defendant was attached.

In *Surajmal v. Manekchand*⁵ the suit was for damages for wrongful attachment and the question was which article was applicable. The property attached was the property of the plaintiff and not the property of a third person. It does not appear from the facts stated in the judgment that there was any actual seizure of the property. There seems to have been only a prohibitory order. Batty, J., in considering the article applicable observed:

"I do not think the present suit can be described without strain of words as one for specific movable property or for compensation for wrongfully taking or detaining the same. Nor can it be said that the rubies in suit were injured. The injury if any was done to the plaintiff by affecting his power of dealing with them. I therefore think Art. 36 would govern the case, unless there be any other Article which could apply. Article 29 does not appear to do so, for it implies actual seizure under legal process. The only other Article besides 36 that can be cited as appropriate is Art. 42, which relates to suits for compensation for injury caused by an injunction wrongfully obtained. *Nandkumar Shaha v. Gaur Shankar*⁶ has been cited in this connection; but that case dealt with an injunction under section 92 of Act VIII of 1859 which corresponds with section 492 of the present Code rather than with sections 484, 485, 486 and 268 under which the attachment now in question purports to have been made."

In *Murugesu Mudaliar v. Jattaram Davy*⁷ certain properties in the hands of a third person were attached on the 12th of June, 1895. The plaintiff filed a claim which was disallowed. Thereupon he filed a regular suit to establish his right which was decreed in his favour. He then filed a suit in 1899 for recovering damages. The defendants, among other pleas, contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The plaintiff contended that the period of limitation should be calculated from the time when his rights were finally declared by the High Court, or at any rate, that the time occupied in the proceedings connected with the Small Cause Court should be deducted under section 14 of the Limitation Act. It was held by Sir

Arnold White, C.J. and Subramania Aiyar, J., that the suit was barred and that the plaintiff was not entitled to have the time spent in prosecuting the previous suit deducted from the period of limitation. The learned Judges observed:

"In our judgment the plaintiff's cause of action accrued on the 12th June, 1895. The present suit was instituted on the 26th April, 1899. Unless, therefore, by virtue of the earlier proceedings taken by the plaintiff he can claim the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act, the question whether the period of limitation is the one year's period prescribed by Art. 29 or the three years' period prescribed by Art. 49 is immaterial."

After holding that the period under section 14 cannot be excluded, the learned Judges observed:

"But it has been argued on behalf of the plaintiff that a distinction must be drawn between a claim for compensation for wrongful seizure of moveable property where the compensation sought is merely the value of the goods seized, in which case it is argued that Art. 49 applies, and a claim for compensation by way of damages which are consequential on the wrongful seizure and are independent of any question of compensation for the value of the goods, in which case it has been argued the period of limitation is one year under Art. 29. There is no reason in principle for this distinction and, in our judgment, the legislature never intended that any such distinction should be drawn. Art. 29 is quite general in its terms and we think it was intended to apply to all cases where the alleged wrongful seizure was made under legal process. The case of *Manavikrman v. Avisilan Koya*² may be distinguished on the ground that, in that case, the wrong complained of was the institution of a suit without reasonable grounds followed by an attachment of the goods of the defendant in the suit; whereas in the present case the goods belonged to a person who was not a party to the suit in which the attachment was made."

In *Narasimha Rao v. Gangaraju*³ it was held by Sir Arnold White, C.J. and Pinhey, J., that Art. 29 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act applied to suits for damages for wrongful attachment. This was a case where the goods of a third person were attached. He preferred a claim which was dismissed but he succeeded in a suit under section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code. The attachment was on the 10th of December, 1899. The suit was finally decided in plaintiff's favour on the 7th of February, 1903, and the suit for damages was instituted in 1903. Sir Arnold White, C.J., was of opinion that Art. 29 applied and he followed the decision in Murugesu Mudaliar v. Jattaram Davy.⁷ The learned Chief Justice observed:

"The Lower Courts have dealt with the case on the footing that the attached property was moveable property and I deal with the case on the same footing. I am of opinion that the appropriate article is Art. 29, since this is the only article which refers specifically to wrongful seizure under legal process. This was the view taken by this Court in Murugesu Mudaliar v. Jattaram Davy. I do not think this article should be construed as limited to claims for consequential damages and as not applicable where the plaintiff seeks only to recover the value of property seized, or the sale-proceeds, if the property has been sold. This is obviously not the sense in which the word is used in Arts. 30 and 31, and I do not see why it should be construed in this restricted sense in Art. 29. If Art. 29 applies, the law is express and the time is one year from the date of the seizure. No doubt section 283 of the Code makes provision for a special procedure whereby a claimant to property which has been seized in execution may establish his right, but I fail to see how the provisions of this section can have the effect of postponing the time when limitation begins to run, or suspending the time which has begun to run, when the Limitation Act makes express provision in the matter. Further I can see no ground for holding that time does not run so long as the property remains in custodia legis. The damage to the plaintiff is the seizure of his property. True, he may eventually succeed in showing the property is his and in the meantime the property is safe, but he is none the less damaged by being deprived of the enjoyment of his own property."

Sankaran Nair, J., was of opinion that so long as the property remained in the custody of the Court the plaintiff cannot be said to have lost it and is therefore not entitled to any compensation for its loss, and that Art. 29 does not apply. He was of opinion that Art. 62 or Art. 120 applied. With this difference of opinion the matter came before Pinhey, J., who was of opinion that Art. 29 applied to the case. The learned Judge observed:

"If the seizure was not wrongful there was nothing wrongful in the payment. It is conceded that the seizure was wrongful. This is not a continuing wrong. Later manifestations of the original damage done and consequent upon the injury originally sustained do not give rise to a new cause of action. The cause of action therefore was the original seizure and time began to run from that date. The article of Schedule II of the Limitation Act that governs the case would appear to be either Art. 29 or Art. 49."

After referring to the view of the learned Chief Justice that the distinction between Art. 29 and Art. 49 is that the former article applies to a case of wrongful seizure made under legal process, whereas the latter applies when the wrongful seizure is made by a private person, the learned Judge observed:

"There is much to be said in support of this view, but it seems to me unnecessary, now, to decide which of the two articles applies, for the suit is admittedly barred whichever article is applied, if the wrongful seizure is taken as the starting point for limitation, and no allowance is made for the time spent in litigating the title under section 283, Code of Civil Procedure."

This case seems to me to be authority for two propositions.

(1) That the starting point for limitation in case of wrongful seizure of goods under legal process is the wrongful seizure and not when the plaintiff obtains a declaration of his rights as to the property seized; and

(2) That the time spent in the previous litigation cannot be excluded in computing the period of limitation.

Having regard to the reasoning of the learned Chief Justice and Pinhey, J., nothing turns on the fact that the property attached in the present case was the property of a third person and not the property of the plaintiff.

*Madras Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. v. Shalimar Works, Ltd.*⁹ was a case where the property of the plaintiff was attached. The suit was for damages. It was held that a suit for damages for wrongful seizure under legal process was governed by Art. 29 of the Limitation Act.

In this case, the plaintiff was a Company carrying on business in Calcutta and certain repairs to a steamer owned by the Company were carried out by the defendants. The defendants filed a suit for the recovery of the money due to them, and the ship was attached on the 4th of June, 1910. The suit was dismissed for want of jurisdiction and the ship was released from attachment on the 31st of January, 1912. The suit for damages for the wrongful attachment of the steamer was filed on the 4th of June, 1912. Then the question arose as to whether the suit was barred by limitation. Jenkins, C.J., and Stephen, J., held that the suit was barred. As regards limitation, the learned Chief Justice after holding that the attachment cannot be said to be a nullity owing to want of jurisdiction to try the suit observed:

"It has been further contended that as this was a trespass to goods, Art. 36 should be applied; but Art. 29 is specific and fits the case, and it is a rule of construction of long application that a general article does not govern, where there is a particular article which covers the case. Nor do I think can Art. 49 be treated as governing this case rather than Art. 29. It was the seizure, if wrongful, that was the cause of action and the plaintiff cannot treat the suit as one for trespass apart from the seizure for the purpose of evading Art. 29. The conclusion then to which I come is, that this suit as framed is based on malice or its equivalent, that in the absence of proof of malice or its equivalent the suit if treated as one for trespass will not lie in the circumstances of this case; and that if such a suit did lie it would fall under Art. 29 and would be barred."

In *Yellammal v. Ayyappa Naick*¹⁰ it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that in order to attract the provisions of Art. 29 there should be actual seizure and that neither attachment of a debt nor voluntary payment of it into Court would constitute seizure of movable property under legal process within the meaning of Art. 29 of the Limitation Act.

In *Pandiri Veeranna v. Mandavilli Subba Rao*¹¹ movables already attached and seized at the instance of A were further attached by the issue of a prohibitory order at the instance of the defendant. A suit for damages was filed against the defendant who further attached the properties and it was held that a suit for damages for compensation for such attachment was governed by Art. 29 or 36 of the Limitation Act and not by Arts. 42, 49 or 120. In dealing with the second attachment which was admittedly not by seizure, Sadasiva Aiyar, J., referred to *Yellammal v. Ayyappa Naick*¹⁰, and his view seems to be that if there was actual seizure Art. 29 would apply. He was also of opinion that if there was actual seizure there was no continuing wrong.

In *Ram Narain v. Umrao Singh*¹² it was held that Art. 29 was the article to be applied to a suit for damages on account of an unlawful attachment before judgment of a shop belonging to the plaintiff, and that the attachment was not a continuing wrong within the meaning of section 23 of the Limitation Act.

I may in this connection refer to *Sarat Kamini Dasi v. Nagendra Nath Pal*¹³ where the question arose whether Art. 109 could be applied to cases where a mortgage sale which was held on the 6th of May, 1913, was not confirmed till the 28th of January, 1914, owing to an infructuous application to set it aside and a suit was filed on the 16th of September, 1916, by the auction purchaser to recover sums realised by the defendant as rents from the tenants of the land. It was held that under Art. 109 limitation began to run from the date of the receipt of the rents and that the action was barred. In dealing with Art. 109, Mukerji, J., observed:

"A careful study of the third column of the schedule reveals an outstanding fact which cannot be ignored, namely, that the starting point of limitation does not always synchronise with the cause of action; in many cases it does, but in others it dates from some specified events which again are either anterior or posterior to the accrual of the cause of action."

The learned Judge after referring to all the authorities and to the argument as regards suspension or extension of time observed:

"In applying the principle of limitation, the Indian Courts are not permitted to travel beyond the articles and the exceptions and provisos embodied in the Act itself; and that apart from the provisions of the Act itself there is no principle which can legitimately be invoked to add to or supplement its provisions."

The argument that there is a difference between cases where the property attached belongs to the defendant and cases where the property attached belongs to a third party is based upon the decisions in Manavikraman v. Avisilan Koya,² *Arjun v. Abdul*¹⁴, *Manga v. Changa Mal*¹⁵ and *Sokkalingam Chetti v. Krishnaswami Aiyar*¹⁶.

I can find no principle on which a difference should be made whether the attachment was of the defendant's property or the property of a third person. And Mr. Sambasiva Rao for the respondents is unable to point to any ground on which such a distinction can be based.

In *Manavikraman v. Avisilan Koya*² the suit was in respect of timber attached before judgment in November, 1888. The suit was dismissed in October, 1889 and an appeal by the plaintiff was dismissed in July, 1890. The defendant in that suit filed a suit in September, 1892, against the plaintiff who obtained the attachment for damages occasioned by the attachment before judgment. The case was one where the property was claimed by two persons and for the purpose of preserving the property, the property was attached by the Court. But that makes no difference in principle. The learned Judges thought that Art. 36 applied and that the suit was barred by limitation. In dealing with the contention that Art. 29 would apply, the learned Judges observed:

"We agree with them (the Courts below) that Art. 29 does not apply since this is not a case of wrongful seizure, but it is argued for the appellant that the case falls under Art. 36 and that the suit should be regarded as one for misfeasance independent of contract, and that it falls under the description of a tort for which a limitation of two years is generally provided. See the judgment of Farran, J., in Essoo Bhayaji v. The Steamship 'Savitri'.¹⁷"

After discussing the scope of Art. 49 the learned Judges thought that Art. 36 should be applied.

In *Sokkalingam Chetti v. Krishnaswami Aiyar*¹⁶ the learned Judges draw a distinction between cases where the property of a third person is attached and cases where the property of the defendant is attached, and were of opinion that Art. 29 of the Limitation Act was restricted to cases in which the seizure is intrinsically wrongful but did not apply to cases where the foundation of the claim is that the defendant procured the seizure of the plaintiff's property under a perfectly legal process but by misrepresentation to the Court. They think that Art. 36 would apply in cases where the property attached belongs to the defendant and distinguish Murugesu Mudaliar v. Jattaram Davy,⁷ Multan Chand Kanyalal v. Bank of Madras,¹⁸ Narasimha Rao v. Gangaraju,⁸ *Pandiri Veeranna v. Mandavilli Subba Rao*¹¹ and *Ram Narain v. Umrao Singhi*¹² on that ground. As regards the decision in *Madras Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. v. Shalimar Works, Ltd.*⁹ they think that the observations are obiter. With all respect, the case in *Madras Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. v. Shalimar Works, Ltd.*⁹, which is a high authority of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., discusses all aspects of the matter.

In *Arjun v. Abdul*¹⁴ the learned Judges held that a seizure cannot be said to be wrongful except where the writ was without jurisdiction or where the writ was executed against a person who was no party to the decree and where the goods were outside the scope of the suit. The learned Judges observed:

"In the present case the writ was issued by the Court and prima facie it was not a wrongful seizure. The writ was not without jurisdiction as the Court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, nor was the writ executed against a person who was no party to the decree, nor with respect to goods outside the scope of the writ. In these circumstances, we think that Art. 29 is inapplicable to the case. This view is supported by the cases of *Manavikraman v. Avisilan Koya*² and *Sokkalingam Chetty v. Krishnaswami Aiyar*¹⁶."

Then they distinguish the other cases on the ground that the writ was issued against a stranger. As regards the *Madras Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. v. Shalimar Works, Ltd.*⁹ they think that the observations are obiter. This decision, with all respect, gives no reason why there should be this distinction drawn; it simply purports to follow *Manavikraman v. Avisilan Koya*² and *Sokkalingam Chetty v. Krishnaswami Aiyar*¹⁶.

In *Manga v. Changa Mal*¹⁵ it was held that Art. 29 applied to a suit for compensation for wrongful seizure of movable property and that there could be no wrongful seizure because the attachment was made under legal process. The learned Judges thought that Art. 29 would apply only in cases where the seizure was without jurisdiction.

As observed in *Hughes v. The Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Howrah*³ and the other cases I have referred to, a seizure by the plaintiff on insufficient grounds is wrongful ab initio and cannot be said to become wrongful only when the Court adjudicates on the matter. The balance of authority is in favour of the view that Art. 29 would apply both to cases of seizure under orders passed by a Court without jurisdiction and to cases of seizure under orders passed by a Court having jurisdiction but on insufficient grounds. In fact in all the Madras cases referred to where it was held that Art. 29 applied the seizure was by a Court having jurisdiction but on insufficient grounds. And even in *Sokkalingam Chetty v. Krishnaswami Aiyar*¹⁶ this distinction was negatived.

I am of opinion that Art. 29 applies to all cases of attachment before judgment where specific property is seized and the seizure is wrongful either because the Court had no jurisdiction or because the attachment was obtained on insufficient grounds, that it makes no difference whether the property attached belongs to the defendant or to a third party and that we are not at liberty having regard to the plain provisions of the article to read into the third column anything that would make the starting point a different one.

In this view it is unnecessary to consider the question as to whether the Court was right in awarding any damages in this case.

I would allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Reilly, J.

Reilly, J.—On 30th March, 1920, the defendants obtained from the Subordinate Judge of Dharwar a conditional order against the plaintiffs under R. 5 of O. 38, Code of Civil Procedure, for attachment of moveables before judgment. The attachment was made on 9th, 10th and 11th April, 1920. On 21st April, 1920, after hearing the plaintiffs, the Subordinate Judge confirmed the attachment. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court of Bombay, which ordered attachment to be raised as having been obtained by the defendants on insufficient grounds. That order was made on 16th September, 1921. On 26th October, 1921, the plaintiffs instituted this suit for damages on account of the attachment. The question before us is whether the suit is time-barred, having been brought more than a year after the attachment was effected.

Pannaji Dev
Chand
v.

Kapur Chand;
Reilly, J.

The defendants, who are the appellants here, contend before us that the suit is covered by Art. 29 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, which runs "for compensation for wrongful seizure of movable property under legal process". Taking those words in their plain meaning, they certainly cover the case. But it is contended for the plaintiffs that "wrongful" in this article has something narrower than its ordinary meaning—that it refers only to seizures wrongful because made under the order of a Court without jurisdiction in the matter or in respect of the property of a person who is not a party to the proceedings or in excess of the order of the Court. On the face of it that is an arbitrary restriction of the meaning of "wrongful" in the article. It cannot be denied that, if an attachment before judgment is obtained by misrepresentation or on insufficient grounds, it is wrongful in the ordinary sense of the word. If it were not wrongful, no suit for damages in respect of it would lie, and that is not contended.

But it is argued that a restricted and artificial sense has been placed on the word "wrongful" in Art. 29 by judicial interpretation. The cases cited before us to show that are *Manavikraman v. Avisilan Koya*², Sokkalingam Chetti v. Krishna-swami Aiyar,¹⁶ *Arjun v. Abdul*¹⁴ and Manga v. Changa Mal.¹⁵ The last three of these cases rest on the first. The second rests on the first, the third on the first and second, and the fourth on the first and second and third. But unfortunately there appears to have been some misapprehension about the first case. When we examine that case, we find it was not concerned, as was apparently thought by the learned Judges who referred to it in the later cases, with an attachment of a defendant's property obtained by a plaintiff before judgment under R. 5 or R. 6 of O. 38, Code of Civil Procedure, or the corresponding provisions of the previous Code. In that case a janmi in Malabar, the Nilambur Tirumalpad, had sued another janmi, the Manjeri Karanamulpad, and a Mappilla to recover possession of a hill; the Mappilla, claiming to have obtained a lease of the hill from the Karanamulpad, had cut some trees on it; the Tirumulpad, who claimed the trees as his own, obtained an order for the attachment of the logs pending the suit. That attachment was obviously not an attachment of the defendant's property to prevent him from disposing of it or removing it in order to obstruct or delay the plaintiff's remedy in execution if he should get a decree—that is an attachment such as is now made under O. 38, R. 5 or R. 6—but an attachment of part of the property in dispute between the parties for its preservation, such as is now made under O. 39, R. 7. As the learned Judges point out in the opening of their judgment, the Tirumalpad had got the timber attached on the allegation that it was his. He failed in his suit and appeal. Then in the subsequent suit, which came before the High Court in *Manavikraman v. Avisilan Koya*², the Mappilla sued him for damages on account of the attachment of the timber, which had been found to be the property of the Mappilla. The learned Judges eventually found on second appeal that the Mappilla's suit for damages was time-barred; but incidentally they remarked that the attachment was not a case of "wrongful seizure" within the meaning of Art. 29. It is not necessary to discuss now whether that view was correct. But obviously that case, when examined, is no authority for the proposition that an entirely different kind of attachment, an attachment of a defendant's own admitted property, obtained before judgment by misrepresentation or on insufficient grounds, is not a wrongful seizure within the meaning of Art. 29. The three subsequent cases, which I have mentioned and in which it has been assumed that *Manavikraman v. Avisilan Koya*² dealt with the latter kind of attachment, have been built, if I may say so with respect, on a foundation which was not there.

On the other hand there are a number of cases which interpret Art. 29 according to the plain meaning of the words, e.g., Murugesu Mudaliar v. Jattaram Davy,¹ Narasimha Rao v. Gangaraju,⁸ Jagjivan Jawherdas v. Gulam Jilani Chaudhri,⁴ *Ram Narain v. Umrao Singh*¹² and *Madras Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. v. Shalimar Works, Ltd.*⁹ Jagjivan Jawherdas v. Gulam

*Jilani Chaudhri*⁴ was a case of money wrongly taken in execution. In *Murugesa Mudaliar v. Jattaram Davy*⁷ the property of a third party was attached in execution. In *Narasimha Rao v. Gangaraju*⁸ and *Ram Narain v. Umrao Singh*¹² the attachment was before judgment; but it was the property, not of the defendant, but of a third party which was attached. But, whether the attachment complained of is made before judgment or in execution, whether the property attached is that of a defendant or of a third party, if it is wrongful, in my opinion we cannot exclude it from the scope of Art. 29 unless compelled to do so by clear authority. In *Murugesa Mudaliar v. Jattaram Davy*⁷ it was remarked obiter:

"Article 29 is quite general in its terms, and we think it was intended to apply to all cases where the alleged wrongful seizure was made under legal process."

In *Narasimha Rao v. Gangaraju*⁸, where a third party sued to recover the proceeds of his property, which had been wrongfully attached before judgment and sold, though they disagreed on other points, White, C.J., and Sankaran Nair, J., agreed that a suit for damages for wrongful attachment would come within Art. 29. In my opinion we are not compelled by authority to put any artificial or strained meaning on the words of Art. 29 and that article covers the present suit.

But it is contended for the plaintiffs that, even if that article covers the case, the suit was in time because the "date of seizure" mentioned in that article as the time from which the period begins to run does not mean in a case like this the date of the actual seizure but the date when the seizure was declared wrongful by a competent Court. In this case that would be the date of the decision of the High Court of Bombay on appeal, viz., 16th September, 1921. But that construction obviously does great violence to the language used in the article. Why should the legislature have said one thing and have meant another, which could have been so easily expressed? If we compare Art. 29 with Art. 19 or Art. 23, it becomes still more difficult to believe that, when the explicit words "the date of the seizure" were used in Art. 29, they can have been intended to mean anything but the date of the actual seizure. The reason for trying to read another meaning into the words of the article is that in some cases, as in this case, there may be hardship because the plaintiff does not get a decision in his favour that the seizure was wrongful until after a year from the date of the seizure has expired. Such cases are unfortunate; but I do not see how they could justify us in departing from the plain meaning of the words in the article. There was similar hardship in Murugesu Mudaliar v. Jattaram Dary,⁷ apart from the time spent in seeking a wrong remedy, and in *Pandiri Veeranna v. Mandavilli Subba Rao*¹¹ in respect of the attachment at the instance of the 1st defendant in that case; but the learned Judges did not hesitate to apply the article literally on that account. In *Narasimha Rao v. Gangaraju*⁸ all the learned Judges agreed that under Art. 29 time ran from the date of the actual seizure. In my opinion nothing but overwhelming authority or the clearest demonstration that the legislature could not have meant what it said would justify us in reading into the words "the date of the seizure" in Art. 29 the additional words suggested for the plaintiffs. No such justification has been shown. If the period fixed in the article is inconveniently short, that is a matter for the legislature, not for us, to put right.

I agree that the plaintiffs' suit was time-barred under Art. 29 and that, therefore, this appeal should be allowed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Evidence Act (of 1872), S. 32—Statement of deceased person as to cause of his death—Evidentiary value—Need for corroboration.

When a man who is dead has left a statement throwing light upon the cause of his death, that statement is relevant evidence under S. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act, but it is not entitled to any peculiar credit. No doubt if a man gasps out his story soon after the occurrence it may be said that there was no time for him to fabricate or for his friends to suggest falsehood. But if the man is in bed in hospital four days after the event and a month before he dies and makes a statement, that statement carries no more weight than if he made it in the witness box, and rather less, because he has never been cross-examined. Under those circumstances, it is incumbent on the Court before it accepts the statement as true to see how far it is corroborated.

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Madura Division in Case No. 31 of the Calendar for 1929.

V. Rathnam for appellants.

The Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The six appellants have been convicted on the charge that they rioted with the common object of hurting one Rani Sundararajan and also Mookan Servai and Kalimuthu Servai. The 1st and 4th appellants have also been convicted under section 148, and the first under section 326, and all the others under sections 326 and 149.

The learned Judge finds that the statement taken from Rani Sundararajan before he died, Ex. F, is a substantially true account of what occurred.

He says that he came to Madura from Tirupparankundram and found Mookan and Kalimuthu sitting in front of the house of Nagayan, who joined them, and told them that his son's wife had left him, and when his son went to get her back from her parents they called in accused 1, who protested against the son trying to get his wife from a house of which accused 1 was the landlord. The son said there was no need to ask his leave, and was beaten, Nagayan protested and was also beaten. Next morning he was beaten again and went home.

Nagayan was telling this story to the others at about 3-30 p.m., when accused 1 and 4 to 7 came and asked why they were sitting there. Mookan and Sundararajan tried to preserve peace, but accused 1 and Sundararajan began to abuse each other, whereupon accused 5 beat him on the head, and accused 1 stabbed him with a spear, and accused 4 cut him with a chopper. Kalimuthu and Mookan picked up sticks to rescue him, and they turned upon them.

From this account it would seem that the common object was to drive Nagayan out of the town because he supported his son in trying to get back his wife. It is not at all clear why accused 1 should be so violently interested in the quarrel merely because the girl's parents were his tenants; but in any case neither he nor the other accused seem to have any object to beat Sundararajan, Kalimuthu or Mookan until they quarrelled that afternoon. The learned Judge has never addressed his mind to this difficulty. In his 15th paragraph he reiterates his

Arumuga
Thevan,
In re.

Arumuga
Thevan,

belief in Ex. F, and in his 17th he finds the accused guilty of rioting, but he nowhere explains what riot he deduces from the evidence of Ex. F. It is certainly not the riot set forth in the charge, for if the accused were after Nagayan and suddenly came upon Sundararajan, Mookan and Kalimuthu it cannot be said that their common object was ever to hurt these three.

When a man who is dead has left a statement throwing light upon the cause of his death that statement is relevant evidence under section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act, but it is not entitled to any peculiar credit. No doubt if a man gasps out his story soon after the occurrence it may be said that there was no time for him to fabricate or for his friends to suggest falsehood.

"The tongues of dying man enforce attention like deep harmony; where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain; for they breathe truth that breathe their words in pain."

But if, as in this case, the man is in bed in hospital four days after the event, and a month before he dies, and makes a statement, that statement carries no more weight than if he made it in the witness box, and rather less because he has never been cross-examined.

It is, therefore, incumbent upon the Court before it accepts the statement as true to see how far it is corroborated. Mookan so far from corroborating it says it was made by Sundararajan when he was off his head owing to fever. He says that he was sitting in front of his own house that afternoon, and heard an uproar coming from inside the house of Nagayan. He stepped into the road, saw all the accused there and asked them why they had come after beating Nagayan and his son in the morning. Then accused 1 gave him seven slaps, and the others beat him. Kalimuthu ran to his rescue and he too was beaten. Then Sundararajan came up and he was stabbed.

Nagayan says that he was standing outside a shop when the accused attacked him, and he ran inside the house and bolted the door. He looked out later and saw Sundararajan on the ground. He had not seen him before that day. Kalimuthu says that he ran up and saw Mookan being beaten, he tried to rescue him, got beaten himself, and then Sundararajan came and protested and was stabbed.

The learned Judge rather understates the divergency between the story in Ex. F and the story in the depositions, when he says that they differ to some extent. They are quite different. Probably it is a correct inference that Sundararajan and

Thevan,
In re.

Mookan when they lay in hospital never arranged to tell the same story; but that hardly proves that one story out of the two discrepant stories must be true. It merely proves that one of them at least is lying and they never troubled to conceal the fact, and if it is an understatement to say that there is some difference it is an overstatement as it is said in para. 15 that the evidence of Mookan and Kalimuthu largely corroborates Ex. F. The truth is that Ex. F is not corroborated at all, and since it is contradicted by the oral evidence, no conviction can be founded upon it. Nor can the judgment be supported by relying upon the oral evidence, because the trial Court has not believed it to be true. It finds that P.Ws. 8 and 9 changed the facts in order to safeguard themselves, and the other alleged eye-witnesses carry little weight.

Some attempt seems to have been made to convict the accused out of their own mouths. The interrogatories came perilously near to cross-examination and accused 5 was made to admit a complaint of his to the Magistrate which was marked as a prosecution Ex. (L) and used against him as showing that he had never attempted to explain how the prosecution witnesses came by their injuries. The learned Public Prosecutor very properly abstained from any reference to this Exhibit.

To sum up, even the Lower Court finds that there is no evidence for the common object stated in the charge. The only evidence of the common object upon which the conviction for rioting is founded is Ex. F, and that statement is both uncorroborated and contradicted. Therefore the findings under sections 148, 149 cannot possibly stand.

As for that under section 326 no doubt the witnesses agree that accused 1 stabbed Sundararajan, but their stories are too discrepant and improbable. An outstanding difficulty which has never been cleared up is how accused 1 took a prominent part in the quarrel merely because one side happened to have rented his house.

The findings and sentences are cancelled, and appellants are acquitted.

The plaintiffs and their ancestors were proved to have managed their lands and exercised Zemindary rights in them, from a period prior to the annexation of Oudh, in a manner incompatible with the position of theke-dars. It further appeared from a putta entered into by the old proprietor that the holders were to pay revenue direct to the Government.

Held that, under the circumstances, the conclusion was inevitable that the plaintiffs were sub-proprietors and not tenants.

Decision of the Chief Court of Oudh affirmed.

Appeal No. 58 of 1928 from a judgment and decree, dated the 13th December, 1926, of the Chief Court of Oudh, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 1st May, 1925, of the Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareilly.

VISCOUNT DUNEDIN.—The sole question in this case is whether the respondents are sub-proprietors or tenants. Their Lordships have before them the copy of the putta entered into by the old proprietor, and the wording of that putta certainly does more than suggest that they are to be under-proprietors and not tenants. They are not to pay revenue direct to the Rajah but direct to the Government. Then we have the finding of the Court below, which is well summarised in this sentence of the Chief Court judgment:

"There is a mass of evidence, which the learned trial Judge has rightly believed, to the effect that the plaintiff-respondents and their predecessors-in-interest have exercised rights in the manner in which under-proprietors would exercise rights and not in the manner in which tenants would exercise rights. This evidence proves that they have managed the cultivated and uncultivated lands, exercised the rights of escheat, allowed tenants to settle in the village, to plant trees, to sink wells, that they exercised zemindary rights in a manner incompatible with the position assigned to them by the defendant-appellant, that they are Thekadars who could be removed on notice. They have proved from this evidence that they exercised these rights as far back as the memory of living man can go, and it is a reasonable finding that they have exercised these rights from a period prior to the annexation. I therefore find that this grant in addition to being a genuine grant is an effective grant."

If to that be added what would be at any rate the prima facie construction of the putta the result seems to be inevitable, and their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Ss. 19 and 31—"Prescribed"—Meaning of—Suit on hypothecation barred—Subsequent acknowledgment within the special period prescribed by S. 31—Effect.

S. 31 does prescribe a period of limitation for a special class of cases. It applies to cases where the mortgagee's right to sue had become time-barred before the Act was passed as well as to suits not already time-barred but on the point of being so.

An acknowledgment of liability though made after the expiry of the period of limitation for the original cause of action but within the special period of limitation prescribed under S. 31 gives a fresh period from the date of acknowledgment.

The word "prescribed" in S. 19 of the Limitation Act does not exclusively refer to the schedule. It means prescribed by any section or article of the schedule.

In dealing with questions of limitation, the Courts should, as far as possible, place upon the Limitation Act a construction favourable to plaintiffs.

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair, dated 26th April, 1929, in Second Appeal No. 966 of 1925, preferred to the High Court against the decree of the District Court of Nellore in Appeal Suit No. 227 of 1924 (O.S. No. 4 of 1923 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Nellore).

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The defendants in this suit are appellants here. This was a suit based upon a hypothecation bond, dated the 31st March, 1897, executed by the father of defendants 1 and 2 and his coparceners. Admittedly Art. 132 of the Limitation Act is the appropriate article in such cases and that provides for a twelve years' period of limitation. The suit in this case was filed on the 2nd February, 1921 and the 12 years' period of limitation provided by Art. 132 of the Limitation Act expired on the 31st March, 1909, but in order to get over the bar of limitation raised against the plaintiffs by Art. 132, an acknowledgment of liability, dated the 6th May, 1909, is relied on by the plaintiffs. It must be noted that this acknowledgment was after the period of limitation provided by Art. 132 had expired, but the plaintiffs' case is that by virtue of section 31 of the Limitation Act, 1908, which came into force together with section 1 on the 7th August, 1908, the period of limitation was in this case extended by two years from the date of that Act. The appellants' case is that section 31 does not prescribe a period of limitation and that therefore in the case of suits already time-barred when the Act came into force, no acknowledgment made within the two years provided by section 31 can be availed of by the plaintiffs in such suits. If the plaintiffs' contention is correct, the present suit was filed within time because they would have, under section 19 of the Limitation Act, a fresh period of limitation of twelve years from the date of the acknowledgment.

We have to consider the effect of sections 19 and 31 of the Limitation Act, and in doing so it must be stated that it is beyond question that section 31 was enacted on account of a conflict of opinion between the Allahabad High Court and other Courts with regard to what was the period of limitation in suits on simple mortgages. The Allahabad High Court as well as some other High Courts had taken the view that the article applicable was Art. 147 which gave a period of sixty years' limitation and certain other High Courts thought that the period of limitation was only twelve years under Art. 132. All doubts on the matter were finally set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council in Vasudeva Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Pillai,¹ which decided that the period of limitation was 12 years under Art. 132. The result of this decision was that mortgagees in the United Provinces, through a wrong interpretation of the law which had prevailed there, had lost the right of suit and it was in order to prevent this hardship that section 31 was enacted. That section allows mortgagees to bring suits on their mortgages within two years from the date of the passing of the Act or within sixty years from the date when the money became due whichever period expires first. That section applies to cases where the mortgagee's right to sue had become time-barred before the Act was passed. It may also have been intended to apply to suits not already time-barred, but on the point of being so. That section also applies to suits time-barred and dismissed on that account and also to pending suits. It will be seen, therefore, that section 31 was designed to embrace only a special class of cases.

Mr. Varadachari for the defendants-appellants contends that section 31 is purely remedial and gives a period of two years from the passing of the Act for the institution of the special class of suits more as a concession or an act of grace and that section 31 does not prescribe any period of limitation. There is certainly much force in this contention very ably presented to us by Mr. Varadachari. In support of it he has referred to sections 3 and 4 of the Limitation Act. The former says that every suit instituted, appeal preferred and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the first schedule shall be dismissed. That section is perfectly clear and does not give rise to any confusion whatever. Section 4 provides that where the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted, preferred or made on the day that the Court re-opens.

Rolla Subbadu.

His contention is that section 4 does not extend the period of limitation at all, that expires on the last day of the period set out in the schedule, but gives the mortgagee a day or days of grace in which to institute the suit. He contends that section 19 which is the acknowledgment section saving limitation, limits the acknowledgment to the period set out in the schedule. The opening words of the section are:

"Where, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made"

He contends that "the period prescribed for a suit" means the period prescribed in the schedule. Mr. Chenchiah on the other hand for the respondents in his very able argument contends that the words "the period prescribed for a suit" mean not only the period of limitation given in the schedule but such further days as are given to persons by other sections of the Act and that the words in section 19 do not mean "prescribed in the schedule" but in their relation to section 31 mean the further period of two years provided for in section 31. He points out that in section 3 the words used are "every suit instituted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the first schedule," that there is a definite reference to the schedule and that in section 4 the words are, "the period of limitation prescribed for any suit," the words "in the schedule" being omitted. Our attention was also drawn to section 5 where the words are "the period of limitation prescribed therefor" and other sections and pointed reference was made by him to section 19 where the words are "period prescribed for a suit".

This question has been considered by the High Courts of Bombay, Allahabad, Madras and Calcutta. The Allahabad High Court has consistently held the view that section 31 does prescribe the period of limitation and I think that the respondents' contention that the Madras High Court has taken the same view as that held in Allahabad is correct. The Calcutta High Court also, in the one case to which we were referred in that High Court, shared the Allahabad opinion. The Bombay High Court on the other hand has taken a different view.

In *Shevadas Daulatram v. Narayan*² the question arose as to whether a suit for which provision is made under section 31 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1908, if instituted on a Monday, one day after the period of two years from the date of the passing of the Act has expired, could be taken to have been instituted within the period of two years and it was held that section 31 of the Limitation Act did not prescribe a period of limitation and that the suit could not be taken to have been instituted within the period of two years. That Court had not to consider section 19 of the Limitation Act and is on that ground certainly distinguishable from the present case. An earlier case in the Bombay High Court under the old Act, *Bai Hemkore v. Masamalli*³, was a case of an acknowledgment by the defendant. That was a case of a suit to recover money due under a bond. The defendant made an acknowledgment of liability during the time that the Courts were closed for the vacation. When the acknowledgment was made the three years' period of limitation provided in the Act had expired although the plaintiffs' right to institute the suit on the date was subsisting under section 5 of the old Act which is the same as section 4 of the present Act. In Sheo Partab Singh v. Tajammul Hussain,⁴ a case like the one now under appeal, of acknowledgment of liability, it was held that section 4 does not prescribe any special period of limitation for any kind of suit but only lays down that when the prescribed period of limitation expires on a day when the Court is closed then the suit must be instituted on the day when the Court re-opens and whilst in full agreement with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Bai Hemkore v. Masamalli,³ last referred to, they held that that case was distinguishable from the case then before them. On page 70, Mears, C.J., and King, J., state as follows:—

"It has been argued for the respondents that in section 19 the words 'before the expiration of the period prescribed' must be taken as meaning before the expiration of the period prescribed in the schedule. We see no reason for limiting the meaning of the words in the manner suggested. A period for a suit can be prescribed by a section of the Act as well as by an article of the schedule, and in the present case the period of limitation is specially prescribed in section 31 of the Act."

A contrary view to that contended for here by the appellants was also taken by the Allahabad High Court in *Hira Singh v. Musammat Amarti*⁵. There the special period of limitation of two years prescribed by section 31 of the Act of 1908 expired on a Sunday and it was held that a suit for sale to which section 31 applied instituted upon the following Monday was within time. In the opinion of the Bench the time fixed for the institution of suits under section 31 was as much prescribed as if suits instituted under that section found place in the schedule. Another Allahabad case is *Harish Chandra v. Kastola Kumwar*⁶ where it was held that the word "prescribed" in section 19 of the Limitation Act means "prescribed by any law for the time being in force" and not limited to the period prescribed in the first schedule of the Act. Again in *Abdul Ghani v. Chāranji Lal*², a decision of a single Judge, it was held that an acknowledgment of a debt made after the expiration of the three years' period prescribed by Schedule I of the Limitation Act, 1908, for a suit upon a promissory note but made before a suit on the note is actually barred by limitation is a good acknowledgment and there was no reason to limit the sense of the expression "period prescribed" to the period prescribed in the schedule alone. I now turn to the decision of Rankin, C.J., in *Debendra Nath Roy v. Kartic Prasad Das*³. In that case there had been a payment of interest on a simple money bond after the expiration of the three years from the date limited for payment when the Court was closed, but it was held that it could not save limitation under section 20 of the Act if a suit on the bond was not brought on the day the Court re-opened after the vacation. In his judgment Rankin, C.J., dealt with the case in *Bai Hemkore v. Masamalli*⁴ and he found himself in agreement with what was there laid down. The case in *Sheo Partab Singh v. Tajammul Hussain*⁵, which is exactly in point here and which distinguished *Bai Hemkore v. Masamalli*⁶ was also dealt with by him. He states at page 1214 as follows:—

"That section was really intended for a limited class of people to amend the schedule to the Limitation Act and substitute for them a longer period than the period which the schedule really mentions."

This case clearly supports the view of the Allahabad High Court. The view expressed by the Bombay High Court in *Shervdas Daulatram v. Narayan*² was dissented from in Madras in *Murugesu Mudali v. Ramaswami Chettiar*⁹, where it was held that the benefit of section 4 of the Limitation Act could be invoked in computing the period prescribed by section 31 of the Limitation Act. The reasoning in the judgment in *Hira Singh v. Musammam Amarti*⁷ was adopted but that in *Shervdas Daulatram v. Narayan*² was not followed. In *Subbarayan v. Natarajan*¹⁰, a decision of Spencer and Ramesam, JJ., on section 48, Civil Procedure Code, in the opinion of Spencer, J., the word "prescribed" used in section 15 of the Limitation Act means "prescribed by the first schedule to the Act" though the words "in the schedule" do not appear in the section as in sections 3 and 6 of the Act. In *Ummathu v. Pathumma*¹¹, a case not really in point, Ramesam, J., appears to think that *Bai Hemkore v. Masamalli*¹³ was correctly decided but here again that case is distinguishable from this for the reasons already given. In *Mari Narasayya v. Peruri Krishnamurthi*¹² reference is made to *Murugesu Mudaliar v. Ramaswami Chettiar*⁹, where *Shevda Daulatram v. Narayan*² was dissented from but Reilly, J., had not to consider section 31 at all but the effect of section 4 of the Act and he held that the period of limitation mentioned there must be understood not only as prescribed in the schedule but also as qualified by sections 5 and 22.

In our opinion, the correct view of the effect of S. 31 has been taken by the Allahabad High Court in *Hira Singh v. Musamat Amarti*⁵ and *Sheo Partab Singh v. Tajammul Hussain*⁴ by this Court in *Murugesu Mudali v. Ramaswami Chettiar*⁹ and by the Calcutta High Court and therefore section 31 of the Limitation Act does prescribe a period of limitation. Courts in dealing with questions of limitation should, as far as possible, place upon the Limitation Act a construction favourable to plaintiffs and adopting that principle here, this Letters Patent Appeal must fail and be dismissed with costs.

S. 112 requires that the order should set forth "the information received". An order which gives no indication on which the accused were believed to be threats of the peace is clearly defective and liable to be set aside.

Failure of justice may be inferred from the fact that the score of a defective charge was taken at an early permitted, would have afforded the accused an opportunity to charge successfully.

Petition under sections 435 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court judgment of the Sessions Court of Madura in C No. 49 of 1929 preferred against the order of the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul in Mis. Case No. 1.

A. S. Mannadi Nair for V. L. Ethiraj and daram for petitioners.

The Court made the following :

ORDER.—This is a petition to revise an order under section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code made by the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul requiring the petitioners to furnish security for keeping the peace for one year. The order was on appeal confirmed by the learned Sessions Judge, Madura.

Two objections are taken to the order complained of: (1) that the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul had no jurisdiction to make it, and (2) that the preliminary order under which the proceedings were initiated was defective in that it did not contain the substance of the information on which the order was made.

To understand the first objection the facts are as follows: The petitioners and the place where the apprehension of the peace was apprehended are within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Usilampatti. The order was made against the petitioners and others under section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1928, made by the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul. The latter Magistrate, on the 1st of December, 1928, made the preliminary order under which the proceedings were initiated upon the petitioners and others complained of. The District Magistrate then transferred the case to the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul. The latter Magistrate then made another preliminary order under which the proceedings were initiated making formal changes in the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate but substantially in the same terms as the first order. The petitioners showed cause, and objections being that the order under which the proceedings were initiated was not definite enough as it did not contain

Kalia
Goundan,
In re.

The Magistrate brushed this aside as a technical objection and stated that in his opinion the order does give particulars of the dispute and the reasons for apprehending a breach of the peace, and he added that the further details appeared as the prosecution unfolded its case. To return to the objection as to the jurisdiction, it is argued that the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul had no jurisdiction to proceed with the enquiry against the petitioners because neither were the petitioners living within the jurisdiction of that Magistrate nor was the place where breach of the peace was apprehended within his jurisdiction. It is contended that according to section 107 Magistrates other than a Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate are not only incompetent to initiate proceedings against persons residing beyond their jurisdiction in respect of breach of the peace beyond such jurisdiction, but they are also incompetent to hear cases under section 107 transferred to them by the District Magistrate where the persons and the places affected are not in their jurisdiction. For this contention no direct authority was forthcoming. But the decision in *Konda Reddy v. King-Emperor*¹ was referred to. That case is not on all fours with this. There the Magistrate before whom the proceedings under section 107 were initiated had not passed the preliminary order when the District Magistrate transferred the case to another Magistrate, and it was held that there having been not even an initiation or commencement of proceedings under section 107 before the Magistrate competent according to the terms of that section, the order of transfer did not confer jurisdiction on the Magistrate to whom it was transferred and that therefore the proceedings before him were incompetent. That case did not decide, because the facts were not so, that where a Magistrate having jurisdiction according to section 107 has made an order under section 112, the District Magistrate is not empowered to transfer the case so initiated to another Magistrate competent according to his grade or class to try this class of cases, although not qualified by the requirements of section 107 as regards territorial jurisdiction. On that limited proposition there appears to be no decision of this Court. But the point is covered by an authority, namely, *Surjya Kanta Roy Chowdhry v. Emperor*² which was referred to in *Konda Reddy v. King-Emperor*¹ with approbation. In the Calcutta case the precise point arose and it was decided in 1904 "that the intention of the legislature was to limit the jurisdiction in regard to the institution of proceedings to a Chief Presidency or District Magistrate; but that when such Magistrate has, in the exercise of his discretion, directed institution of proceedings, there is nothing in the law to prevent him from transferring the case to a Magistrate otherwise qualified to complete the proceedings." This decision has stood the test of subsequent amendments of section 107 and there is nothing in the amendment of 1923 to show that this view was not accepted as correct or that the legislature intended to alter it in any way. The result is that the Usilampatti Magistrate having first drawn up the preliminary order under section 112 the subsequent transfer of the case to the Dindigul Magistrate by the District Magistrate was authorised and the proceedings before the Dindigul Magistrate were competent. The first objection therefore fails.

The second objection relates to the defect in the order under section 112 and the objection is that that order does not, as it is required by section 112 of the Code to do, set forth "the substance of the information received." Upon the decisions on this topic there is no reasonable doubt as to what the intention of these words is. It is to give in substance an abstract of the facts upon which the Magistrate charges the persons proceeded against with being likely to commit a breach of the peace so as to give them notice of what they have to meet and be prepared to meet it. There are many instances of the practical application of this general rule, of which a very good one is found in Kutti Goundan, *In re*³. The general rule being as stated the question is whether in this particular case the order satisfies the requirements. Other decisions cannot be of much help on that point. The order upon which the Dindigul Magistrate proceeded was one drawn up by himself on 4th April, 1929, after the case was transferred to him. In one sense this was not the order on which he ought to have proceeded because the proceedings having been already initiated he could not initiate them over again and the order which he should have started upon was the order passed by the Usilampatti Magistrate on the 29th December, 1928. If there had been any material difference between the two orders that might alone have been a sufficient irregularity to invalidate all that followed. But as it happens, the order drawn up by the Dindigul Magistrate is, apart from formal changes necessitated by the change of venue, substantially the same as the order passed by the Usilampatti Magistrate, and, therefore, no more need be said about it. The new order drawn up was merely superfluous. The substance of both orders is this:

"That you formed yourselves into a faction espousing the cause of counter-petitioner 1 against Kamatchi Goundan of the same village in regard to the possession and enjoyment of a tamarind tope situated in S. No. 1392 of Odaipatti village and by the inimical attitude of yours against the said Kamatchi Goundan's faction, you are likely to commit breaches of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity or do wrongful acts that may probably occasion breaches of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity."

Kalia
Goundan,
In re

It will be noticed that no other fact is mentioned here except that there are two factions in the village and a dispute between them about a tamarind tope and that the counter-petitioners are on one side. It gives absolutely no indication as to what the information was upon which the counter-petitioners were believed to be threatening breaches of the peace. It would have left the counter-petitioners just as well informed on that point as if they were told: "You are wicked men. You have got enemies and therefore you are likely to commit breaches of the peace." In my opinion not only was there no attempt to state in substance the information received against the counter-petitioners but the order contained nothing from which they could know the case that they would have to meet. The order therefore was clearly defective. This was not, as the Dindigul Magistrate thought, a merely technical defect that it did not give the particulars or the reasons for apprehending a breach of the peace. On that ground the order is liable to be set aside.

But it has been argued for the Public Prosecutor that this defect does not vitiate the proceedings because it did not occasion a failure of justice. I do not question, at any rate I do not now want to question, whether a defect of this character is curable. But the question whether failure of justice has been occasioned in every case is one of fact. In this case the objection was taken before the Magistrate himself, and that, according to section 537, is always a circumstance from which failure of justice may be inferred. Whether it was in fact occasioned in this case cannot be disputed because the counter-petitioners did not have the information they were entitled to possess in the early stage of the proceedings and if they had possessed it at that time, they might have met it successfully. The order, therefore, must be set aside and the bonds given by the petitioners will be cancelled. I come with all the more confidence to this conclusion because this order passed in May, 1929, will in any case expire in two months more.

Practice—Appeal—Money kept in deposit in Lower Court—Order of High Court permitting party to draw out—Condition regarding security to satisfaction of Lower Court—Decision as to sufficiency of security if appealable.

Where, pending the disposal of an appeal on its file, the High Court passes an order permitting the respondent to draw out some moneys kept in deposit in the Lower Court, after furnishing security for a certain amount to the satisfaction of that Court, an appeal does not lie against the decision of the Lower Court accepting the security tendered as being sufficient. In such a case it makes no difference that the words used in the High Court's order are that security should be furnished "to the satisfaction of the District Court" instead of "to the satisfaction of the District Judge".

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is raised that no appeal lies in this case. In C.M.P. Nos. 1612, 1613 and 1616 of 1929 Ramesam and Jackson, JJ., ordered that the respondent in this appeal might draw some amounts from the District Court on giving security to the satisfaction of the District Court. After an elaborate enquiry the District Judge found the security offered sufficient for a certain amount. This appeal is to the effect that the District Judge ought not to have been satisfied that the security was worth so much. No decision has been brought to our notice that an appeal lies in such a matter. On the contrary the principle of *Hoare & Co. v. Morshead*¹ is against it. Without discussing other reasons why the finding of the District Judge that the security offered is worth a certain amount does not come within section 47, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the question was left to him by the order that the security must be to his satisfaction, we uphold the preliminary objection. In our opinion it makes no difference in this connection that the words used by the learned Judges were "to the satisfaction of the District Court" instead of "to the satisfaction of the District Judge."

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

A deposit under O. 21, R. 89, Civil Procedure Code, must be unconditional. Thus, the person making the payment, whether it be the judgment-debtor or a person other than the judgment-debtor, cannot insist that the decree-holder should not draw out the money except on furnishing security.

Where, on the application of the person making the deposit, the Court directed the decree-holder to execute a security bond, which contained a clause to the effect that under certain circumstances the amount must be brought back into Court, and the depositor having died, his representative subsequently sued on the basis of the security bond, claiming a refund of the money deposited,

Held, that the Court acted in excess of its powers in directing security to be furnished, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount paid.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question in regard to O. 21, R. 89, Schedule I, Civil Procedure Code. If a person other than a judgment-debtor pays money into Court under that section, can he insist that the decree-holder shall not draw the sum out without furnishing security?

The facts of the case take us so far back as 1905. One Sri Devi of Mudathode Illam conveyed in jenm to Thuppan Nambudri, the brother of the plaintiff, her entire property (consisting of 140 items). The sale-deed (Ex. I) is dated 16th October, 1905 and mentions the consideration as Rs. 16,000. The purchaser by that deed is directed to pay certain specified debts of the vendor and it then provides that he shall also be bound to pay up all other lawful debts due by her. Eramutti, the brother of the 1st defendant, filed against Sri Devi, O.S. No. 561 of 1905, claiming a certain amount as due. It was to Thuppan's interest, having regard to Ex. I, to get the suit dismissed. He accordingly fought the case on behalf of Sri Devi and lost it in spite of his vigorous defence. As the District Munsif points out, the case was fought out up to the High Court and it was decided that the debt claimed by Eramutti was due. Thuppan then became, under the terms of Ex. I, instantly liable to discharge this decree debt. He, however, committed default and the decree remained unsatisfied. Sri Devi, as I have said, by the sale-deed completely deprived herself of all property. Eramutti, in the circumstances, followed the only course open to him, that of attaching some items bought by Thuppan. The latter thereupon preferred a claim under O. 21, R. 58. The Court rejected it, observing that, the debt not having been discharged, the property conveyed under Ex. I remained liable. Even then, Thuppan did not honestly pay up the debt. He filed a regular suit (O.S. No. 414 of 1911) contesting the order rejecting the claim.

In the meantime the attached property was brought to sale. Thuppan applied in his suit that the sale might be stopped. On 23rd October, 1911, his application was dismissed. Every dilatory method was resorted to; he next applied that the sale might be adjourned. The petition he filed (Ex. 3) contains the following significant statement:—

"The properties obtained by me from the defendant are proclaimed. The sale must be adjourned to enable me to produce the decree amount."

This application met with the same fate as the previous one. Thuppan then, determined to save his property, applied under O. 21, R. 89, for the setting aside of the sale. He made the deposit prescribed by that rule. But, before it could be drawn out by the persons entitled, he applied that security should be taken from the decree-holder. The Court, for some reason not disclosed, complied with this request and directed that security should be furnished. Ex. A, dated 18th December, 1911, was thereupon executed by the heirs of Eramutti, including the 1st defendant. It contains the clause that they would bring back the amount into Court, if Thuppan should succeed in the regular suit then pending.

The rest of the story may be briefly told. Thuppan won O.S. No. 414 of 1911, which dragged a weary length. The case went up as far as the High Court. All the Courts, that dealt with the suit in its various stages, held that the sale was valid; but the point to note is that the sale was upheld on the sole ground that Sri Devi acted honestly and got Thuppan to undertake by the deed to discharge her debts. There is one further fact which is important. Sri Devi's reversioners (Attaladakkam heirs) filed a suit questioning the alienation evidenced by Ex. I. Thuppan having died, his brother, Nilakandan, the present plaintiff, filed a written statement (Ex. 4). Seeking to justify the sale, he asserts that the terms of the sale-deed were carried out and that the amount due to Kammutti was fully paid up. This statement (made in March 1921) implies that the deposit made by Thuppan under O. 21, R. 89, had the effect of discharging the decree debt. Whether this result follows in law or not, it shows that the plaintiff was conscious that he was under a moral duty to pay up the debt. It now suits him to suggest that he made a false allegation in the written statement, to defeat the claim of the reversioners. In any event, that allegation is inconsistent with the present claim based on the security bond. That claim is shortly this. Under the bond, if Thuppan's suit was decreed, the executants bound themselves to bring back the money. Now, Thuppan having succeeded, the plaintiff seeks to enforce the bond and claim the amount from the 1st defendant. It may be mentioned that this suit was filed in 1923.

The first question that arises is, was it competent to the Court to have taken the bond in question? To answer this question, one must have regard to the object and scope of O. 21, R. 89. The Code in various sections lays down in what circumstances a judgment-debtor may contest the sale of his property. Similarly, there are sections under which, a person claiming adversely to a judgment-debtor, may object to attachment and sale. But O. 21, R. 89, enacts a special provision. Its object is to put an end to every kind of contention and dispute. The judgment-debtor is saved from the threatened deprivation of his property; the decree-holder's claim is satisfied and the auction-purchaser is compensated. The section would be frustrated if the person paying money under it is permitted to do so under protest. Clause 2 of R. 89 enacts:

"Where a person applies under R. 90 to set aside the sale of his immoveable property, he shall not, unless he withdraws his application, be entitled to make or prosecute an application under this rule."

This shows that the two proceedings referred to in this clause are utterly incompatible. If the debtor wants to keep a dispute open, he cannot claim the benefit of this section. In fact, this accords to him a special indulgence. While he is thus favoured, care is taken to provide that the interests neither of the decree-holder nor the purchaser are sacrificed. It follows from this that, when the judgment-debtor pays the amount specified, he pays it unconditionally. The payment followed by the order setting aside the sale has the effect of automatically extinguishing the decree debt. If an application is made under R. 89 and the deposit required by that rule is made within 30 days from the date of the sale, the Court has no option but to make an order setting it aside. (See R. 92.) This assumes that the decree debt is discharged and the decree-holder's remedy is gone. The section, then, is inconsistent with the notion that payment can be made either under protest or coupled with conditions.

I have so far dealt with the question on the footing that the person making the deposit is a judgment-debtor; but, under the rule, any person owning an interest in the property by virtue of a title acquired before the sale can make the application. Supposing such a person happens to be not a judgment-debtor but a third party, even then he is subject to the same restrictions. If the property is not liable to be attached for the debt, he can ignore the attachment and sale. If, on the other hand, it is liable, or he believes it to be liable, he can avail himself of this provision and get rid of the sale. But, in that case, he must be taken to have admitted the validity of the sale and it is not open to him either to dispute the sale or to get back the money. Take the case, for instance, of a debtor who, before the decree, had conveyed his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. The trustees, if they choose, may dispute the attachment and the Court-sale. But they may gain nothing by such a course, and, being under a duty to pay up the debt, may choose to take advantage of this provision. To hold that they would still be entitled to contest the sale, or, to claim a refund of the money, would be wholly opposed to the principle underlying the section.

Kummakutty
v.
Neelakandan Nambudri.

This view receives support from several decisions. In *Narayan v. Amgauda*¹ the property was sold in execution of a decree obtained by the defendant against a third party, and purchased by the former. The plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of the property, protested against the sale and ultimately got it set aside under O. 21, R. 89, by paying the required amount into Court. The money having been paid over to the defendant, the plaintiff sued for a refund of it, as having been involuntarily paid. It was held that the amount must be taken to have been deposited voluntarily and unconditionally, and therefore no suit could lie for its recovery. Macleod, C.J., observes:

"If, then, the plaintiff, to suit his own convenience, got rid of the sale of the judgment-debtor's right, title and interest in the property by paying the decretal amount into Court, it is quite clear that he could not recover the amount as having been involuntarily paid."

In *Raghu Ram Pandey v. Deokali Pande*² a decree had been obtained by defendants 1 and 2 against defendant No. 3. In execution of that decree, a certain property was brought to sale and the plaintiff objected, stating that it belonged to him and not to the debtor, but his objection was disallowed. He then deposited the decretal amount and five per cent. under O. 21, R. 89 and got the sale set aside. The money was withdrawn by defendants 1 and 2 and the plaintiff filed the suit in question for a declaration that the property belonged to him and for a refund of the amount withdrawn. In spite of a finding that he was the owner of the property, his suit was dismissed on the ground that he was not entitled to get the money back. I quote the following passage from the judgment:—

"Once a payment is made under O. 21, R. 89, it is clear that the person making the payment cannot be heard to say that the sale was not a valid sale and that the money deposited should not be paid to the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor or the person interested is under no compulsion to make the deposit under O. 21, R. 89. Such a deposit is a voluntary deposit and the person making the deposit cannot in my opinion maintain a suit for a refund of the money deposited by him."

The same view was taken in *Kurja Behari Singha v. Bhupendra Kumar Dutt*³.

The case relied upon for the plaintiff, Kanhaya Lal v. National Bank of India, Ltd.,⁴ does not help him. The defendant Bank had obtained a decree against the Delhi Cotton Mills Company and attached certain mills. The plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of the mills, paid the decree amount under protest and, having freed his property from the attachment, brought an action claiming a return of the money so paid. The Judicial Committee held that the procedure provided in the Code in regard to claims to attached property is merely permissive and the fact that such a procedure is open to him, if he chooses to adopt it, interferes in no way with his right to take any other lawful alternative. In that case, the money was paid before the sale and the payment was not made under O. 21, R. 89. The decision has clearly no application.

If this be the correct view, it follows that the Court had no right to take the security bond in question. It acted clearly in excess of its powers. But it may be contended that though its action was illegal, there is a higher rule which is called into play, namely,

"One of the first and highest duties of all Courts is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors . . ."

See Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris.⁵

But the facts to which I have referred take the case clean out of this principle. The claim of the plaintiff is utterly inequitable and unjust. The District Munsif has carefully analysed the facts and stated them in detail. The Subordinate Judge, who has reversed his judgment, does not advert to them, and, confining his attention merely to the security bond, thinks that there are equities in favour of the plaintiff. The truth is, as I have shown, not only is there no equity in the plaintiff's claim, but all the equities appear to be the other way. The facts I have fully set forth and I do not propose to repeat them. It would suffice to point out again that first in 1911 Thuppan stated when applying for an adjournment of the sale that he would bring into Court the decree amount, and that in 1921, ten years later the plaintiff himself (Thuppan having in the meantime died) asserted in the reversioner's suit, that the decree debt had been fully paid up. These assertions show that Thuppan as well as the plaintiff were fully conscious of their obligation under Ex. I. The present claim is not only unjust but inconsistent with their own declarations.

The suit is dismissed, but I direct the plaintiff to pay only the costs of this second appeal. Some blame attaches to the 1st defendant who voluntarily executed the security bond and that is the reason why I do not propose to give him costs in the Courts below.

v.
Nagammal,

A plaint praying for a declaration that the defendants have no right to certain immoveable property and for partition should be valued, under S. 7, cl. (c) of the Court Fees Act as amended by Madras Act V of 1922, at half the market value of the suit property.

As soon as the Court finds that the suit should have been instituted in some other Court, the plaint should be at once returned for presentation to the proper Court, whether it was sufficiently or insufficiently stamped.

v.
Nagammal.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question which arises in this Petition is whether a sufficient Court-fee has been paid. The plaint sets out a claim by the plaintiff in alternative characters of members of a joint family of tenants-in-common for a declaration that the defendant is entitled to a right in certain immoveable property, and for a partition of the property. The plaint contained a further prayer for a partition of a 2/3rd share in items of immoveable property in the event of the Court holding the plaintiffs were tenants-in-common with a co-tenant since deceased. The plaintiff contended that section 7, clause (iv) (b) of the Court Fees Act, 1922, required the valuation of the property for the purposes of the Court. The District Munsif rejected that contention, and allowed the plaintiff his right. By section 7, clause (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, 1922, as amended by the Madras Court Fees Act, 1922, that in suits coming under sub-clause (c) (which includes suits to obtain a declaratory decree or order where relief is prayed), where the relief sought is with respect to any immoveable property, the valuation shall not exceed half the value of the immoveable property calculated in the manner provided for by paragraph (v) of section 7. This means that the value is to be calculated on the basis of the value of the property. The plaint undoubtedly contained a claim for a declaratory decree and consequential relief with respect to immoveable property, and the provision of clause (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, therefore, applied.

A second point arises out of the order of the District Munsif refusing to return the plaint until the plaintiff paid the proper Court-fee upon the valuation of the property as determined by the Commissioner appointed for that purpose. The District Munsif justified his order by the ruling of the Madras High Court in *Kandasami Goundan v. Subbai Goundan*¹, where the learned Judge said that the Munsif was not justified in refusing to return the plaint which was not properly stamped. It is true, however, that the learned Judge's attention does not appear to have been drawn to *Kandu v. Konda*², where it was held that the Munsif having discovered after enquiry that the value of the lands in suit was beyond his jurisdiction, he followed the correct procedure in returning the plaint. Neither the learned Judge's attention apparently drawn to the remark Aiyar, J., in *Kannuswami Pillai v. Jagathambal*³, which says of O. 7, R. 10, Civil Procedure Code:

"I think it is clear that the legislature intended that as soon as the Court arrived at the conclusion at any stage of the case that the suit should have been instituted in some other Court, the plaint should at once be returned to be presented to the proper Court."

This principle has been accepted by Jackson, J., in a case reported in 57 M. L. J. 33 (sh. n.) and in a case—Civil Revision Petition No. 901 of 1929—recently heard before Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., and myself. It is also supported by the observations of Fawcett, J., in Ganesh Tavanappa v. Taty Bharmappa.⁴ On the balance of authority, therefore, I think the procedure which was followed by the District Munsif in this case was wrong, and that he should have returned the plaint at once when he discovered that the valuation was beyond his jurisdiction.

The learned counsel for the respondent has, however, argued that the Munsif had no right to return the plaint until it was properly stamped. And he has propounded an argument on section 28 of the Court Fees Act, which says that no document which ought to bear a stamp shall be of any validity unless and until it is properly stamped. But I think that this does not mean anything more than that a plaint until properly stamped is not effectual as a plaint for the purposes of the suit. It is not the less a plaint because it is not properly stamped.

The petition is accordingly dismissed in part and allowed in part. In the circumstances, each party will bear their own costs.

charge to be unsustainable. The Magistrate, however, ordered the omnibus which had been seized by the Police to be delivered to the counter-petitioner, who had lodged the complaint. The District Magistrate on revision confirmed the said order on the ground that there had been a proper exercise of discretion by the trial Magistrate. The petitioner having preferred a further revision to the High Court, Held, that the general rule, that where the offence charged is not made out the property seized should be returned to the person from whom it had been taken, should be given effect to in favour of the petitioner. The mere fact that two persons are quarrelling about possession of the property is not one of the special circumstances which take a case out of the general rule.

No. 38 of 1929, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the 2nd Class Magistrate of Tittagudi in C.C. No. 130 of 1929.

V. L. Ethiraj for petitioner.

K. S. Jayarama Aiyar and G. Gopalaswami Aiyar for respondent.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—The petitioner seeks in revision to set aside the order of the 2nd Class Magistrate, Tittagudi, under section 517, Criminal Procedure Code, confirmed by the District Magistrate, South Arcot, under section 520, Criminal Procedure Code, giving possession to counter-petitioner of an omnibus taken from the petitioner by the Police. The charge of theft lodged by the counter-petitioner against the petitioner under section 379, Indian Penal Code, was found to be unsustainable.

The case-law on this subject is as follows:

In Syed Mohideen Sahib, In re¹ it is laid down that the property should ordinarily be delivered to the person by whom it has been produced; and if there is a bona fide dispute the Magistrate may impose conditions upon that person. This is followed in the next case, and purports to be followed in the next after that, where In re *Annapurnabai*² is cited to the same effect.

1. (1883) 2 Weir 667 (Cr. R.C. No. 892 of 1883).

2. (1877) I.L.R. 1 B. 630.

In *Kanagasabai v. Emperor*³ it is ruled that the Magistrate has jurisdiction to decide the question of possession, and In re *Sadashiv*⁴ supports that rule. *Srinivasamurthi v. Narasimhalu Naidu*⁵ lays down that in the absence of special circumstances the property must be returned to the person from whom it was taken.

Vaiyapuri
Chetty
v.
Sinniah
Chetty.

The general effect of these rulings is that the Magistrate has a discretion to decide the question of possession, but it is very rarely that that discretion if properly exercised will go beyond restoring the property to the party from whom it was taken. But probably the question how far a Magistrate's discretion under section 517, Criminal Procedure Code, should extend, is better answered by reference to fundamental principle than by any attempt to piece together a coherent system from various rulings. It is manifest that Criminal Courts are not expected to try civil causes. The one exception is when, in order to prevent a breach of the peace, a Magistrate decides prima facie the question of possession. But it would be an odd extension of that exception if a section were to be drafted into the Code: whenever a Magistrate is satisfied that the police have erroneously attached property where no offence has been committed, he shall require the parties claiming possession of that property to put in their respective claims. Merely from a practical point of view, apart from principle, a provision of that sort would obviously be a direct stimulus to false charges, for parties would jump at the opportunity of settling claims of possession so expeditiously and so cheaply.

It may seem, therefore, that the simple rule should be that if no crime is made out the Magistrate should return the property to the party from whom it was taken. But that rule is just too simple. Suppose, to take a common example, the accused person whom the Magistrate acquits, has pleaded that the property was foisted upon him. There would then be no sense in the Magistrate telling him to keep it. Other instances can no doubt be imagined, but, except in these special cases, the Magistrate should return the property to the person from whom it was taken. The same rule is laid down in *Srinivasamurthi v. Narasimhalu Naidu*⁵ in almost identical terms on page 919. It should be returned to the person from whom it was seized unless there are special circumstances which would render such a course unjustifiable. The mere parties are quarrelling about possession is not one circumstances which take a case out of the gene

In this case therefore the Magistrate should have returned the omnibus to the accused from whom it was taken. The brief order of the District Magistrate has not been a proper exercise of discretion would then be questionable. But if, on the other hand, the Magistrate had allowed to try the civil cause, to weigh evidence and estimate probabilities the District Magistrate when section 520 would have to show that he had applied to the same matters. Otherwise, it would not be a cause decided by a Criminal Court but one of the privilege of appeal.

In the light of the above observations it is not proper to go into the merits of this case; but it may be observed that the dispute is not one which admits of ready solution, and it is possible that the Sub-Magistrate has erred. He found in para 1 that the omnibus was obviously in possession of the accused on the date of the offence, overlooking that on the date of the offence there has been no offence at all. What he said is that the omnibus was obviously in possession of the accused when the police intervened. In his 5th para he says out how flimsy is the case of P.W. 1. The evidence produced, the alleged payment to Addison & Co. and to get over his own signature in Ex. I, all fall back upon the time-worn plea that he signed the document which the accused has filled up, confessing at that time that no one was present when he signed it. The Magistrate says that even by D.W. 1's evidence the accused paid Rs. 200 to P.W. 1 before the re-transfer of the omnibus. D.W. 1 does not say so. He says that he saw Ex. I, and accused promised to pay him Rs. 200. There is no suggestion that pending the payment the accused was to keep the omnibus.

The 2nd Class Magistrate's order cannot be supported on its merits, and furnishes a good example of the advisability of keeping these civil disputes out of Courts.

For the above reasons the orders of the Local Magistrate are cancelled and the omnibus is ordered to be delivered to the petitioner. The petition is allowed.

v.

The Commissioner of Income-tax, Nagpur .. Respondent.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), S. 4, Sub-S. (3) (i)—Trust property held by head of religious community—Income not applied “wholly for religious or charitable purposes”—Exemption from assessment to income-tax.

The head of a religious community executed certain deeds whereby he declared that the properties vested in him were held on trust for purposes, such as, “for carrying on the agricultural, industrial, commercial and other pursuits of the said community”, “for entertaining guests, giving at homes or parties” and “for such donations for charitable or religious purposes, contributions to memorials, funds raised for holding social, educational, religious, industrial or political conferences” etc., which the spiritual head for the time being might deem fit. A succeeding head of the community having been assessed to income-tax on the income of the properties vested in him,

Held, that the said income was applicable to purposes, many of which were neither religious nor charitable, and the same was not exempted from assessment to income-tax under S. 4, Sub-S. (3) (i) of the Income-tax Act.

Appeal No. 50 of 1929 from a judgment, dated the 4th August, 1927, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, delivered on a reference which the appellant in the course of an assessment upon himself required the Commissioner of Income-tax to make under section 66 of the Income-tax Act, 1922.

LORD TOMLIN.—In this case the appellant seeks to displace an assessment to income-tax made upon him in respect of property vested in him as the head of a community which is a sect of the Dawood Borah tribe, located at Nagpur. The community have, apparently, a common stock, all the property being vested in the head of the sect. The property is utilized in part in carrying on a series of shops, the profits of the trade being treated as part of the income of the community.

In the Courts below the appellant rested upon certain trust deeds executed, one on the 25th August, 1917, and the other on the 25th November, 1922. By the first deed the then head of the community declared the trusts of the property vested in him, and by the second deed the trusts of the same property were explained and expanded.

Their Lordships think that the short point which this appeal raises is, whether, having regard to the terms of those deeds, the income of the property vested in the head of the community is exempt from income-tax, having regard to the provisions of section 4, sub-section 3 (i) of Act XI of 1922. That sub-section of section 4 is in these terms:

"This Act shall not apply to the following classes of income: (i) Any income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes, and in the case of property so held in part only for such purposes, the income applied or finally set apart for application thereto."

A glance at the documents on which the appellant has founded himself in the Courts below makes it plain that the income of the trust property is applicable to purposes, many of which are neither religious nor charitable. It is only necessary to refer to one or two of the clauses of the first deed to establish that proposition. Clause 3, which indicates some of the purposes for which the property is held, is: "For carrying on the agricultural, industrial, commercial and other pursuits of the said community." Clause 5 is: "For entertaining guests, giving at homes or parties." Clause 6 is: "For such donations for charitable or religious purposes, contributions to memorials, funds raised for holding social, educational, religious, industrial or political conferences or congresses, and for public entertainments," as the then spiritual head, and, after him, the spiritual head for the time being, may deem fit. Their Lordships think that these extracts establish that the income is not "income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes." Nor is it suggested that any part of the property is set aside for any charitable or religious purposes, so that it can be identified as appropriated exclusively to such purposes.

In these circumstances the conclusion which has been arrived at by the Court below seems to their Lordships to be correct.

It perhaps is right to add that it was suggested that some comfort could be found by the appellant from a deed of the 9th June, 1894, in which certain property was vested in the then head of the community upon religious or charitable trusts; but no attempt has been made, either here or below, to identify the property, the subject of that trust, with any of the property now said to be subject to tax. Their Lordships think that in the absence of any evidence of identity and having regard to the fact that throughout, in the Courts below, the later deeds only have been founded upon, it is not open to the appellant to assert before their Lordships' Board that the deed of the 9th June, 1894, has any relation to the matter.

In their Lordships' opinion the appeal must be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The Advocate-General, T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, B. V. Viswanatha Aiyar and U. Ramachandran for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision petition against the order of the District Judge of Salem setting aside the election of the petitioner before me for the first ward of the Union of Trichengode in the Salem District. The facts of the case are as follows:—The Madras Government dissolved the Trichengode Union under section 45 of the Local Boards Act and passed an order that another Board should be re-constituted. They appointed an officer immediately to exercise the powers of the Board and he was directed to re-constitute a Union Board by arranging for elections in respect of such members as have got to be elected and they directed also the Taluk Board of Sankari to nominate the members that have got to be nominated after the elections are over. All this is to be done as soon as possible. Accordingly the Special Officer appointed proceeded with making arrangements for the election of members for the first ward among other elections. In this election the petitioners before me were elected. The respondent before me filed the petition O.P. No. 27 of 1929 for the purpose of setting aside the election on the ground that the electoral roll on the basis of which the election was conducted was the roll prepared for the year 1923-24 and no other later roll was prepared. It is said that the old electoral roll contains names of persons who are dead and of persons who are unfit to be voters and does not contain persons who are fit to be voters. It was contended on behalf of the petitioners that that does not matter. Under section 51 (4) an electoral roll published in any year shall remain in force till the publication of a fresh electoral roll. The District Judge disallowed this contention of the petitioners before me holding that S. 51 (4) applies only to cases happening in the interval between April and July of any year. The rules prescribed that a tentative list will be published on the 30th April of each year and after hearing objections, if any, the final list should be published on the 1st July. The District Judge thinks that only in the case of elections between the 30th of April and the 1st of July clause 4 of section 51 operates and that in all other cases where the rules are broken the election is bad because it is based on an electoral roll not prepared according to the rules under the Act. But if this were the object of the section, clause 4 of section 51 would not have been worded in the very wide language in which it is framed. The learned Advocate-General who appears for the respondent and supports the order of the District Judge does not in fact contend for the very narrow construction of the learned District Judge. He contends that the object is to provide for delays in the preparation of electoral rolls when one is being prepared to carry out the obvious intentions of the Act, and it does not apply to a case where the directions of the Act are openly disregarded and no efforts are made to prepare electoral rolls for a period of 5 or 6 years. There is something to be said in favour of such a construction. At any rate it is reasonable. But where the section is worded in such a way that it gives no scope to make such distinctions, its obvious effect must be carried out. It may be that the legislature never contemplated such flagrant disobedience of the directions of the Act as it has happened in Trichengode. We do not know why they did not contemplate such disobedience. Either the legislative might have thought that some higher authority would have set it right or such instances would not happen. In the present case, I am informed that the Trichengode Union was not dissolved for its failure to carry out the provisions of the Act in this matter but really for some other delinquency, so that, but for the delinquency in some other directions, the Union Board would have gone on disregarding the provisions of the Act for many years without anybody finding fault with it. But we are not concerned with all these things. The Act says that the electoral roll published in any year, shall remain in force till the publication of a fresh electoral roll. If it is intended that such a provision should apply only during the course of the year, there is nothing to prevent the legislature from saying so, that is "shall remain in force till the termination of that year". The learned Advocate-General suggested that there may be some delay in the preparation of the roll for the next year. If it is intended that the provision should operate until the termination of the next year, then there is nothing to prevent the legislature from saying so, that is from saying "shall remain in force till the termination of the next following year". Once we begin to make distinctions of this kind, we do not know where the line is to be drawn. Until the legislature makes its intention plainer, my plain duty is to give effect to the clause of the Act. Moreover, having regard to section 45 (1) of the Government notification, the policy of the legislature is that no time should be lost in the reconstitution of another Union Board. If one is to wait for a proper electoral roll and then only to proceed with the election of the members of the Board, the

Venkata-

Venkata-
ramana Aiyar
v.
Kuppuswami
Aiyangar.

Board will not be constituted immediately. Rule the electoral roll say that a tentative list should be made by the 30th of April and the final list on the 1st of May. In the present case the Special Officer was appointed in 1928. He has to wait till July, 1929. Then the necessary arrangements to be made. The constitution of the Board has been delayed much longer than is contemplated by the Act. 'Directly' in section 45 or in the G. O. The policy of the Act is that the old electoral roll should continue in order to avoid delays of several kinds, namely delay for a few months or for a year, delay due to disobedience to the superior authorities, or gross negligence on the part of the Union Board, etc. That is the policy of the legislature and there is no use of complaining. To proceed upon an antiquated electoral roll is to deprive several voters of their votes. This may be so, but so; it is my duty to give effect to the section. Advocate-General relied on a decision in *K. R. Chettiar v. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar*¹. That case was about election of members to a Temple Committee under the Hindu Religious Endowments Act. There it was held that a register to be kept. It appears from the facts of that case that for 8 years no register has been revised and the election of Kumaraswami Sastriar and Curgenvan, JJ., held in 1926 was not proper. But in that Act there is no such provision as in section 51 (4) of the Local Boards Act. The facts of that case can only apply to cases where there is no such provision. It is clear from the judgment of Curgenvan, J., at page 732 he says:

"Unless there is some provision to the contrary, the election depends upon the regularity of the procedure and if it is held"

Here we have got an express provision that if there is irregularity however gross will not render an election invalid, namely, the want of a fresh electoral roll. For I do not see any reason to limit the operation of section 51 (4) of the Local Boards Act. I set aside the order of the District Judge holding that the election of the petitioners was invalid and dismiss the 1st respondent's petition with costs of the petitioners both here and below. I also set aside the order of the District

The expression "not earlier than fifteen days", when applied to a notice under S. 9 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act, means that the claimant is to have fifteen days clear before he need appear and consequently the enquiry before the Acquisition Officer cannot be held on the fifteenth day after the service of the notice.

The land is situated in old Survey No. 215, now Re-Survey No. 142, in Kattunga village. The Acquiring Officer gave an award at the rate of Rs. 10 per cent., which the Lower Court has increased to Rs. 15. the merits. The point of law is this. The notice about the enquiry was served upon the claimant on 19th August, 1925 and it directed him to appear on 3rd September, 1925. Section 9 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act directs the Collector to serve notice on the claimant to the same effect as the notice in sub-section (2). The notice in sub-section (2) is to notify the claimant to appear before the Acquiring Officer "at a time and place mentioned therein, such time not being earlier than fifteen days after the date of publication of the notice."

When that is applied to sub-section (3) it would mean that the notice to be served upon the claimant should direct him to appear at a time not earlier than fifteen days after the service of the notice. The question is whether "not earlier than fifteen days" means that the claimant is to have fifteen days clear before he need appear, that is, before the date of the enquiry or whether the date of enquiry may be on the 15th day. The language used seems to us unhappy and there is something to be said for an interpretation either way. The only reported case exactly on the point to which our attention has been called is in Tara-prasad Chaliha v. The Secretary of State for India in Council,¹ where a Bench of the Calcutta High Court has decided for the present claimant's view. No particular reasons are given, but in the circumstances and having regard to the fact that if there is any real dubiety in interpretation in matters of procedure like that, the benefit of the doubt ought to be given to the party, we follow the interpretation of the phrase given by the learned Judges in Calcutta. We might add that in order to avert further difficulties of the same kind in future, it would be wise if Acquiring Officers gave more than fifteen days clear notice in the notices issued under section 9.

It is, therefore, open for us to go into the merits of the case, the claimant not being precluded from putting forward his case although he did not object under section 9, since the notice given to him was defective.

[His Lordship dealt with the question of compensation and concluded:]

The appeal, therefore, is allowed to the extent of the reduction of the price of the tamarind tree to Rs. 80, and as to costs we direct that each party shall bear his costs here. The Memorandum of Objections is dismissed.

Where the plaintiff stated in his plaint that the Hindu joint family, of which he was a member, had become divided in status on a prior date and prayed for the partition of the immoveable properties by metes and bounds,

Held, that the plaint did not fall under S. 7 (iv) (b) of the Court Fees Act and the valuation of the suit should be according to the market value of the properties.

Observations of Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in Rangiah Chetty v. Subramania Chetty, (1910) 21 M.L.J. 21 (F.B.), relied on.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Trichinopoly, dated 16th November, 1928, in C.M.A. No. 29 of 1928 preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Karur, dated 5th April, 1928, in O.S. No. 25 of 1926.

T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar and S. S. Ramachandra Aiyar for petitioner.

K. G. Srinivasa Aiyar for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This application raises the question whether a suit should be valued notionally or ad valorem, the decision of which will also involve the further question of jurisdiction. The learned District Judge has held that the suit can be valued notionally setting aside the order of the learned District Munsif that the valuation should be according to the market value. The respondent frankly admits that the judgment of the learned Judge can only be supported if it is found that this suit falls under section 7 (iv) (b) of the Court Fees Act. The plaintiff states in his plaint that the family has been divided in status since 1921 and now he sues for a partition by metes and bounds. Is it a suit to enforce the right to share in any property on the ground that it is joint family property? This is by no means an easy question to decide, but I think it is answered authori-

"There is a joint family at the date of the suit. The plaintiff's right to have the property divided is on the ground that the property belongs to the joint family on that date"

"It must be admitted that a suit by a tenant-in-common in joint possession for the partition of the common property not belonging to a joint family cannot fall under this clause."

When a coparcenary has been disrupted, it cannot I think be described as a joint family though the property of the family has not been divided by metes and bounds. Therefore in the light of this interpretation the plaint would not fall under section 7 (iv) (b); and reading section 4 along with section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act it must be held that the valuation in this case cannot be notional. No argument has been advanced in this Court as regards the cancellation of the sale-deed which the plaintiff prefers to treat as void—a matter on which I need express no opinion. In so far as the ruling of the learned District Judge is not set aside, the District Judge's order as regards other matters will stand. In the result, therefore, the plaint will have to be returned for presentation to the²¹ proper Court.

The petitioner will have his costs.

The record under S. 548 is the magisterial record and such record in proceedings under S. 107 begins usually with the order under S. 112, except where a Magistrate not empowered under S. 107, wishes to have proceedings taken under it and issues a warrant under clause 3 of the section.

The Magistrate acting under S. 107 is not bound to disclose the sources or the nature of the information received.

Petition under sections 435 and 439rd of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Nellore, dated 26th July, 1930, and made in M.C. No. 39 of 1930.

The Court made the following ORDER.—The question raised in this case is whether a person against whom a Magistrate has drawn up an order under section 112, Criminal Procedure Code, asking him to show cause why he should not be bound over to keep the peace under section 107 is entitled to obtain a copy of the written information given by the Police on which the order is based. The Magistrate refused to grant the copy holding that it is not a charge-sheet, as the petitioner described it in his application. That it is not a report under S. 173, Criminal Procedure Code, copy of which should under clause 4 of that section be furnished on application and payment to the accused, is clear enough. Because the section is in terms confined to reports made on investigation under Chapter XIV of the Code. But this does not dispose of the matter. Section 548 (leaving out the immaterial words) provides that “if any person affected by an order passed by a Criminal Court desires to have a copy of . . . ‘other part of the record’ he shall, on applying for such copy, be furnished therewith. The petitioner was clearly affected by the order under section 112 requiring him to show cause. If the information by the Police on which the Magistrate founded his order can be brought within the words “part of the record”, he is entitled to a copy. No direct decision on the point has been brought to my notice. But there are observations of more or less indirect application. In Ranga Reddi v. where the point for decision was whether and to order under section 112 should set out particular information and whether evidence of reputation was a charge under section 110, clause (f), Seshagiri pointing out that it is of the utmost importance information communicated to the accused under section 112 should be clear and specific, says at p. 451:

"The accused is to be put on his trial on information behind his back. In the case of a complaint the accused is to be given a copy of the information if he applies for it, but in the case of an information of a confidential kind, which ex necessitate is a confidential one, the accused cannot be told the nature and extent of the information on which the prosecution intends to take the action against him."

This passage is cited by Madhavan Nair in *Goundan, In re*² in another similar case where the point for decision was whether the order under section 112 contained sufficient particulars to enable the accused to prepare his defence and to summon witnesses on his side before the enquiry commences. In both cases the learned Judges held that the accused is not entitled to a copy of the information of the Magistrate and it may also be pointed out that the order under section 112 to a great extent be superfluous if the accused were given copies of the information on which that order is based. At the same time it cannot be denied that in the order under section 548 under consideration nor were the learned Judges considering whether the report of the Police on which the order under section 112 is based is "part of the record" and whether the order is made.

On the other side there are observations of the learned Judges in a contrary sense in the well-known decision in *Queen-Empress v. Arumugam*³. The case was decided in 1896 before the amendment of section 112 which required accused persons to get copies of charge-sheets under section 112. The question related to copies of Police report under sections 157, 168 and 173 of the then Code. Of the four Judges who constituted the Court three held that reports under sections 157 and 168 were not public documents and the accused were not entitled to copies of the same. The fourth Judge was equally divided as to reports under section 173 and held that they were and the other two that they were not.

public documents of which the accused could get copies. The two referring Judges at page 192 say with reference to the argument founded on section 548 that if an order has been made on a Police occurrence report or charge-sheet affecting the person accused such as an order for his arrest or for his remand to custody, he is ipso facto entitled to a copy of that document under the express terms of section 548 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. At page 206 Benson, J., refers to the argument based on section 548. He was of opinion that the argument would succeed if the Magistrate making the order is at the time a Criminal Court. He rejected the argument as he thought that a Magistrate is not a Court when enquiring into offences which he is not empowered to try. This distinction between Magistrates and Courts is no longer valid after the decision of the Privy Council in *Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore Roy Chowdhury*⁴ and there can be no doubt that a Magistrate acting under section 112 is a Court. It would, therefore, seem that but for this distinction which did not exist, Benson, J., would have upheld the view of the referring Judges as to section 548. There is, however, no denying the fact that these were observations, not decisions, and that they were made with respect to Police reports made under Chapter XIV and not to Police reports or information to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under Chapter VIII.

In this state of authority, I have to decide the point before me on a consideration of the words of section 548 and such considerations as may be based on the nature of proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In brief, what is meant by "the record" and when does "the record" begin in proceedings under section 107? On the best consideration I can give to the matter, I think the record intended is the magisterial record and such record in proceedings under section 107 begins usually with the order under section 112, except where a Magistrate not empowered under section 107 wishes to have proceedings taken under it and issues a warrant under clause 3 of that section. The information which leads to action under section 107 may be of the most varied kind. It may be oral, sworn or not sworn, and need not be in writing. It may be from any source, official or unofficial, formal or informal. It may be derived from the Magistrate's own knowledge. He is not bound to disclose the source or the nature of the information received. See In the matter of the petition

Hindu Law.—Joint family—Suit against father and sons—Sons minors at the time of the suit—Decree for delivery of possession of property and past and future mesne profits—Mesne profits directed to be determined in execution—Ex parte order in execution—Gross negligence on the part of guardian ad litem—Whether order against minors would be vitiated—Whether also it could stand against the adult members of the joint family.

The first appellant was the plaintiff in a suit against the respondents, respondent I being the father of the minor respondents 3, 4 and 5, and got a decree for delivery of possession of property with past and future mesne profits at a certain rate. The decree was appealed against by the respondents and was confirmed, though with regard to future mesne profits it was felt by the Appellate Court that it should be determined in execution. The appellant brought an execution petition for determining the future mesne profits. The 1st respondent who was guardian ad litem to the respondents 3, 4 and 5 as well as the 2nd respondent who was also a member of the same joint family, allowed the petition to be decreed ex parte, and the order passed, gave a much higher rate of future mesne profits to the appellant. In a suit by the respondents as plaintiffs, that the order was not binding on the minors since it was obtained owing to gross negligence of their guardian ad litem, and that it could not be enforced against the 1st and 2nd respondents either, all being members of one joint family, the Lower Court decreed in their favour on both the points.

Held (1) that though gross negligence by itself was not a legal ground for setting aside a decree or order, it being further shown that the interest of the minors thereby was prejudiced, the decision of the Lower Court should not be interfered with, and of their guardian ad litem in allowing the proceedings to be adjudged ex parte. Plaintiffs 1 and 2 contend that the decree in the execution petition was obtained by fraud and consequently is not binding upon them. They also maintain that, that the interests of the minors were thereby gravely prejudiced; in other words, they had a prima facie good case to put forward which, owing to the negligence of their guardian, was not advanced before the Court. On this point also we have, on the facts, no doubt. The 1st defendant's claim for mesne profits in his possession suit was for Rs. 535 per annum both for past and for future years. (See Ex. A.) The Trial Court in that suit decreed past and future mesne profits at Rs. 250 per annum. Now, although the present plaintiffs appealed against the decree, the 1st defendant, the plaintiff in that case, put in no memorandum of cross-objections against the figure decreed and filed no appeal of his own. He was thus apparently quite satisfied with the amount of mesne profits decreed at Rs. 250 per annum for future years; and if the present plaintiff had not appealed, the 1st defendant would have got no more than that figure. It was on the present plaintiff's case in appeal that the mesne profits awarded were too high that the Appellate Court directed the amount to be determined in execution. In execution, as has been noted, the 1st defendant obtained an ex parte order for mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 857-8-0 per annum which is a much higher figure than he had even claimed in his possession suit and is more than three times the figure with which he was satisfied when it was awarded him by the decree of the Trial Court. We cannot doubt that, if these facts had been brought before the Judge trying the execution petition, he would have felt bound to regard them as extremely important points to be considered before he arrived at his decision. From these facts alone we are constrained to agree with the Lower Court that the interests of the minors have been gravely prejudiced by the gross negligence of their guardian.

It is argued for the appellants that the actual evidence produced now as to mesne profits is vague and inconclusive and does not amount to proof that the demand of Rs. 857-8-0 is exorbitant and that the Lower Court has not recorded any finding that it was so. But we do not think it necessary to pronounce on the character of the evidence now. What the minors have to establish is that there was a prima facie good defence which was not put forward owing to the neglect of their guardian; and the fact that the 1st defendant had not even in his suit estimated the mesne profits at as high a figure as he has now been awarded and that he himself was previously satisfied with the figure of Rs. 250 is in itself a prima facie good defence. It is better not to pre-judge the fresh inquiry by a decision now as to whether the figure of Rs. 857-8-0 is or is not exorbitant. Neither side has evidently put forward its full case yet. In particular, the evidence about the price of paddy for the years in question is defective on both sides. We are, therefore, not prepared to interfere with the decree of the Lower Court so far as the minors are concerned.

The next question is on issues 3 and 5, whether on that finding it should follow that the order in execution has to be set aside against the adult plaintiffs also. In the absence, as we have held, of proof of fraud, they are, of course, prima facie bound by the order in execution, as it is res judicata. But there are cases in which a Court setting aside a decree or order in part is constrained by the logic of circumstances to set it aside in toto; and the necessity for this in certain cases is recognised by the Code of Civil Procedure in O. 9, R. 13 and O. 41, R. 33. Neither of these rules applies directly to the present case as it stood before the Trial Court. But that Court has applied the principles of these rules and set aside the execution order as a whole on the ground that the amount of liability of the adult plaintiffs cannot be separated from, and cannot be different from, that of the minors. The argument seems to us to be a sound one and is based on the principle accepted by this Court in *Valia Panga Achan v. Marutha Veera Kavundan*¹ and *Ramalingam Chettiar v. Subramania Chettiar*² and set out by the Privy Council in *Venkata Row v. Tuljaram Row*³ and by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in *Jadubansa Narain v. Mohunt Hari Charan Bharati*⁴. The original suit for possession and mesne profits was framed against the joint family of the plaintiffs as such. The figure of mesne profits then is the cash value of the annual profit which the joint family might reasonably have made during their possession; and, from that point of view, the amount must be a fixed figure for each member of it. It is impossible for this Court to hold in one and the same proceeding that the amount of profits made by the joint family is both, say, Rs. 250 and Rs. 857 per annum. The joint liability for mesne profits of all the plaintiffs is one and indivisible, and the decree against all the plaintiffs is based on a common ground. Each member of the joint family is entitled to claim that the amount payable by the joint family shall not be more than is payable by every member of it. It is thus impossible to do justice to the minor members of the joint family unless we re-open the matter of the whole liability of the joint family, that is, of the adult members also. In this view the Lower Court's decree on this point also is correct. We see no reason to interfere and dismiss this appeal with costs of respondents 1 to 5.

Two persons brought a suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council as the 1st defendant, and other defendants in possession of the suit lands, for a declaration that the 1st defendant had no right to enfranchise the suit lands and for ejection of the other defendants from the enjoyment of the lands. Notice to the Secretary of State was given by one of the plaintiffs alone.

Held, that if the requisites of S. 80 should be literally complied with, the giving of notice about the suit claim by one of the plaintiffs would not be strict compliance with the mandatory provisions of S. 80, when the suit was filed by two plaintiffs, though one of them happened to be the person that gave the notice.

There should be identity of the person who issued the notice with the person that brings the suit. In this view, the suit brought by a legal representative of a deceased person and the suit brought by a transferee would offend against S. 80, Civil Procedure Code, if the notice required by that section was given by the deceased man or transferor. Vide Bachchu

The Government Pleader on behalf of the Crown.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—These three are connected appeals arising out of three suits brought by the plaintiffs (appellants) against the Secretary of State for India in Council as the 1st defendant and some other defendants in possession of the suit lands, in order to establish the plaintiffs' right to resume the suit inams and for a declaration that the 1st defendant had no right to enfranchise these inams and also for the recovery of possession of these lands ejecting the other defendants therefrom. Both the Courts below have rejected the plaints in these cases under O. 7, R. 11, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the notice under section 80, Civil Procedure Code, was not given to the 1st defendant in the manner required by that section. The only question now arising for consideration is, whether the view taken by the Courts below is correct.

The village in which the suit inams are situate belonged to the 1st plaintiff. It is admitted in the plaint that the 1st plaintiff has sold the suit village to the 2nd plaintiff and under the contract of sale the 2nd defendant has been put in possession of the village also. The plaint seeks for a declaration of the right set forth therein in favour of both the plaintiffs and the suit is clearly framed in such a manner as to make it one in which the reliefs mentioned therein are sought for on behalf of both the plaintiffs. Ex. I, which is dated the 22nd of July, 1921, is the notice sent by the 1st plaintiff alone to the Government under section 80, Civil Procedure Code. The question is, whether the present suit brought by two plaintiffs in the manner above set forth is maintainable when the notice required by section 80, Civil Procedure Code, was given by the 1st plaintiff alone; in other words, whether such a notice can be deemed to be a sufficient compliance with the requisites of section 80. That section lays down that no suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, unless two months before the institution of that suit a notice in writing was given stating the cause of action, the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff and the relief which he claims. There should also be an averment in the plaint that such a notice was delivered or left as stated in the aforesaid section. As regards the provisions in section 80 being strict and mandatory or not, it would appear there was some difference of opinion expressed in some of the rulings relating to this section. In some decisions, a strict view was taken, but, in other cases, a liberal construction was placed upon this section and any defect or irregularity was condoned if it was found to be immaterial or unsubstantial. My attention was drawn to those decisions, but in view of the latest pronouncement by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case *Bhagchand Dagadusa v. Secretary of State for India*¹ it seems to me that the dictum so clearly laid down by the Privy Council will have to be followed in deciding a question of this kind. At page 747, their Lordships have observed thus:

"The Act, albeit a Procedure Code, must be read in accordance with the natural meaning of its words. Section 80 is express, explicit and mandatory, and it admits of no implications or exceptions."

Later on, their Lordships further state thus:

"To argue, as the appellants did, that the plaintiffs had a right urgently calling for a remedy, while section 80 is mere procedure, is fallacious, for section 80 imposes a statutory and unqualified obligation upon the Court."

In view of such a clear pronouncement, it is no longer open to argue that the Courts can make exceptions or qualifications to the explicit terms of section 80 on account of considerations of hardship and absence of prejudice or detriment to the interests of the Government. If the requisites of section 80 should be literally complied with, I must say that the giving of notice about the suit claim by one plaintiff would not be a strict compliance with the mandatory provisions of section 80, when the suit is actually filed by two plaintiffs, though one of them happens to be the person that gave the notice. There should be identity of the person who issued the notice with the person that brings the suit. In this view, it has been held that a suit brought by a legal representative of a deceased man and a son brought by a transferee would offend against section 80, Civil Procedure Code, if the notice required by that section was given by the deceased man or by the transferor. Vide *Bachchu Singh v. The Secretary of State for India in Council*² and Mahadev v. Secretary of State.³ As the dictum of the Privy Council indicates that it is no longer left to the discretion of the Court to hold in favour of the maintainability of a suit in spite of non-compliance with some of the requisites of the section, I have to find against the maintainability of the present suits on the ground that the notice as required by section 80, Civil Procedure Code, was not given.

It is argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants that even if a strict interpretation of section 80 is made, the plaint, as a whole, should not be rejected, but only so far as the 2nd plaintiff is concerned. If it is a case of rejection of the plaint owing to non-compliance with section 80, it is not clear how there can be a partial rejection of the plaint in respect of a portion of the claim or as regards some of the parties. A similar question was considered by the Allahabad High Court in the case reported in *Raghubans Puri v. Jyotis Swarupa*⁴. Referring to section 54 of the old Civil Procedure Code, the learned Judges state that that section only provides for the rejection of a plaint in the event of any matters specified in that section not being complied with and it does not justify the rejection of any particular portion of a plaint. Section 54 now corresponds to O. 7, R. 11, Civil Procedure Code. The plain meaning of that rule seems to be that if any of the defects mentioned therein is found to exist in any case, the plaint shall be rejected as a whole. It does not imply any reservation in the matter of the rejection of the plaint. Non-compliance with the requisites of section 80, Civil Procedure Code, was taken to be a ground covered by clause (d) of R. 11 above referred to. Even if it should be taken that that clause does not strictly apply to the present cases, I must hold that the suits are liable to dismissal on account of non-compliance with section 80, Civil Procedure Code.

It is urged on behalf of the appellants that if it should be taken that the suits have to be dismissed, then, so far as the defendants other than the 1st defendant are concerned, the suits may be allowed to be proceeded with. There is real difficulty in acceding to this argument advanced on the appellants' side. If these suits should stand dismissed as against the 1st defendant, it means that the Government's right to resume these inam lands stands unaffected and the plaintiffs have no right as against the Government to resume the same. That being so, their claim to recover possession of these lands from the other defendants should fall to the ground, for the simple reason that they have no right to resume these inams. In this connection I may also refer to an observation made by the Privy Council in the said *Bhagchand Dagadusa v. Secretary of State for India*¹. It was contended in that case, that even if the non-compliance with section 80 defeated the action as against the Secretary of State, it could be proceeded with as against the other defendant. To meet this argument, their Lordships have observed thus:

"Not only has the suit been throughout a joint proceeding against the officials concerned, for the purpose of getting a joint declaration that the Government Notification was bad as the foundation of everything subsequently done, but, without the presence of the Secretary of State before the Court, the Notification could not be assailed, and, if it stands as valid, the Collector's own action could not be successfully impugned."

Similarly, in the present case, if the claim put forward by the plaintiffs against the 1st defendant fails, it cannot succeed against the other defendants. However, the above observation in that ruling was sought to be distinguished on the ground that in that case there was a necessity of giving notice under section 80 even in respect of the 2nd defendant; and, in the present case, there was no necessity to issue any such notice to the other defendants. But I do not think the observation of their Lordships as to the non-maintainability of the action against the 2nd defendant depended on this circumstance, namely, the necessity of a notice even to the 2nd defendant.

The defect pointed out above being fatal to the maintainability of the suits, either the suits are liable to dismissal or the plaints are liable to rejection. In either view, the order of the Lower Appellate Court seems to be correct. I, therefore, dismiss these second appeals with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), §. 67 (d)—Scope—Suit by co-mortgagee for his share of the mortgage amount—Maintainability—Court-fee payable.

S. 67 (d) does not bar a suit by a person interested in part only of the mortgaged property. All that it prohibits is a suit relating only to a corresponding part of the property. He may by all means maintain a suit for the recovery of his share provided the reliefs he prays for, foreclosure or sale, relate to the entire property.

Atchamma v. Subbarayudu, (1903) 15 M.L.J. 496 and Sunitabala Debi v. Dhara Sundari Debi Chowdhurani, (1919) L.R. 46 I.A. 272: I.L.R. 47 Cal. 175: 37 M.L.J. 483 (P.C.), referred to.

In such a suit, it is sufficient if Court-fee is paid on the plaintiff's share of the mortgage amount.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the finding of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura (Second Additional) in O.S. No. 76 of 1928.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition arises out of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Madura directing amendment of the plaint in O.S. No. 76 of 1928 and the payment of additional Court-fee. He passed this order in consequence of his finding on the 3rd issue which was argued as a preliminary issue.

The suit was filed by the plaintiff who was one of several mortgagees in a mortgage document, Ex. A, for Rs. 34,000. The document recites that the consideration of Rs. 34,000 was made up of the sums due on prior separate documents to the mortgagees, namely, the plaintiff and defendants 5 to 10. There is no doubt that the amount of the mortgage money belonged in separate shares to the mortgagees so far as their interests inter se are concerned. But the question now is what is the correct legal position in a suit against the mortgagor when one of the mortgagees wants to sue. Section 67, clause (d) of the Transfer of Property Act enacts:

"Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise a person interested in part only of the mortgage money to institute a suit relating only to a corresponding part of the mortgaged property, unless etc."

This section does not prohibit a person interested in part only of the mortgage money instituting a suit to recover his share of the mortgage money only by framing the suit to relate to the whole of the mortgaged property but not to a corresponding part of the mortgaged property. Once the mortgagee frames his suit praying his relief for sale or for foreclosure so as to operate upon the whole of the mortgaged property, instead of a corresponding part of the mortgaged property, the obstacle of this section disappears. In this case the plaintiff has prayed for sale of the whole of the mortgaged properties. The mischief of the prohibition mentioned in section 67 does not operate in the present case.

As to the maintainability of the suit by one only of the mortgagees, whether he sues for his portion of the money or for the whole of the debt, there can be no question. If he sues for his share of the debt only, all that he has to do is to avoid the prohibition in section 67. But if he sues for the whole of the mortgage debt, if he does so with the consent of the other co-mortgagees either because the other co-mortgagees do not claim any share in the mortgage amount and the whole amount from the beginning belonged to the plaintiff or because there is some private arrangement by which the plaintiff has since become entitled to the whole and the co-mortgagee is not entitled to any portion of the debt now, or because the co-mortgagee only has been paid off his share of the debt but the plaintiff has not been paid off his share of the debt—whatever the reason may be—the suit is certainly maintainable. An illustration of this occurs in *Atchamma v. Subbarayudu*¹. In that case the co-mortgagee admitted that he was not entitled to any interest in the mortgage money and the suit was held to be maintainable. The proposition is also clear from the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Smitabala Debi v. Dhara Sundari Debi Chowdurani*². But where there is no consent of the co-mortgagee then the plaintiff must make the co-mortgagee a party defendant and sue for his share of the mortgage debt and must take care to see that he is proceeding against the whole of the mortgaged property. This is also clear from the observations of the Privy Council in the case just mentioned. Thus the real question in all such cases is not one of maintainability of the suit but what is the Court-fee to be paid by the plaintiff in such cases and perhaps though the point does not arise now there is also the question of jurisdiction. In such cases, should the plaintiff pay Court-fee upon the whole of the mortgage money or only upon his share? It is true that for realising his share of the mortgage money he has to pray for sale of the whole property. That prayer is already in the plaint in the case before me. Why, therefore, the Subordinate Judge should direct an amendment of the plaint by adding a prayer in respect of the entire mortgagee's interests I do not see. The plaintiff already asked for a sale of the whole of the mortgaged property. If the whole of the mortgaged property realised more than the amount due on the document to all the mortgagees, the plaintiff will be simply paid his amount and the rest of it will be held by the Court and will not be paid to the other co-mortgagees until they pay their Court-fees. The fear that the Government will be deprived of the Government revenue while the whole of the mortgage amount is being realised and only a small amount is being paid as Court-fee, is therefore illusory. After the trial of the case and the final decree is passed, the Court will make a provision directing the defendants-mortgagees to pay their Court-fees within a certain time and if they do not pay the Court-fees the amount will be paid to the mortgagor after taking security. In such a case no mortgagee will allow his money to go back to the mortgagor's hands owing to non-payment of Court-fees, so that ultimately the Government will get the whole Court-fee due upon the whole of the mortgage money. The suit then becomes somewhat analogous to a partition action the plaintiff paying Court-fees only on the share due to him; the other sharers will be arrayed as defendants who will pay Court-fees on the shares due to them and get decrees in respect of their shares on payment of such Court-fees. From this point of view, no doubt, the suit really concerns the whole of the mortgage. I do not see why the plaintiff should be called upon to pay the Court-fees due on the whole of the mortgage amount. Cases are not infrequent in Courts where as incidental to the relief to be given to the plaintiff an issue has to be determined by the Court which may have consequences much wider than the relief which the plaintiff seeks; for instance, an issue as to adoption in a suit for rent or money due on a bond or promissory note. In such cases the plaintiff is not asked to pay Court-fees on all the properties which he gets by reason of the adoption. After all, the plaintiff seeks the assistance of the Court to get a certain relief and he pays Court-fees on that relief. The fact that the Court expresses some opinion on a matter of a large value for giving the relief the plaintiff seeks is no reason why the plaintiff should be made to pay a larger Court-fee. In the present case the plaint as framed seems to be correct as already observed. If on sale of the whole of the property the amount realised becomes less than the mortgage amount due on the document, all the mortgagees must suffer rateable diminution of course subject to questions of priority raised by the plaintiff, as to which I say nothing now. Apart from such questions of priority rateable diminution seems to be necessary and the plaintiff will get the amount due to him after calculating the proportionate amount.

It is suggested to me by the respondents that there may be further questions arising in the case after the sale of the mortgaged properties such as (1) personal decree against the mortgagor and his other properties if the sale proceeds are not sufficient to pay the mortgage amount, (2) the right of the mortgagees to proceed against the surety who is the 11th defendant in the suit, and (3) any such other points that might possibly arise. It is said there is some compromise between the plaintiff and respondents 7 to 10. The whole suit may be tried subject to such terms, whatever they are. If the case proceeds on the footing that the plaintiff and the defendant co-mortgagees all stand somewhat in the position of plaintiffs as in a partition suit, there is no objection to working out the personal decree and even the rights against the sureties in this very suit even assuming for a moment that the plaintiff does not care to prosecute those remedies or compromised the matter with the sureties or with the mortgagors. With this understanding the suit can be allowed to proceed without any need for further amendment remembering that the whole of the property sought to be sold is really the entire mortgagee's interests which is after all the point which the Subordinate Judge seems to be particular about. With these observations I hold that no amendment of the plaint is necessary and direct that the suit be permitted to proceed as it is. I make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 47 and O. 1, R. 10 (2)—Parties to suit—Defendants exonerated on ground of misjoinder—Whether continue as parties—Duty of executing Court to consider judgment and pleadings—Persons shown to have been improperly impleaded—Proper procedure.

Where certain defendants are held to have been improperly impleaded as parties to a suit and the suit is on that ground dismissed against them, they are not defendants against whom a suit has been dismissed as is provided by S. 47, Civil Procedure Code. In such a case it is proper for the executing Court to consider not only the decree but also the judgment and the pleadings and see whether upon the facts of the case the parties, although the suit was dismissed against them, really remained parties to the suit.

Distinction between the case of dismissal of a suit because of the plaintiff abandoning his claim against the defendant and the case of a dismissal on account of misjoinder of parties pointed out.

Krishnappa v. Periaswami, (1916) I.L.R. 40 M. 964: 32 M.L.J. 532, approved.

It is the duty of a Trial Judge to strike out the name of a party improperly impleaded. It is quite a wrong procedure to dismiss the suit against him.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Madura, dated 20th day of March, 1928 and made in A.S. No. 208 of 1927, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Madura Taluk at Madura, dated 10th October, 1927 and made in M.P. No. 280 of 1927 in O.S. No. 348 of 1917, 2nd Additional District Munsif's Court, Madura.

Beasley, C. J.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—This case has been referred to us by our brother Jackson, J., because the question for decision by us has been the subject of conflicting decisions in *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*¹ and Sethu Konar v. Ramaswami Konar.²

The question before us arises out of proceedings in execution. The 2nd defendant in Original Suit No. 348 of 1917 on the file of the 2nd Additional District Munsif's Court of Madura is the appellant here. The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows. One Kaliappa Pillai was the original owner of the properties, the subject-matter of the suit. He left a widow and an adopted son Ramaswami Pillai. In 1889 the latter released the suit properties in favour of his adoptive mother. She sold the property in 1894 and between that date and 1909 there were different purchasers. In 1909 the appellant became the purchaser of the property and created a usufructuary mortgage in 1910 in favour of the 6th defendant. In 1906 Ramaswami Pillai executed a mortgage of some of the properties which mortgage was assigned to the present 1st respondent. In 1917 the 1st respondent filed a suit to enforce the mortgage and bring the properties to sale. Ramaswami's son was the 1st defendant and defendants 2 to 5 were impleaded in that suit and also the 6th defendant the usufructuary mortgagee. In that suit the 1st defendant was ex parte. The 2nd defendant claimed a title paramount by purchase and pleaded that he was not a necessary party to the suit. The District Munsif dismissed the suit as against defendants 2 to 6 but gave a decree against the 1st defendant. In the judgment he states as follows:—

"2nd defendant claims an independent title. He has endorsed on the plaint that he does not derive his title from the mortgagor but quite independently of him. Therefore, he is not a necessary party to the suit. The suit must be therefore dismissed with costs against defendants 2 to 6. Plaintiffs will get a decree against the other defendants in the suit."

In the decree also the suit was dismissed as against defendants 2 to 6. An execution petition was then presented by the plaintiff to bring the property to sale. No notice was given to the other defendants. He dispossessed the 6th defendant who was then in possession of the property. The appellant then presented an application to put the 6th defendant in possession of the property. The 1st respondent disputed the appellant's title on the merits and put him to proof of all the sales and purchases. The District Munsif held that the plaintiff (1st respondent) was not entitled to evict the defendants. In his order the District Munsif stated:

"The plaintiff is not entitled in execution of this decree to evict the 6th defendant or defendants 2 to 5."

The 1st respondent appealed to the District Judge at Madura, who held that the question of title as between the 1st respondent and defendants 2 to 6 should have been investigated and that since the defendants 2 to 6 were parties to the suit, the 1st respondent was barred by section 47, Civil Procedure Code, from instituting a separate suit, but that the application under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code could have been treated as a suit if the learned District Munsif considered it sufficiently complicated. The appellant's contention here is that the question of his title and the 6th defendant's title was not a matter which could be gone into in the execution proceedings.

The question is whether defendants 2 to 6 in the suit are, under the provisions of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, defendants against whom a suit has been dismissed and therefore parties to the suit. The contention of the appellant is that as the defendants were held not to have been properly impleaded in the suit and the suit on that ground was dismissed as against them, they are not defendants against whom a suit has been dismissed as is provided in section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and that there is a distinction between the dismissal of a suit on its merits and a dismissal through misjoinder of parties. Two views upon this matter have been taken. There is the broad view of the section taken in *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*¹ and the narrow view of it in *Sethu Konar v. Ramaswami Konar*². Before proceeding to deal with the cases upon this point, reference must be made to O. 1, R. 10 (2), Schedule I of the Civil Procedure Code which provides that the Court may at any stage of the proceedings order the name of any party improperly joined to be struck out. The District Munsif having found that defendants 2 to 6 had been improperly impleaded in the suit should have ordered their names to be struck out instead of dismissing the suit as against them. The broad view of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code is that it is proper for the Court in execution proceedings to consider not only the decree itself but the judgment and the pleadings and see whether upon the facts of the case the parties, although the suit was dismissed as against them, really remained parties to the suit. The narrow view of the section is that it is not appropriate to the executing Court to consider anything else but the fact that the suit was dismissed as against the defendants—no matter what the reasons were for such dismissal. That of course is placing the strictest and narrowest construction on section 47.

2. (1925) I.L.R. 49 M. 494: 50 M.L.J. 205.

Beasley, C. J.

In *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*¹ Ayling and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ., held that where a party to a mortgage suit, who sets up a title adverse to both the mortgagor and the mortgagee, has been exonerated from the suit on the ground of misjoinder and his claim has not been adjudicated upon in the suit, he does not remain a party to the suit for the purposes of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. The order of the Judge in the trial Court was an order exonerating the defendant with costs as he was an unnecessary party to the suit. It was argued in the appeal that notwithstanding this exoneration, he still continued to be a party to the suit and that the Lower Appellate Court should have gone into the question of his title. On page 966 in the judgment of the High Court it is stated:

"The exoneration in the present case having been on the ground of misjoinder we are of opinion that the party whose claim was not adjudicated upon does not remain a party to the suit for the purpose of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Exoneration from the suit may be due to various causes and the question whether a party remains on record for the purpose of section 47 in spite of such exoneration will depend upon the nature and scope of the order having regard to the pleadings and the reason which led to such dismissal or exoneration. To hold that in cases of misjoinder (and consequent refusal of the Court to adjudicate upon the particular matters in contest) the party whose claim was not adjudicated upon and who was exonerated remains a party to the suit would lead to the anomaly that the Court would be bound in execution proceedings to decide the very questions which it refused to determine in the suit."

And again at page 968:

"As pointed out in *Venkatapathi Naidu v. Subraya Mudali*³ the mere fact that the name of the exonerated party is not formally removed from the record pursuant to the order exonerating him would not affect the question as to whether he remains a party."

The case was referred to in *Sannamma v. Radhabhai*⁴, a decision of the Full Bench which held that where a person has been properly impleaded as one of the defendants in a suit but the suit is dismissed as against him on account of the plaintiff's election to abandon his case so far as it affected that defendant, such a person is a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed within section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

Beasley, C. J.

On page 424, Sir John Wallis, C.J., states:

"The case which came before the Court in *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*¹ of a misjoinder of causes of action and of the plaintiff being required to proceed with one cause of action only and the suit being dismissed as against the defendants who had been joined in respect of the other cause of action only, may possibly stand on a different footing, as to hold that the cause of action which the Court was prohibited from trying may be gone into in execution by virtue of section 47, goes far to defeat the prohibition of joinder, and such a construction of section 47 should, therefore, be avoided if it is possible to do so. As that question is not before us, I express no opinion upon it, and will only say that the proper course in these cases appears to be for the Court to exercise the power, which it now has under O. 1, R. 10 (2), of ordering at any stage of the proceedings, the name of a defendant improperly joined to be struck out, instead of dismissing the suit as against him. That will, as held by the Full Bench in Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma,⁵ have the effect of taking him out of the operation of section 47 which ought not to apply to him, seeing that he has no real concern with the suit."

Although Sir John Wallis does not definitely decide the point, it is obvious that he approved of the spirit of *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*¹ and he certainly has given very strong reasons for holding that the Bench in that case took the correct view.

I will now turn to *Sethu Konar v. Ramaswami Konar*² where a Bench of this Court took the opposite view to that taken in *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*¹. That was a suit for sale on a mortgage and a person claimed the property by a title paramount to that of the mortgagor and he was joined as a defendant. But the final decree merely stated that he was exonerated without removing his name from the record and it was held that he should be considered as continuing to be a party to the suit. The reason for deciding this case in that way was that the Bench considered that the ground on which a party is exonerated from the suit can never determine whether he continues or ceases to be a party but will depend entirely upon whether his name has been struck off from or retained on the record. This of course is applying section 47 in its strictest sense.

Another case on this point is Linga Aiyar v. Lakshmanan Chettiar,³ a decision of Odgers and Viswanatha Sastri, JJ. The 2nd defendant in that suit had his name by consent struck off by the District Munsif but his name was retained in the cause title in the decree which was finally drawn up and it was held that in spite of his name being struck off, he was a party to the suit within the meaning of section 47 and the explanation thereto, but it was stated that striking out is the proper procedure to be employed in the case of misjoinder, that in any other case the proper course is dismissal and that striking off of the name is not appropriate to a case of a party against whom the plaintiff does not wish to proceed further. In that case there was no question of a misjoinder of parties as the defendant was properly impleaded in the suit. Another case directly in point is *U Kala v. Ma Hnin U*¹ and there *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*² and *Sannaimma v. Radhabhai*³ were followed; and it was held that where a suit is dismissed against a person on the ground that he was wrongly joined as a party having no real concern with the suit, such a person does not remain a party to the suit for the purpose of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and that a more appropriate way, in case of misjoinder, is to strike out the name of the party under O. 1, R. 10 (2) of the Code so as to take him out of the operation of section 47.

The contrary view was taken in *Abdul Kasim v. Thambusami Pillai*⁴. There a defendant was exonerated by the decree in the suit with the result that the suit was dismissed as against him but his name was not actually removed from the record and it was held that he did not cease to be a party to the suit on that account. That was a decision of a Bench consisting of Oldfield and Krishnan, JJ. This case was referred to in *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*². No reason for the exoneration of the defendant is given either in the statement of the facts of the case or in the judgment which is a very short one. In *Venkataswami v. Chidambaram*⁵ it was held that a defendant whose name appears in the decree without having been struck off previously from the record is a party within the provisions of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. There the 4th defendant set up a title adverse to both the mortgagor and the mortgagee and was held not to be a necessary party and ordered to be struck out of the suit. The order was:

"4th defendant is not a necessary party and is exonerated with costs." The Bench consisting of Sadasiva Aiyar and Phillips, JJ., thought that section 47 was perfectly plain in its terms. In *Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma*⁶ it was held that a party defendant exonerated from the suit, the suit being dismissed against him, is a party to the suit. This case also was referred to in *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*² but was held distinguishable because it did not appear to be a case of exoneration of a party by reason of misjoinder of causes of action.

Mr. Srinivasagopalachari in the course of his argument on behalf of the respondent contended that the construction placed upon section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code in *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*¹ ought not to be placed upon it because of the inconvenience it would cause to the litigant public and those who have to advise them and because it would put an unreasonable burden upon the executing Court if that Court had to consider not only the decree but the judgment and the pleadings in the suit instead of merely taking the decree itself. I can see no force in this latter contention as it is the duty of a Court not only to refer to the decree but also the judgment and the pleadings. In the case before us no inconvenience could have been occasioned by this procedure because the judgment of the District Munsif upon this point is contained in a very few lines. He further contended that there can be no distinction between the case of a defendant against whom the plaintiff abandons his claim and the suit is accordingly dismissed as against him and a person who has the suit dismissed against him on account of misjoinder. In my view, the two cases are quite different. In the former case he may be a proper party to the suit but yet the plaintiff either does not wish to take a decree against him or feels that he is unable to prove his claim and he is not a person to whom O. 1, R. 10 (2) applies. In the latter case, on the other hand, he is a person who ought never to have been made a party to the suit at all and not having been properly impleaded, the plain duty of the Court is to strike his name out. If the respondent's contention is correct, then it means that, although the appellant ought not to have been made a party to the suit and the District Munsif held that he had been improperly impleaded and instead of striking his name out adopted the wrong procedure in dismissing the suit as against him, he is to be placed in a worse position than a party in respect of whom the Court does adopt the correct procedure. It seems to me to be a contradiction to say that a person who is held at the trial of the suit not to be a proper party to the suit remains still a party to the suit. I am clearly of the opinion that *Krishnappa v. Periaswami*¹ was correctly decided and the appeal to the Lower Appellate Court was incompetent. The appeal must accordingly be allowed with costs.

I cannot leave this case without pointing out that it is the duty of the Trial Judge to strike out the name of a party improperly impleaded. It is quite a wrong procedure to dismiss the suit as against him.

Penal Code (XLV of 1860), S. 302—Sentence—Age of accused—Murder not wholly deliberate or cold-blooded—Offence committed under recent provocation—Lesser sentence of transportation for life.

Beyond the provisions of Ss. 82 and 83, the Penal Code does not say anything about there being any age-limit for the capital sentence. In cases where the murder has been deliberately planned and is of a cold-blooded nature, whatever the age of the accused, provided his case does not come under S. 22, Madras Children Act, 1920, the death sentence will be the appropriate one. But where the murder cannot be said to be wholly deliberate or cold-blooded, and is shown to be the result of recent provocation, which in an immature mind might assume exaggerated importance, the lesser sentence of transportation for life and not the capital sentence may be the more appropriate one.

Trial referred by the Court of Session of the Coimbatore Division for confirmation of the sentence of death passed upon the appellant in Case No. 4 of the Calendar for 1930.

The Public Prosecutor (L. H. Bewes) on behalf of the Crown.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The accused has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Coimbatore of the offence of murder and sentenced to death.

The charge against him was that at about 11 o'clock on the 20th of October last he stabbed one Abdul Muthu in the streets of Tiruppur and inflicted upon him seven incised wounds three of which were fatal. The man after running for some distance collapsed and died practically on the spot. The eye-witnesses to the attack are P.Ws. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 12. That it was the accused who so attacked the deceased has not been seriously disputed by the learned counsel for the accused, although he would suggest that the series of blows occurred in quicker succession than the eye-witnesses would say, and perhaps it may be allowed that on the medical evidence it is a little difficult to imagine how the deceased was able to run about 180 yards after receiving the blows which the medical certificate describes, and it may be that the attack was something more rapid and not quite so deliberate as the eye-witnesses would make out. The offence prima facie is clearly murder. There can be no doubt that the person who inflicted with a knife such fatal wounds on the deceased certainly intended nothing short of inflicting death. We cannot find any extenuating circumstance which would bring the offence to anything less than murder. There is no question of self-defence raised, nor is there any such case appearing in the prosecution evidence. It has been suggested that the accused had a certain amount of provocation, but the only provocation that has been spoken to by prosecution witnesses occurred a couple of hours earlier than the offence and cannot, therefore, easily be described as grave and sudden. The only defence put forward by the accused is that the case is a false one and has been got up by his enemies. But there is really no motive elicited why the eye-witnesses should lend themselves to a false case against the accused. There can be no doubt that the learned Sessions Judge is correct in convicting the accused of the offence of murder, and the only question which remains is whether the capital sentence in the circumstances was an appropriate one.

The accused is stated to be aged about 15. Both the committing Court and the Sessions Judge say that he looks more, that he looks about 18; so far as the records show, it may be taken that he is about 15 years of age, but his age has not been definitely determined. A plea has been put forward that in the case of a youth the capital sentence is inappropriate. To the proposition put thus broadly we cannot assent. Beyond the provisions of sections 82 and 83, the Penal Code does not say anything about there being any age-limit for the capital sentence; and, in cases where the murder has been deliberately planned and is essentially of a cold-blooded and contemptible nature, we think that usually, whatever the age of the accused might be, provided his case does not come under section 22, Madras Children Act (IV of 1920), the death sentence would be the appropriate one. This Court has, for example, in cases where the accused had been convicted of decoying away children and cutting their throats, or drowning them, or putting them away, in order to possess themselves of a few rupees worth of jewels, held that, in spite of the murderer being a youth (about 18 years old), the capital sentence would be the only appropriate sentence. But where the murder cannot be said to be wholly deliberate and cold-blooded, and where there may be a certain amount of legitimate provocation rankling, which in an immature mind might assume an exaggerated importance, we think that the capital sentence might in certain cases not be the appropriate one. In the present case, apart from the question whether the accused is entitled to the benefit of the provisions of section 22 of the Madras Children Act, we have evidence that within about a couple of hours before the occurrence the accused and the deceased had been quarrelling, and that the deceased, who is described by the prosecution witnesses themselves as a bully and the terror of the village, had assaulted this boy and had given him several blows; about two hours later the accused retaliated by stabbing the deceased in the manner described. There is, therefore, in the present case this amount of recent provocation which justifies us in describing the murder as not deliberately cold-blooded and inherently vicious. In these circumstances we think that the adequate sentence will be the lesser sentence of transportation for life.

We therefore reduce the capital sentence to one of transportation for life.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff is the appellant. On the strength of a lease of immoveable property (lands) granted to him by defendants 1 and 2 by means of the registered Marapat, dated 28th December, 1919 (the original of Ex. B), which was executed by the plaintiff to defendants 1 and 2, he filed the present suit to recover possession of those lands from defendants 3 and 4, who are in occupation thereof, as lessees under the tarwad of 1st defendant, under a renewed lease granted by the 14th defendant as Karnavan on 13th January, 1920, as per Ex. I. Both the Lower Courts have held that the plaintiff has not acquired a valid right to the suit property under the lease set up by him and dismissed his suit.

The 1st defendant belongs to a rich Moplah tarwad. In 1918 and 1919, the then Karnavan, Makki Keyi allotted some properties of the tarwad for the maintenance of 1st defendant (a minor) under the deeds Exs. III and IV. The suit lands are comprised in Ex. IV. There is no doubt that when the melcharth was given to the plaintiff as per Ex. B, dated 28th December, 1919, the 1st defendant who was a minor, was the sole owner thereof. The 2nd defendant is her husband. The Marupat or the lease deed (Ex. B) was executed by the plaintiff (lessee) to defendants 1 and 2, but the 2nd defendant had no right or interest in the suit property, and was not therefore competent to grant a lease of the same. The custom alleged by the plaintiff, whereby the husband of a Moplah woman has the right to manage the properties given to her for maintenance, in order to make out the validity of the lease in question, treating it as one granted by the husband (2nd defendant), has been found by the Lower Appellate Court to be unproved. I accept that finding as correct. The question therefore has to be decided on the footing that the lease in question was granted to the plaintiff by the 1st defendant (the owner of the suit property) when she was a minor. Is such a lease valid and enforceable?

A lease of immoveable property, as defined in section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act, is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property, made for a certain time or in perpetuity, in consideration of payment of rent in cash or kind. A lease is necessarily a transfer of an interest in immoveable property by the lessor in favour of the lessee. A minor is not competent to contract, and, under section 7 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is only a person competent to contract and entitled to transferable property, that can transfer such property, either wholly or in part to another person. Any transfer of such an interest by the 1st defendant (a minor) by the transaction of lease relied on by the plaintiff would, therefore, be void. A sale is a transfer of ownership in immoveable property, in exchange for a price. A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in immoveable property, in consideration of a loan, for securing the repayment of it. There is no doubt that a sale by a minor, and a mortgage by a minor, are invalid, and unenforceable. In *Mahori Bibee v. Dhurmodas Ghose*¹ their Lordships of the Privy Council have held, that not only is a mortgage made by a minor void, but even on a decree being given declaring the mortgage invalid, the lender was not entitled to the repayment of the money advanced to the minor under that invalid mortgage. It is not conceivable how a lease by a minor can be valid, while a sale or a mortgage by a minor is void, if regard be had to the fact that just as in the case of sale or mortgage, there is a transfer of an interest in immoveable property, namely, the right to enjoy such property in a lease by the lessor to the lessee.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar for the appellant made a strenuous endeavour to differentiate a lease by a minor, from a sale or a mortgage by a minor, inasmuch as the Marupat of the lease deed (Ex. B) was executed not by the minor (1st defendant) but by the plaintiff (lessee) to the 1st defendant (lessor). It is true that in the case of a sale or a mortgage, the deed should be executed by the seller, or the mortgagor. But in the case of a lease section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act does not expressly state by whom the registered instrument should be executed, the lessor, or the lessee, or both. It has been held by a Full Bench of this High Court in *Syed Ajam Sahib v. Ananthanarayana Aiyar*² that the registered instrument referred to in that section need not necessarily be an instrument signed by the lessor, and such a lease may be created by a registered instrument signed by the lessee and accepted by the lessor. The fundamental conception of a lease involves the transfer of an interest in immoveable property by the lessor to the lessee, and if a valid lease can be created even by a registered instrument signed by the lessee and accepted by the lessor, it must be deemed to have effected a transfer of an interest in immoveable property by the lessor to the lessee. If by reason of the lessor's minority, he is incompetent to make the transfer at all, the fact that the instrument is not signed or executed by him, but only to him cannot make any difference. By necessary implication, it amounts to a transfer by the lessor (in this case, a minor) and if it should be contended, that because Ex. B is not signed or executed by the 1st defendant, there was no transfer by the minor, it would follow, that there was no lease at all. It seems to me clear that the invalidity of the lease in question by reason of the minority of the lessor cannot be got over by the circumstance that the instrument Ex. B was executed to her, and not by her. A lease is essentially a bilateral contract. On the part of the lessor, there must be a transfer of an interest in immoveable property by him and on the part of the lessee, there must be a promise to pay the rent. These are reciprocal considerations. In the present case, the lease deed Ex. B though executed by the lessee (plaintiff) expressly recites "you have hereby demised to me the said two items of property". It means, that under this deed executed by me and accepted by you, you have transferred the right to enjoy the two items to me. Such a transfer by a minor, who is incompetent to make the transfer, is now sought to be enforced by the plaintiff as the basis of his claim to recover possession of the properties from defendants 3 and 4. This case has, in my opinion, no close analogy to a case of a sale in favour of a minor who has already paid the price, or a mortgage in favour of a minor who has already advanced the loan. The Full Bench decision in *Raghavachariar v. Srinivasaraghavachariar*³ deals with such a mortgage in favour of a minor. The observations in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in that case seem to be quite in consonance with the contention of the respondents in respect of the lease in question. There is a very elaborate discussion in the judgment of Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., in that case, and reference was made to several passages in that judgment by the learned Advocate for the appellant. After a careful consideration, I am unable to find any definite pronouncement in that judgment for holding that the lease in the present case relied on by the plaintiff is valid and enforceable. I agree with the Lower Appellate Court's view on this point.

The dismissal of the plaintiff's suit is therefore correct, and this second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860), Ss. 143, 144 and 149—Criminal Procedure Code, Ss. 233 and 235—Persons assembled with the common object of shooting and looting—Whether members of an unlawful assembly—Whether the various acts of which the accused were found guilty formed one transaction—Preparation whether punishable.

Twenty to thirty persons armed with guns and sticks came with the common object of shooting one S and looting his house. There ensued a stampede in which one of the persons was shot through and another was mortally wounded and died subsequently of it. The accused were all found guilty of being members of an unlawful assembly under S. 143 of the Indian Penal Code and those that fired being armed as they were with deadly weapons were found guilty under S. 149 and accordingly two were convicted of murder and one for attempt at murder.

Held, (1) that since the accused formed themselves into a body with the intention of looting and shooting one S and frightening away any one who tried to prevent them, the whole affair from the formation to the disruption of this assembly seemed obviously to be one transaction and hence there was no misjoinder in contravention of S. 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code;

(2) that after people had formed themselves into an unlawful assembly and decided upon their common object, preparation towards that common object was prosecution or following up and if the preparation happened to be an offence, then they were equally liable.

Unless the impugned procedure was one that was not only prohibited by the Code but also worked actual injustice to the accused, it could not be said that there had been a failure of justice.

Nugent Grant and U. Somasundaram for accused.

The Public Prosecutor (L. H. Bewes) for the Crown.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The sixteen appellants do not dispute the Lower Court's findings of fact.

On 11th April, 1929, at Khansapuram, 20 to 30 persons came from the north armed with guns and sticks with the common object of shooting Sangiah Tevan and looting his house. When they were 50 yards off the house, one Sundara Tevan, P.W. 10, tried to dissuade them, and Krishna Tevan, P.W. 11, who belongs to Sangiah's faction, abused them. Krishna Tevan was hit on the head by accused 13, and then two more of the opposite faction, Alagu and Sangiah, ran up. The 1st appellant shot Alagu, and the third shot Sangiah. Then the fourth fired into seven persons who came to help them, after which there was a general stampede. Alagu was shot through his heart and died immediately. Sangiah had his leg broken and died of gangrene on the 14th.

The learned Judge has found that the shooting and the assault upon Krishnan were the sudden outbreaks of individual members of the assembly, and therefore presumably were not in prosecution of its common object. Accordingly he has acquitted all the appellants of rioting. But he has found them all guilty of being members of an unlawful assembly under section 143, Indian Penal Code, and inasmuch as the men who fired (appellants 1, 3 and 4) undoubtedly had guns, he has found all guilty, either directly, or constructively by the provision of section 149, of being armed with deadly weapons while being members of an unlawful assembly, the offence under section 144, Indian Penal Code.

Accused 1 and 3 are found guilty of murder, section 302, Indian Penal Code, and accused 4 guilty of attempted murder, section 307, Indian Penal Code.

Accused 13 is found guilty under section 323. It is argued by Mr. Nugent Grant that none of those convictions can stand because the two murders, the attempted murder and the hurt were several and independent transactions which had no real connexion with the unlawful assembly. For every distinct offence of which any person is accused there must be a separate charge (section 233), unless they are so connected together as to form the same transaction (section 235), and the misjoinder of charges in this case has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

Ramaraja
Tevan,
In re.

To this plea there would seem to be three sound answers. In the first place it cannot be said that there has been a failure of justice. Supposing that the murders and assaults were quite unconnected with the object of the unlawful assembly, a Court which had joined them all together in one trial might well have been led to attribute to the assembly force and violence of which it was entirely innocent, and so might have found it guilty of rioting; and had this one terminated in a conviction of rioting it would be impossible to say that the irrelevant consideration of the extraneous offences had not influenced the mind of the Court. But the charge of rioting was dismissed, and it must be said that the mind of the Court, though dangerously exposed to infection, proved absolutely immune.

No doubt ever since the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in *N. A. Subramania Aiyar v. King-Emperor*¹, it has been the general practice to assume that, if a mandatory provision of the Code has been infringed in framing the charge, the Court must of necessity be held to have failed in administering justice to the accused. Section 537 affords no real ground for any such assumption, and the Judicial Committee itself, when it had occasion to refer to *N. A. Subramania Aiyar v. King-Emperor*¹ in *Abdul Rahman v. King-Emperor*², clearly indicated that the impugned procedure must be one that is not only prohibited by the Code, but also works actual injustice to the accused. In the latter case the Code was clearly infringed, but the curative provision of section 537 was considered a sufficient remedy.

In the second place, whatever conclusion was finally arrived at by the learned Judge, it is clear that before the evidence was heard it must have been a very open question whether the shooting was or was not in prosecution of the common object. It is a question of degree. If the men who protested had been ranged on the doorstep of Sangiah's house, it would be hard to say that shooting them was not in prosecution of the looting. What if they were five, ten, fifty yards away? It is a matter that could only be decided after a most careful consideration of the evidence as a whole; and it cannot be said that to have accused these persons of shooting in prosecution of the common object was in any way

2. (1926) L.R. 54 I.A. 96; I.L.R. 5 R. 53; 52 M.L.J. 585 (P.C.).

Ramaraja
Tevan,

frivolous. If the charge could be postponed till after the conviction, a more perfect symmetry might be attained, but unfortunately that cannot be; and the charge of necessity must be founded upon the accusation (cf. *Abdul Salim v. Emperor*³). It cannot be said therefore that there has been any misjoinder in contravention of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code.

In the third place, even supposing that the ultimate finding governs the charge, so that the Court was precluded from charging as though the shooting had been in prosecution of the common object, still it cannot be said that the whole affair was not in the course of the same transaction. The accused formed themselves into a body with the intention of looting and shooting Sangiah Tevan and frightening away any one who tried to prevent them; otherwise, there is no explanation for such a display of force. It has never been held that in a transaction all the persons engaged must have a common object. Taking the transaction to be the adventure of private war upon which the appellants embarked on April 11th, a historian of that transaction would hardly omit all mention of the shooting as belonging to a totally different transaction. As Benson, J., observes in *Choragudi Venkatadri v. Emperor*⁴, "it is neither necessary nor advisable to attempt to define the expression 'the same transaction' which the Legislature has left undefined." Each particular case must be tried by common sense and common knowledge of language, and if these tests be applied, the whole affair from the formation to the disruption of this assembly seems obviously to be one transaction.

Therefore, the plea of misjoinder is not sustainable.

It is next argued that the appellants who are not found to have been armed cannot be constructively held guilty under section 144 by the provision of section 149. There can be no doubt that if a member of an unlawful assembly, liable under section 143, Indian Penal Code, to six months' rigorous imprisonment, is armed with a deadly weapon, he is punishable with two years' rigorous imprisonment under section 144. Therefore, being so armed is a thing made punishable by the Penal Code and, consequently, under section 40, an offence.

Now, is the offence so committed by the member of the unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly? Prosecution, in plain English, is following up. They assembled and formed the common object of shooting a man. What did they do to follow it up? Some of them came to the assembly with guns, or stayed in the assembly with guns, and at any rate took care not to be parted from their guns. That seems to be clear following up. Mr. Grant would say that it was mere preparation, but after people have formed themselves into an unlawful assembly, and decided upon their common object, preparation towards that common object is prosecution or following up, and if the preparation happens to be an offence, then they are all equally liable. Suppose they burst in a door, that is not mere innocent preparation for the intended looting. It must be held therefore that this plea also fails.

3. (1921) I.L.R. 49 C. 573 at 596.

4. (1910) I.L.R. 33 M. 502: 20 M.L.J. 220.

Ramaraja
Tevan,
In re.

There remain two pleas ad misericordiam on behalf of the murderers sentenced to death. It is clear from the medical evidence that accused 1 shot Alagu Tevan with various pellets through the heart and thigh. He may be taken to have aimed at his stomach and it cannot be said that he did not intend his death. Accused 3 shot Sangiah five inches below the knee and shattered the bones. He had said, "why do you shoot him who was keeping quiet," and for that innocent protest was shot. Mr. Nugent Grant says that the murderer only hoped to maim him, only hoped perhaps to cripple him for life. It was a murderous act without the smallest justification and it resulted in murder. We see no reason to interfere.

It cannot be said that any of the appellants has been treated with undue severity, and we dismiss their appeals.

In 1899 a Hindu widow sold certain property left by her husband and in 1905 she adopted a minor boy. The latter died in 1909 while still a minor and the adoptive mother, who succeeded him, died in 1921 without disputing her previous alienation. A reversioner having instituted a suit in 1923 to recover possession of the property sold,

Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation, because time commenced to run neither from the date of the adoption, nor from the death of the adopted boy, but only from the death of the widow.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant in this second appeal which arises out of a suit filed by him as a reversioner to the estate of one Nilamraju Butchayya for possession of the suit property. This property was by Ex. XIV sold in the year 1889 to one Nilamraju Bajamma by Ademma, the adoptive mother of Butchayya. The alienee is the 14th defendant in the suit. In 1905 Ademma adopted Butchayya, then a minor boy. He died in 1909 being then still a minor, as has been found by the District Munsif, although there is no finding upon the point of minority by the Lower Appellate Court. On his adoption he divested his adoptive mother of the property and it became invested in him. After his death his adoptive mother got his estate as his legal representative. She died in 1921 and the appellant then filed this suit to set aside the sale under Ex. XIV. It will thus be seen that the suit was filed fourteen years after the death of the adopted son Butchayya.

In the District Munsif's Court the claim was held not to be barred; and *Sreeramulu v. Kristamma*¹ was there relied upon. That case decided that where a Hindu widow alienates immovable property belonging to her husband's estate and then adopts a son, the son cannot sue to recover possession of the property until the termination of her widowhood. A twelve years' period of limitation was under Art. 141 of the Limitation Act given and time was reckoned from the date of her death. In the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court it is pointed out that *Sreeramulu v. Kristamma*¹, which was decided in 1902, must be taken to be overruled by a Full Bench case in 1917 *Vaidyanatha Sastri v. Savithri Ammal*². In that case a Hindu widow alienated certain properties for a purpose not binding on the inheritance and thereafter adopted a son and it was held by the Full Bench that the alienation was not binding on the adopted son and that he could sue, during the lifetime of the widow, to set aside the alienation and recover the properties so alienated, his cause of action arising from the time of his adoption. In the course of the judgment of Sir John Wallis, C.J., reference is made to *Bonomali Roy v. Jagat Chandra Bhowmick*³, a decision of the Privy Council. Sir John Wallis says at page 85 as follows:—

“Their Lordships, however, appear to have held expressly that the adopted boy's cause of action for the recovery of the alienated property arose on the date of his adoption, and that time began to run against him in 1856 on his attaining majority, and that the suit became barred in twelve years under Regulation II of 1803 and Act XIV of 1859.” •

The facts in *Bonomali Roy v. Jagat Chandra Bhowmick*³ were that in 1837 the widow of the owner of a zamindari granted a lease to the predecessors of the defendants as manager for the widow of her adopted son. The latter widow in 1846 adopted a son, who was the father of the plaintiff. He attained majority in 1856 and died in 1880. The suit was brought in 1897 to set aside the lease and it was held that if the lease was void the period of limitation ran from its date and if it was voidable only by the adopted son his right of action arose on his adoption and time would begin to run against him from the date when he attained his majority in 1856. There were, therefore, two dates taken by their Lordships, namely, the date of the adoption and the date of the attainment of majority. With regard to the former they held that the right of action arose then and for the purposes of limitation they held that limitation commenced to run from the latter date.

Applying that judgment to this case, it is quite clear that the cause of action arose in 1905, the date of the adoption, and that had the adoptive son lived, the starting point of limitation would be the date when he attained his majority. But he died, as before stated, a minor. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that it is clear from Vaidyanatha Sastri v. Savithri

*Ammal*², that the suit became barred by limitation twelve years from the date of Butchayya's adoption. That is certainly not the way I read that case and is certainly not what the Privy Council decided in *Bonomali Roy v. Jagat Chandra Bhowmick*³ for the reasons I have already given. If the sale had been void, then the starting point of limitation would have been the date of the sale, but this sale was not void but voidable. The learned Government Pleader contends on the other hand that the starting point of limitation was the date of the adoption. It was on that date he argues that possession commenced to be adverse because the adoptive mother had ceased to have any right to the property she had become divested of and it had vested entirely in the adopted son. But with great respect to that argument, I cannot see how the fact that she had become divested of the property by reason of the adoption can affect the question of limitation. The adopted son could, through a guardian, have claimed possession of the property. He had his cause of action but he was a minor and subject to a disability. He was not bound to sue and the period of limitation is not abridged by reason of section 6 of the Limitation Act as is contended for by the learned Government Pleader who argues that by reason of that section and section 8 time ran from the date of the adoption but an extension of three years after the attainment of majority is all that is given to the minor. With great respect I do not agree with that contention and it is certainly not the view taken by Sir John Wallis, C.J., in *Vaidyanatha Sastri v. Savithri Ammal*² or by the Privy Council in *Bonomali Roy v. Jagat Chandra Bhowmick*³. I must, therefore, hold that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that time commenced to run against the adopted son from 1905. He died a minor, his adoptive mother succeeded to the estate and as regards her I think it is clear that she could not be in a position to dispute her previous alienation. She died in 1921 and the present appellant filed the suit in 1923.

In my view, the suit was not barred by limitation and this appeal must be allowed with costs and the case remanded to the Lower Appellate Court to decide all the other questions raised in the appeal and undecided by reason of the decision that the suit was barred by limitation.

PRESENT:—MR. JUSTICE RAMESAM.

P. Varada Pillai .. *Petitioner (Defendant)

v.

P. V. Thillai Govindaraja Pillai .. Respondent (Plaintiff).

Procedure—Suit, not cognizable by a District Munsif's Court—Dismissal—Revision—High Court's order—Plaint amended—Re-presentation to the same Court—Court-fee.

Varada Pillai

v.

Thillai
Govindaraja Pillai.

A suit was filed by the plaintiff in the District Munsif's Court and objection was taken by the defendants that the suit as framed did not lie in the Munsif's Court. On that being decided, against, it was taken in revision to the High Court, where that objection was upheld, though His Lordship observed that the plaintiff might try his chance at an amendment of the plaint in the Lower Court. The plaintiff applied to the District Munsif for getting the plaint amended, but was refused, and his plaint was returned to him. Subsequently, he himself amended it by striking off one relief and re-presented it to the District Munsif. The District Munsif held in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants objected to the procedure, namely, the amendment by the plaintiff and the re-presentation to the same Court.

Held, that the Lower Court's order in accepting the plaint was right, Karumbayira Ponnappundan v. Authimoola Ponnappundan, (1909) I.L.R. 33 M. 262, relied on.

Kannusami Pillai v. Jagathambal, (1918) 35 M.L.J. 27; I.L.R. 41 M. 701; Ramachandrayya v. Venkataratnam, (1925) 22 L.W. 582; Muthu alias Gurusami Nayaken v. Muthu Nayaken, (1927) 54 M.L.J. (N.R.C.) 12 and Govindaraju Naicker v. Kassim Sahib, (1927) 54 M.L.J. 409, referred to.

On the question whether the old Court-fee could be utilised,

Held, that as the Court-fee paid was found by the Lower Court to be right and as the objection to the Court-fee did not also lead to any objection as to jurisdiction, the High Court could not interfere in revision.

Muhammad Ellaiyas v. Rahima Bee, (1928) 56 M.L.J. 302, followed.

Petitions under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the orders respectively of the Court of the District Munsif of Poonamallee, dated 26th July, 1928 and 9th October, 1928, in Original Suit No. 173 of 1928.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT. C. R. P. No. 1771 of 1928.—The facts out of which this Civil Revision Petition arises may be stated as follows. The suit was filed in the District Munsif's Court of Poonamallee. An objection was taken by the defendant that the suit as framed did not lie in the District Munsif's Court. The District Munsif decided against the objection. On a revision petition filed in the High Court, my brother, Jackson, J., held in C. R. P. No. 1263 of 1927, that the objection was well founded and the suit as framed did not lie before the District Munsif. He observed in the course of his judgment that the plaintiff might try his chance at amendment in the Lower Court. When the case went back to the District Munsif the plaintiff applied for amendment of the plaint, he undertaking to amend the plaint in such a way as to make it cognizable by the District Munsif. The District Munsif rejected this application. He passed an order on the plaint returning it to be presented to the proper Court, and the plaintiff got the plaint into his own hands. He amended the plaint himself by striking off one relief and re-presented it before the District Munsif alleging that after the changes he had made it would lie before the District Munsif. The District Munsif now held in his favour though the defendant took the objection that the plaintiff was not entitled to amend the plaint and re-present it in the same Court. The defendant presents this revision petition against the order of the District Munsif.

The learned advocate for the petitioner contends that the effect of the order returning the plaint to be presented to the proper Court is that unless he presents it to the Court which is the proper Court for the original plaint the Court-fees cannot be any more utilised, that if the plaintiff makes further changes in his plaint it is practically a fresh plaint and if the plaintiff wants to file such a fresh plaint he may do so on payment of fresh Court-fees and the old Court-fees cannot be utilised for filing the plaint with alterations before the original Court. The District Munsif relied on *Karumbayira Ponnappundan v. Authimoola Ponnappundan*¹ for holding that the plaint will lie in the circumstances. I think the decision of the District Munsif is right. In *Karumbayira Ponnappundan v. Authimoola Ponnappundan*¹ the order was: "The plaint should be returned to the proper Court after valuation had been corrected." In that case the valuation had been improperly made. If it was properly made the suit will lie in a different Court. The plaintiff after taking back the plaint struck off some of the properties and re-presented it before the District Munsif, who admitted it. It was held by Abdur Rahim, J., that the order is right. At the end of the judgment he observed: "I do not think that when an amendment is made by the plaintiff and sanctioned by the Court, it can be said that the Court had no power to allow or accept the amendment. As will be seen from other cases which will be presently referred to even this condition does not seem to be necessary. It seems to me that in all such cases the plaintiff having got the plaint into his own hands can make such alterations in the plaint as he pleases so as to make the case cognizable by the same Court and re-present it. There is no question of the Court allowing or accepting the amendment. If, after amendment, the plaint lies before that Court, the Court is bound to accept it. On Letters Patent Appeal the order of Abdur Rahim, J., was confirmed by Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ. This case was relied on in *Kannusami Pillai v. Jagathambal*² and the learned Judges held that once a Court holds that it has no jurisdiction over a suit, it ought not to permit an amendment and Sadasiva Aiyar, J., distinguished the decision in *Karumbayira Ponnappundan v. Authimoola Ponnappundan*¹. This decision shows that there is no question of a Court directing an amendment or allowing the amendment or accepting the amendment. The Court has no business to deal with the amendment. It is the party that makes the alterations and presents the plaint. The point came up again in *Ramachandrayya v. Venkataratnam*³. Odgers, J., after some hesitation found that the two decisions in *Karumbayira Ponnappundan v. Authimoola Ponnappundan*¹ and *Kannusami Pillai v. Jagathambal*² are reconcilable and I agree with him that they are reconcilable. The point again came up before Devadoss, J., in *Manikyam v. Sreeramulu*⁴. He there pointed out that the proper course for the Court to take is not to direct amendments so as to make the suit cognizable but to return the plaint leaving the party to make the amendment. All these cases show that the course pursued by the District Munsif is right. Two decisions are referred to by the learned Advocate for the petitioner. One is *Muthu alias Gurusami Nayaken v. Muthu Nayaken*⁵ and the other case *Govindaraju Naicker v. Kassim Sahib*⁶ is in the same volume, page 409. But these are cases where the Court granted an amendment after holding that it had no jurisdiction. It was held that the order was improper. These are like *Kannusami Pillai v. Jagathambal*². I think that the Lower Court's order is right. The petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

C. R. P. No. 110 of 1929.—In this case after the order of the District Munsif in the other revision petition was passed the defendant still objected that the Court-fee paid is not a proper Court-fee. He repeated his objection that the old Court-fee should not be utilised. The latter objection is really covered by the judgment in the former case. As to the former objection as to what the proper amount of Court-fee is, the District Munsif found that the Court-fee paid was right and I may observe that the objection to Court-fee did not also lead to any objection as to jurisdiction. That being the case I am at present content to follow the decision in Muhammad Ellaiyas v. Rahima Bee. This revision is dismissed with costs. Pleader's fees Rs. 10 and all other costs.

C. R. P. No. 708 of 1929.—This is a revision petition by the plaintiff against the order of the District Munsif refusing the amendment. On the reasoning given in the judgment in the other revision petition his order is right. The petition is therefore dismissed.

Easements Act (V of 1882), Ss. 5 and 13, cls. (e) and (f)—Easement of necessity—Right of way—Existence of other means of access—Apparent and continuous easement—Right of way over formed and metalled road—Language of Indian enactment being clear—Reference to English Law—Permissibility.

Under S. 13 of the Easements Act in cases of partition if an easement is one of necessity, a person to whose share certain property falls is entitled to the easement apart from any question of its being apparent or continuous. An easement of necessity can, however, only arise when the property cannot be used at all without the easement, and not where the easement is merely necessary for the reasonable or more convenient enjoyment of the property. Thus a right of way over a road cannot be claimed as an easement of necessity when there is another means of access to the property.

Krishnamangai v. Marraju, (1905) I.L.R. 28 M. 495: 15 M.L.J. 255 and Sukhdev v. Kedar Nath, (1911) I.L.R. 33 A. 467, relied on.

If the easement is not one of necessity but is merely necessary for enjoying the share of the property as it was enjoyed when the partition took effect, then such an easement should be apparent and continuous. A right of way over a formed and metalled road is a discontinuous easement though it is apparent, and consequently cannot pass under S. 13, cl. (f) of the Easements Act.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff for a declaration that she has a right of way over a road called the "Circular Road" leading to the premises known as the "Uplands House" in Waltair. The Rajah of Kurupam, who was the owner of this property, died leaving the plaintiff, his daughter, the defendant and the Zamindar of Kurupam, his sons. After his death the property was partitioned between the plaintiff, the defendant and his brother. The plaintiff got the block marked A in the plan annexed to the plaint. The property is a very extensive one. According to the plan, there is what is called a Circular Road leading from the Beach Road to the main building which, according to the evidence, was being used as a means of access to the building during the lifetime of the Rajah of Kurupam. On the north, there is a Municipal Road and the suit property abuts that road. According to the evidence, there was a way leading from that road to this building which was used for the purpose of carrying materials, when the temple in the compound was built about the year 1902. This road was not subsequently used except as servants' entrance. It is, however, clear from the plan that so far as the plaintiff's portion is concerned, there is a mode of access to it from the northern side and it cannot be said that the right to use the road, known as the Circular Road, from the beach side is an easement of necessity in the sense that there could be no reasonable mode of access to the portion which fell to the share of the plaintiff except through the road now in dispute. The plaintiff's claim is that the road of which she claims easement is a continuous, well-formed, gravelled and metalled road leading from the Beach Road into the bungalow compound, partly through the defendant's and partly through her share, and that this road has always been the only road by which access was had from the Beach Road into the bungalow and was used and enjoyed for this purpose from the time of construction of the house by the owners of the "Uplands House", the predecessors-in-title and interest of the plaintiff and the defendant and the Zamindar of Kuruppam, and by them also until the date of partition in the year 1920.

In paragraph III (d) the plaintiff says:

"By virtue of the partition and even otherwise by implication of law and common sense, the plaintiff is entitled to the free and uninterrupted user of the said road by her and her representatives, servants, etc., in the same manner in which it was being enjoyed prior to the partition and the same is reasonable, necessary and essential for the proper enjoyment of the portion of the house and grounds which fell to the plaintiff's share as it was being enjoyed prior to the partition."

She says that the defendant obstructed her use of the road.

In paragraph (f) the plaintiff says:

"The Beach Road is the most important road in the whole town, and the usual, customary and constant approach, ingress to and egress from the 'Uplands House' has always been from the said road and the value of the plaintiff's share of the house depends substantially upon the existence of such right of user of the road leading from the Beach Road into the 'Uplands House'. The denial of such right, or interference therewith will not only highly inconvenience the plaintiff and prejudice the reasonable and proper enjoyment of the house and grounds by her but will as well affect seriously their value."

In paragraph (g) she states:

"The plaintiff is also entitled to the said right as an easement of necessity."

The defendant denied the plaintiff's right to use the road either by virtue of the partition or on any of the other grounds alleged in the plaint. According to him, a portion of the property marked in the plan and measuring about 44 cents which did not originally fall to the plaintiff's share was under the direction of the arbitrators given to the plaintiff on partition in order to allow her means of access to her portion from the North Road because the defendant refused to allow her access over the road now in question. He denied that the use of this road was necessary or passed to the plaintiff by implication of law. He says that any user of this road after partition was by his consent. He says that the plaintiff has access to her bungalow from the Municipal Road on the north.

The Subordinate Judge found that the right to use the Circular Road which the plaintiff claims in the suit was neither recognised nor specifically prohibited at the partition. He also found that the plaintiff's claim to use the Circular Road as an easement of necessity could not exist because there is another means by which she can have access to the property, namely, the Northern Road, which abuts the share which fell to the plaintiff. Referring to the plaintiff's claim as an easement of necessity, the Subordinate Judge observes:

"This aspect of the case was not pressed before me very much by the plaintiff's vakil, as there is evidence on record to show that the portion of the plaintiff's share in 'Uplands House' can be reached from the Municipal Road on the northern side of the plaintiff's share of the building through her ground. Plaintiff's vakil only relied upon clause (f) to section 13 of the Indian Easements Act and claimed the right to use the Circular Road as an easement, 'apparent and continuous and necessary' for enjoying the share of the plaintiff's portion of the 'Uplands House' as it was enjoyed before the partition took effect, inasmuch as there was no different intention expressed or necessarily implied when the partition took place."

So far as the claim as an easement of necessity is concerned, it is difficult to find, on the evidence and the plan, that the easement is one of necessity.

As regards easements of necessity the law is clear.

In *Krishnamarazu v. Marraju*¹ the learned Judges in dealing with clause (e) to section 13 of the Easements Act observed:

"We think the word 'necessary' must be construed in its ordinary sense. If A has a means of access to his property without going over B's land, A cannot claim a right of way over B's land on the ground that it is the most convenient means of access."

In *Sukhdei v. Kedar Nath*² it was held that the easement of necessity was an easement without which a property cannot be used at all, and not one merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property. A similar view was taken in *Chunilal Mancharam v. Marishankar Atmaram*³ as to the meaning of "easement of necessity". In that case the Easements Act was held not applicable as it was not extended to the Bombay Presidency till Act VIII of 1891 was passed.

As regards the claim of the defendant that at the partition it was expressly agreed that there should be no right of way, we agree with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that it is not made out.

The main ground on which the argument for the defendant is based is that the plot of land measuring 44 cents was not originally included in the division as falling to the plaintiff's share, that without it she could not enter the portion of the main building which was allotted to her, although she could enter the other portions by the Northern Road and that this piece of land was given for that purpose to avoid any right she may claim to enter the main building from the Circular Road.

In this case unfortunately the partition is not by any deed. It was effected by two arbitrators, Mr. Forbes who was then the District Judge of Vizagapatam and defendant's second witness, Mr. Appa Rao who was chairman of the Vizagapatam Municipality. As the 44 cents would have allowed the plaintiff direct access from the outhouses to the portion that fell to her share without her making any structural alteration, it is probable that these 44 cents were granted to her for that purpose. We are not satisfied on the evidence that this was due to the defendant's refusal to allow her access by the main road at the time of the partition and this refusal being accepted by the arbitrators and an altered arrangement being made to give the plaintiff another means of access.

The position, therefore, is as put by the Subordinate Judge that it was neither allowed nor prohibited. The question has, therefore, to be dealt with as a question of law as to the rights of parties under the Easements Act.

Section 13 of the Easements Act (V of 1882) refers to easements of necessity and quasi-easements in cases where a person transfers or bequeaths property to another and in cases where a partition is made of the joint property of several persons. The portion of the section which is relevant to the present case, which is one of partition, runs as follows:—

“Where a partition is made of the joint property of several persons—

(e) if an easement over the share of one of them is necessary for enjoying the share of another of them, the latter shall be entitled to such easement, or

(f) if such an easement is apparent and continuous and necessary for enjoying the share of the latter as it was enjoyed when the partition took effect, he shall, unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, be entitled to such easement.

The easements mentioned in clauses (a), (c) and (e) of this section are called easements of necessity.”

Section 5 defines continuous easements and apparent easements and it runs as follows:—

"Easements are either continuous or discontinuous, apparent or non-apparent. A continuous easement is one whose enjoyment is or may be continual without the act of man.

A discontinuous easement is one that needs the act of man for its enjoyment.

An apparent easement is one the existence of which is shown by some permanent sign which, upon careful inspection by a competent person, would be visible to him. A non-apparent easement is one that has no such sign."

Illustration (b) to this section is this—

"A right of way annexed to A's house over B's land. This is a discontinuous easement."

It is, therefore, clear from the Easements Act that a right like the present is a discontinuous easement although it is apparent. The effect of section 13 is this:—that in cases of partition, if an easement is one of necessity, a person, to whose share certain property falls, is entitled to the easement apart from any question of its being apparent or continuous, but that if the easement is not one of necessity but is merely one necessary for enjoying the share of the latter as it was enjoyed when the partition took effect, then such an easement should be apparent and continuous. A distinction is clearly drawn between what was actually necessary and what, though not actually necessary in the sense of there being no other mode of enjoying the property, is required for the purpose of enjoying it as it was enjoyed when the partition took place.

The Easements Act was passed in 1882, and when it was passed it only extended to the territories administered by the Governor of Madras in Council and the Chief Commissioners of the Central Provinces and Coorg. It was subsequently extended to Bombay and the United Provinces in 1891 but has not been extended to Bengal. It is important to bear this in mind in dealing with the decisions of the Calcutta High Court, where the learned Judges are not trammelled with the provisions of the Easements Act and the definitions contained therein and the decisions of the Bombay and Allahabad High Courts before the Act was in force there (1891).

So far as the Madras High Court is concerned, the authorities are to the effect that a right of way over a road is not an apparent and continuous easement and that unless it is an easement of necessity it will not pass merely on the ground of its being necessary for the use of the house as conveniently as it was before the partition.

In *Krishnamarazu v. Marraj*¹ it was held that where a person has a means of access to his property without going over another's land, he could not claim a right of way over the other's land on the ground that it was the most convenient means of access and that the law under section 13, clause (e) of the Easements Act is the same as the law in England. In dealing with clause (f) of section 13 of the Easements Act, Sir Arnold White, C.J., and Davies, J., observed:

"It is admitted that the respondent has a means of access to his property without going over the appellant's land and we must accordingly hold that he has no easement of necessity. He is not entitled to an easement under clause (f) of the section since the easement which he claims is not apparent and continuous. The respondent failed to establish any right by agreement."

This was a case where the plaintiff and the defendant who were brothers effected a partition by which amongst other things they divided certain houses and open sites.

In *Esa Abbas Sait v. Jacob Haroon Sait*⁴ it was held by Sir Ralph Benson, Offg. C.J., and Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., that a right of way is not an apparent and continuous easement within the meaning of section 13 of the Easements Act. This was a case where there was a lane running to the east of the plaintiff's house and west of the defendant's house from north to south which was enjoyed in common by the plaintiff and the defendants and their predecessors-in-title and the plaintiff claimed it as an easement. As regards the right of way claimed, the learned Judges observed:

"A right of way is not a continuous easement (see illustration (b) to section 5 of the Indian Easements Act, V of 1882). And, therefore, even assuming that it was used as a passage for scavengers at the time when Lazaro owned both the premises there would be no apparent and continuous easement within the meaning of section 13 of the Indian Easements Act."

In *Wutsler v. Sharpe*⁵ the property owned by the plaintiffs and the defendant were at one time united and there was a road which led from one portion of the property which belonged to the plaintiffs to another portion which belonged to the defendant. The plaintiffs claimed the road to the defendant's property for the purpose of getting water and the defendant refused permission. The plaintiffs sued the defendant for a declaration of their right of way over the road. As the plaintiffs did not produce the deed under which they became the owners of the property, the learned Judges held that no title by grant could be proved to have passed, and that their only claim could be to claim the easement as an easement of necessity or an easement the intention to grant which should be inferred from the circumstances. It appears from the judgment that the Easements Act was made applicable to the United Provinces on the 6th of March, 1891 and this suit was filed before the Easements Act was made applicable. After dealing with the English cases on the subject and expressing their dissent from the decision of the Calcutta High Court in *Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor*⁶ the learned Judges held that the right of way did not pass.

In *Sukhdei v. Kedar Nath*², which was a decision after the Easements Act was made applicable to the United Provinces, it was held that an easement of necessity was an easement without which a property cannot be used at all, and not one merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property. This case arose out of a partition of immoveable property and the question was as regards a passage in the property which fell to the share of the defendant. The learned Judges referred to the English cases as to what would be an easement of necessity. There was no suggestion in that case that, where the Easements Act applied, a right of way which was not an apparent and continuous easement would pass under clause (f) of the Easements Act in case of partition of properties, but it is open to the remark that in this decision the applicability of clause (f) has not been considered.

In *Daroga Lal v. Devi Lal*⁷ it was held that an easement of necessity could only arise when the property could not be used at all without the easement, and not where the easement was merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property.

Reference has been made by the learned Advocate-General for the respondent to the decision in Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor,⁶ *Kadambini Debi v. Kali Kumar Halder*⁸ and *Purnendu Narain Ray v. Dwijendra Narain Roy*⁹. to follow the trend of the English decisions which, as we shall point out later, practically gave a right of way, though not of absolute necessity, in respect of contiguous properties in the case of well-formed and metalled roads.

In *Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor*⁶ the land held by the plaintiff and the defendant originally belonged to the same owner. A path had been made by the original owner. The District Judge was of opinion that the case fell under section 26 of the Limitation Act and that the defendant had not proved 20 years' peaceable, open and uninterrupted exercise of the right of way. The High Court was of opinion that the easement might be acquired not only under section 26 of the Limitation Act but by virtue of the presumed grant. In their view the right of way might pass as a quasi-easement. The learned Judges observed:

"This implied grant might arise in one of two ways:—(i) The use of the path and ghat might be absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, in which case, there would be an easement of necessity; (ii) the use of the path and ghat, though not absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, might be necessary for its enjoyment in the state in which it was at the time of severance; and in this case, if the easement were apparent and continuous, there would be a presumption that it passed with the defendant's tenement. This latter case is discussed in the books under the principle of the disposition of the owner of two tenements (Destination des pères de famille). See Gale on Easements; 5th Edition, pp. 96, 97 and following pages; and as to right of way, p. 103. note, p. 124. note and *Pyer v. Carter*¹⁰. This principle is just and fair and accords with common sense. It is in consonance with the rule of justice, equity, and good conscience, which must guide the Courts in the absence of positive direction by the Legislature."

So far as the passage in Gale cited is concerned, the passing of easements on the analogy of the principle of destination du père de famille was disapproved of by Lord Westbury in the case of *Suffield v. Brown*¹¹ which was decided in 1864. After referring to Gale on Easements, the learned Lord observes:

"But this comparison of the disposition of the owner of two tenements to the destination du père de famille is a mere fanciful analogy from which rules of law ought not to be derived."

Moreover in *Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor*⁶ the learned Judges themselves point out that the principle of justice, equity and good conscience on which they purported to act can only be applied in the absence of positive direction by the Legislature. And under section 5 of the Easements Act it is clear that a right of way is not an apparent and continuous easement.

In *Ram Narain Shaha v. Kamala Kanta Shaha*¹² the suit related to a right of way. There were two properties which originally belonged to the same owner but subsequently there was a severance, the plaintiff being entitled to one portion and the defendant to another portion. It was held that implication of a grant of easement upon the severance of a tenement might extend to a way but that it would do so only where there had been some permanence in the adaptation of the tenement from which continuity could be inferred. The learned Judges in dealing with the contention based on the decision in *Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor*⁶ observed:

"We are, however, of opinion that the contention is not sound, and that the case cited is distinguishable from the present. The presumption in favour of the grant of an easement upon the severance of a heritage by its owner into two or more parts arises primarily with reference only to continuous and apparent easements; and a 'way' is evidently neither a 'continuous' nor always an 'apparent' easement.

It is true that in certain cases referred to in text books on the subject—See Gale on Easements, 6th Edition, pp. 108 to 123 and Goddard on Easements, 5th Edition, pp. 174 to 186, implication of a grant of an easement, upon the severance of a tenement, has been held to extend, under certain circumstances, to a 'way,' but that is so only where there has been some permanence in the adaptation of the tenement, from which continuity could be inferred. In other words the extension of the rule can hold good, if at all, only in the case of 'a formed road,' to use the language of Lord Justice Fry in *Thomas v. Owen*¹³, 'made over an alleged servient tenement, to and for the apparent use of the dominant tenement'."

Then the learned Judges say that in that case not only was there no finding of fact that there had been any such permanence of adaptation, any such formed road, but there was no case of an implied grant suggested in the plaint or issues. We may point out that the learned Judges refer to Gale on Easements and are guarded in stating that the rule can hold good, if at all, only in the case of "a formed road". They do not decide that in the case of "a formed road" the easement can be said to be an apparent and continuous easement.

There is another case at p. 516 in the same volume, *Kadam-bini Debi v. Kali Kumar Haldar*⁸. But that relates to a right of passage of light and air on partition of a family dwelling house. The learned Judges there point out that, there being no enactment of the Legislature applicable to the case in question, the question will have to be decided and answered with reference to the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience and they think that the rule of English Law of an implied grant of easement on severance of tenements is in accordance with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience and should be followed. Here again we may point out that if the Easements Act were applicable there could be no question of contravening its provisions by the application of the principles of justice, equity and good conscience.

In *Purnendu Narain Roy v. Dwijendra Narain Roy*⁸ a dispute arose as to a right of way on a partition of property between brothers. The District Munsif decided against the right of way inasmuch as it was not an easement of necessity. This judgment was confirmed by the District Judge. In dealing with the right of way, Mookerjee, J., after stating that the respondent's vakil was not prepared to contend that there was an implied reservation at the time of the exchange, observed:

"In the first place, it is doubtful, according to the finding of the learned District Judge, whether there was at the time of the partition and exchange, an existing right of way, at any rate, there was none which had been used for any length of time; and clearly, as the Munsif finds (which finding does not appear to have been challenged before the District Judge), whatever way there might have been, was not a formed or metalled road but an undefined track."

It is argued from these observations that if there was a formed and metalled way that would pass as an easement. We do not think that this case takes us any farther than *Kadam-bini Debi v. Kali Kumari Halder*⁹.

Reference has been made to *Ranchordass Amthabhai v. Manehlal Gordhandas*¹⁴. We may point out that this case was before the Easements Act was made applicable to the Bombay Presidency.

It is argued by the learned Advocate-General for the respondent that the distinction between apparent and continuous and non-apparent and discontinuous easements is one which is known to the English as well as the Indian Law, that in determining whether an easement would pass under the Easements Act as regards a right of way, the English law before the passing of the Act was that in the case of a formed road it was treated as a continuous easement, that the subsequent development of the English Law made it clear that an easement was held to exist when there was a formed road though it was not strictly a continuous easement, and that in interpreting the Easements Act it would be relevant to refer to the English decisions on the subject and to apply those decisions to cases where such a right is claimed in India. It is pointed out that in the case of an easement of necessity it has been held that the law in India and England is the same and English decisions have been referred to.

It seems to us that where the law has been codified we are bound by the Code and it is not permissible for us to refer to the English Law on the subject where the provisions of the Code are clear for the purpose of not giving the words of the Code their plain meaning. We may in this connection refer to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Norendra Nath Sarcar v. Kamalbasini Dasi*¹⁵, where their Lordships condemned the course taken by the Subordinate Judge who first of all on a consideration of the English case-law and the opinion of the text-writers determined what the law in England was at the date of the Succession Act and then construed the Succession Act on those lines that it was not intended by the Legislature to alter the law in India by departing from the law of England. Their Lordships refer to the observations of Lord Herschell in the *Bank of England v. Vagliano*¹⁶ with approval.

We may also in this connection refer to *Ramanandi Kuer v. Kalazvati Kuer*¹⁷ and *Mahommed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Goi Gark*¹⁸.

In *Ramanandi Kuer v. Kalazvati Kuer*¹⁷ their Lordships of the Privy Council, after referring to the divergence of opinion in the Courts in India as regards the law and procedure governing cases for revocation of probate, owing in part to the introduction into Indian practice of the difference in English Law between the grant of probate in common form and probate in solemn form, observed:

"It is worse than unprofitable to consider how far, if at all, that distinction has been incorporated into Indian Law. It has often been pointed out by this Board that where there is a positive enactment of the Indian Legislature the proper course is to examine the language of that statute and to ascertain its proper meaning, uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state of the law—or of the English Law upon which it may be founded."

In *Mahommad Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Goi Gark*¹⁸ the question turned on the construction of section 32, sub-section (5) of the Straits Settlements Ordinance III of 1893, which corresponds to the Indian Evidence Act I of 1872. The Courts below excluded evidence of an entry made as regards the date of defendant's birth by his deceased father in a book in which he made similar entries with regard to the family. Their Lordships of the Privy Council after referring to the decisions under the Indian Evidence Act and the fact that such evidence was admissible observed:

"The Courts below have however declined to accept this principle. They proceed upon two grounds. In the first place they think that the rule with regard to hearsay evidence adopted in the English case of *Haines v. Guthrie*¹⁹ should be followed in the Straits Settlements, and that that rule is not varied by the clause just cited from the Evidence Ordinance. And in the second place they hold that the illustration given in the statute does not in fact illustrate the section. On the first point, the view of their Lordships is that the rule and principle of the colony must be accepted as it is found on its own Evidence Ordinance, and that the acceptance of a rule or principle adopted in or derived from English law is not permissible if thereby the true and actual meaning of the Statute under construction be varied, or denied effect."

Their Lordships hold that illustrations appended to sections of a statute should be accepted as being of relevance and value in construing the text: and should be rejected as repugnant to the section only as the last resort of construction.

Where the provisions of an Indian enactment follow the provisions of an English enactment or a well-settled rule of English Law or where the meaning of certain expressions and their legal import are not clear, no doubt reference to English authorities becomes useful and often necessary.

*Rash Behary Shaha v. Nritya Gopal Nundy*²⁰ applies to this class of cases. In that case the question was as to the meaning of the word "refusal" in section 39 of the Contract Act and it was held that though the English Law did not govern the case, the views of eminent English Judges on the meaning of the word "refusal" may well be considered.

Reference has been made to the English decisions on the subject of right of way. In this connection we may refer to the case-law in England as it stood in 1882 when the Indian Easements Act was passed.

In *Glave v. Harding*²¹, which was decided in 1857, the facts so far as they are material for the purpose of this appeal were these:—A land which originally belonged to the Crown was leased to one Merrick for building purposes on certain terms as to the nature of the building. One of the terms was that when he built the houses according to the plan, a separate lease of each house was to be granted to him or to his assigns for 80 years at such rent as the Commissioners of Woods and Forests would agree upon. Merrick built houses in Bainbridge Street and New Oxford Street and there was a way connecting the two blocks of houses. Merrick mortgaged his interest in the whole of the premises to certain parties and assigned them to the defendant. He then blocked up both the entrances. The question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to the right of way. Bramwell, B., in dealing with the right of way claimed, observed:

Sri Rajah
Vyricherla
Narayana Gajapatiraju
v.
Sri Rani
Janaki
Ratna-

“The plaintiff’s title was derived from the lease, and unless the lease granted the right of way it did not exist. It did not grant the right in terms, and the only way in which it could grant it was, that the condition of the premises at the time when the lease was granted, showed, that it was intended that the right of way should be exercised upon the principle of law I have adverted to; that by the devolution of the tenements originally held in one ownership, a right of way to a particular door or gate would, as an apparent and continuous easement, pass to the owners and occupiers of both of them. But I think that the way in question was not a continuous and apparent easement within that principle of law; and therefore I arrive at the conclusion that there was no evidence of the right of way alleged in this case.”

In *Worthington v. Gimson*²², which was decided in 1860, the plaintiff claimed a right of way over the land of the defendant. The facts as set out in the report are that a certain land lying partly in one parish and partly in another parish belonged in 1820 to two persons each being entitled to an undivided half. A right of way existed from a farm, part of this property, across certain lands to another farm on the said property. The right of way had for many years been used by the occupiers of both the farms. In 1820 one of the co-owners conveyed his undivided half in one parish with all the rights, members, easements and appurtenances. The other co-owner also conveyed his undivided moiety. The deed contained no express reservation of the right of way to either party. Then the plaintiff in this action and the previous occupiers of the farm used the right of way from 1820 to 1859 but were obstructed by the defendant who was then the occupier of the other farm. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover, the right of way not passing under the deed of partition, and not being an apparent and continuous easement necessarily passing upon the severance of the property, as incident to the separate enjoyment of the portion severed. At the trial Williams, J., non-suited the plaintiff even though the jury found that the occupiers of the farm claimed by the plaintiff had enjoyed the way as of fact up to and before the deed of partition and that the way had been enjoyed for 20 years since the partition deed up to the time of the obstruction.

A rule was obtained. It was argued that the way had been constantly and regularly used up to the time of the partition, that it was known and apparent to both the parties to the partition and that complete enjoyment of the portion of the property in the occupation of the plaintiff could not then, and cannot now, be had without it. Wightman, J., was of opinion that it was not an easement of necessity. Crompton, J., agreed with Wightman, J., and observed:

"In the present case the parties have not used apt words in the deed to express an intention to pass the way in dispute and the general words which follow the description of the property intended to be conveyed do not add to or alter the previous words of conveyance. It is said that this way passed, as being an apparent and continuous easement. There may be a class of easements of that kind, such as the use of drains or sewers, the right to which must pass, when the property is severed, as part of the necessary enjoyment of the severed property. But this way is not such an easement. It would be a dangerous innovation if the jury were allowed to be asked to say, from the nature of a road, whether the parties intended the right of using it to pass. It may, besides, be naturally supposed to have been the intention of the parties that, on the partition of the property, all ways not incident to the separate enjoyment of each of the severed portions should cease."

In *Langley v. Hammond*²³, which was decided in 1868, a question arose as to a right of way. In that case, a lessee surrendered to his lessor a part of the demised premises "together with all ways, etc., therewith now used, occupied and enjoyed" with a proviso that the defendant should fence off the premises surrendered from those still occupied by the lessee. There had been always unity of seisin and occupation of the whole farmyard and the road way had been made and used by former occupiers of the yard and by the present lessee for the convenience of carting heavy loads to and from the yard and the farm buildings. There was, however, no existing approach to the premises surrendered from the defendant's land. The question arose as to the right of the road way as a means of access to the surrendered premises. It was held that no right to use the road way as a means of access to the surrendered premises passed to the defendant. Kelly, C.B., was of opinion that by a grant of hereditaments with all "ways therewith now used and occupied and enjoyed" those ways only passed which had at some former period been used as of right therewith. In connection with this road way Bramwell, B., observed:

"Suppose a house to stand 100 yards from a highway, and to be approached by a road running along the side of a field, used for no other purpose, but only fenced off from the field, which I assume to be the property of the owner of the house. I should wish for time to consider before deciding that on the conveyance of the house the right to use that road not being a way of necessity, would not pass under such words as these. The ground on which I think this rule ought to be discharged is that there is here really no definite road."

In *Watts v. Kelson*²⁴, which was decided in 1871, the easement claimed was an easement to the use of a drain. It appears from the facts that the plaintiff and the defendant were the owners and occupiers of two adjoining properties which up to 1863 belonged to a single owner. In that year the owner conveyed to the plaintiff the premises in respect of which the easements were claimed. The premises were conveyed, together with "all roads, ways, waters, watercourses, rights, privileges, advantages and appurtenances whatsoever to the same hereditaments and premises belonging or appertaining, or with the same or any part thereof, held, used, enjoyed or reputed as part thereof or appurtenant thereto." Some months after the first conveyance the owner conveyed to the predecessor of the defendant the property over which the easements were claimed. There was an artificial watercourse which was originally made for the express purpose of supplying the cattle-sheds with water and was made by the owner of both properties. There was also a carriage way between two points a few yards from each other and this was used as a way for bringing carts from point A to point B. The defendant obstructed the way alleging that the right of way was only a right of footway. The Master of the Rolls held that the plaintiff proved the right to the carriage way but dismissed the bill so far as it related to the right of water.

In the course of the argument Mellish, L.J., and James, L.J., were of opinion that *Pyer v. Carter*¹⁰ was good law in spite of Lord Westbury's disapproval of it.

During the course of the argument Mellish, L.J., remarked: "When a man walks over his own land in a particular direction he is not using anything, he is merely going where he pleases on his own property; but when there is a structure, erected for a purpose connected with a certain part of his property, the case is quite different. I am not satisfied that if a man construct a paved road over one of his fields to his house solely with a view to the convenient occupation of the house, a right to use that road would not pass if he sold the house separately from the field."

This was an observation made by Mellish, L.J., in the course of the argument and reliance is placed upon it by the learned Advocate-General for the respondent as being a decision that a paved road although it is not continuous would still pass even though it is not an easement of necessity.

In his judgment Mellish, L.J., referred with approval to *Polden v. Bastard*²⁵ and observed:

"In *Polden v. Bastard*²⁵ Chief Justice Earle delivering the unanimous judgment of the Exchequer Chamber says: 'There is a distinction between easements, such as a right of way or easements used from time to time, and easements of necessity or continuous easements. The cases recognise this distinction, and it is clear law that, upon a severance of tenements, easements used as of necessity, or in their nature continuous, will pass by implication of law without any words of grant; but with regard to easements which are used from time to time only, they do not pass, unless the owner, by appropriate language, shows an intention that they should pass.'

Then the learned Lord Justice observes that in that case the easement was in its nature continuous so far as the watercourse was concerned, that the watercourse was necessary for the use of the tenement conveyed, and that no other supply of water equally convenient or equally pure could have been obtained.

We do not think that this case can be said to be a decision on the question that a paved road was a continuous easement.

It thus appears that when the Easements Act was passed, the English decisions had not established clearly that a formed and metalled road was or may be treated as a continuous easement and it cannot be said that the Easements Act simply codified what was the law in England. It is no doubt true as contended by the Advocate-General for the respondent that the framers of the Easements Act preferred to follow the ruling in *Pyer v. Carter*¹⁰ which was referred to with approval by Mellish, L.J., in *Watts v. Kelson*²⁴ to the ruling in *Wheeldon v. Burrows*²⁶.

In *Pyer v. Carter*¹⁰ it was held that where the owner of two or more adjoining houses sells one of them to a purchaser, such a house was entitled to the benefit and was subject to the burden of all existing drains communicating with the other house without any express reservation by the grantor for that purpose.

In *Wheelodon v. Burrows*²⁶ it was held that in the case of a grantor, express reservation was necessary with certain exceptions, as in the case ways of necessity, while in the case of a grantee of part of a tenement, all those continuous and apparent easements over the other part of the tenement which are necessary for the enjoyment of the part granted and have been hitherto used therewith would pass as a general rule.

*Aldridge v. Wright*²⁷ affirmed *Wheelodon v. Burrows*²⁶ and the exceptions in the case of a grantor are given by Greer, L.J., in his judgment.

This departure from the English Law, however, does not in our opinion lead to the conclusion that a departure should be made as regards apparent and continuous easements in dealing with section 13 of the Easements Act.

So far as the case-law in England subsequent to the passing of the Easements Act is concerned, the trend of the authorities is to treat a formed and metalled road as a kind of apparent and continuous easement. We may refer to *Brown v. Alabaster*²⁸, *Head v. Meara*²⁹ and Aldridge v. Wright.²⁷ But we are of opinion that having regard to the provisions of the Easements Act it is not open to us to follow the English decisions subsequent to the Easements Act and to hold that a formed and metalled pathway would be an apparent and continuous easement for the purpose of determining the rights of parties under section 13, clause (f) of the Easements Act.

We are of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to the right of way claimed as an easement of necessity and not being an apparent and continuous easement it would not pass under the provisions of section 13, clause (f) of the Easements Act.

We reverse the decree of the Lower Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Where a temple is of comparatively recent foundation and its origin well known and where there is no deed of gift or dedication the incidents of the dedication must be determined by the usage. There is nothing illegal in a trust by which the surplus money after paying for the maintenance of the temple is retained by the founder.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Salem in O.S. No. 4 of 1916, dated the 30th November, 1925. The suit relates to the temple of Sri Kandaswami in the village of Kalipatti in the Salem District. The temple was founded by one Lakshmana Goundan, the grandfather of the 1st defendant. He died about the year 1856 or 1857. The 2nd defendant who was the son of the 1st defendant was added as a party. He has since died and his sons have been added as his legal representatives. The plaintiffs are Hindu worshippers of the temple. They instituted the suit for a scheme of management. The 1st defendant claimed that the temple was a private temple. The Subordinate Judge, Mr. Narayana Aiyar, found it to be a private temple. On appeal to the High Court, Abdur Rahim and Oldfield, JJ., differed, the former finding that the temple was a public temple and the latter holding it to be a private one. A decree was, therefore, made dismissing the appeal, and from that decree the plaintiffs appealed under the Letters Patent, and three learned Judges, who heard the appeal, Sadasiva Aiyar, Seshagiri Aiyar and Burn, JJ., delivered separate but concurring judgments finding that the temple was a public one. See *Subramania Aiyar v. Pujari Lakshmana Goundan*¹. Against this, an appeal was preferred to the Privy Council which decided that the temple was a public one. See *Pujari Lakshmana Goundan v. Subramania Aiyar*². The suit was, therefore, remanded for framing a scheme. It is against the scheme so framed that the present appeal is preferred and the main question at issue is whether the lands which now stand in the name of the 1st defendant should be treated as temple property or whether they should be held to belong to the 1st defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge, Mr. L. R. Anantanarayana Aiyar, has held that they belong to the 1st defendant.

That the properties in dispute stand in the name of the 1st defendant is not denied. The argument of the learned Advocate for the appellants is briefly this. The temple having been found to be a public one, it must be presumed that all offerings made to the God were the property of the God and that as it is admitted that the suit properties must have come practically entirely out of the offerings to the God, they must be held to be the property of the God of which the 1st defendant was only a trustee. It is further argued that the learned Subordinate Judge wrongly threw the onus of proof under these circumstances on the plaintiffs. For the other side, it is contended that the temple having been admittedly a fairly recent one and there being no written deed of the dedication, usage must determine the nature of the trust and that, in fact, the gifts were offered on the understanding that, after defraying the expenses of the temple, the remainder should go to the founder and his heirs. It is also contended that the onus of proof that these lands which stand in the name of the 1st defendant are temple properties was rightly laid on the plaintiffs. The whole evidence being before us, the question of onus is not very important.

The history of this temple has been narrated in several judgments in the case and it may be summed up in the words . . .

of their Lordships of the Privy Council (1924 M.W.N. at page 279):

"Lakshmana Goundan, the grandfather of the 1st defendant, lived in a small house which belonged to him in the village of Kalipatti. He was a devout Hindu and originally a poor man. He maintained in his house an idol of the goddess of Amman, which was the private idol of his family. He was also a devout worshipper at the public temple at Palni at which there was an idol of the God Subramaniaswami, and he made yearly pilgrimage to Palni with offerings to that God. It is said, and probably with truth, that he dreamt that he should install at his house at Kalipatti an idol of the God Subramaniaswami and that the God would come to his house and enable him to foretell events. He did install that idol at his house, adopted the ritual which was followed at Palni, and allowed Brahmans and other Hindus of various castes to worship the idol as if it was a public idol. He acted as the pujari of the idol and received, as the pujari, offerings made to the idol by worshippers and fees which he charged in respect of processions and other religious services. He obtained a great reputation as a holy man and as being enabled by the God to foretell events."

Their Lordships then proceed to describe how the number of worshippers increased and extensions to the temple were made by Lakshmana Goundan. They proceed (at page 280):

"On certain days in each week the Hindu public was admitted by him free of charge to worship in the greater part of the temple, to one part only on payment of fees, and to the inner shrine apparently not at all. With the income which he derived from offerings and fees at the temple he efficiently maintained the temple as if it were a public temple and discharged all the expenses connected with the temple and the worship of the idol there. That may be assumed from the reputation which the temple acquired against the Hindus. No accounts have been produced, probably he kept none, but it may be assumed that he applied the balance of the income he so obtained to the support of himself and his family and in acquiring for his own benefit and that of his family some immovable property which he possessed before he died."

The only fact that may be added to this is that apparently the date of his bringing the God from Palni was about 1821 and their Lordships find that the temple itself was founded between 1841 and 1856.

In dealing with this appeal, it has to be remembered that the sole point decided by the Privy Council was that the temple was a public and not a private one. The remarks beyond this point made by the learned Judges of this Court and which have been sought to be used as arguments, however valuable they may be, are obiter. Now, we think it is clear in a case of this sort, where the temple is of comparatively recent foundation and its origin well known and where there is no deed of gift or dedication, the nature of the dedication must be determined by the usage. It has to be remembered that the idol was brought by Lakshmana Goundan from Palni to his house a considerable time, some twenty years or more, before the temple was built. The growth of the temple and of its importance was gradual. The allegation of the plaintiffs that there was a temple in the place before has been found by all the Courts to be untrue. Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar says (1919 M.W.N. at page 916):

Kumara-
swami Asari
v.
Poojari
Lakshmana
Goundan.

"In the absence of any writing and in the absence of any evidence of persons who were alive in 1819, it is not possible to say when the dedication was made. It is the usage in the temple and it is the practice that has been observed that should guide us in determining this point. From this point of view, I have no hesitation in holding that the temple was dedicated at least during the life-time of Lakshmana Goundan."

Mr. Justice Burn says at p. 917:

"As might be expected in the circumstances, the progress of the building was gradual. The main features had, however, been completed by the time of Lakshmana Goundan's death in 1857."

It was sought to be argued (1) that usage could not be held to evidence the nature of the trust, and (2) that a trust by which the surplus money after paying for the maintenance of the temple would go to the pujari would not be a legal trust.

As regards the first point no satisfactory authority was quoted. The following cases were relied on:—*Pusaraya Goundan v. Poonachi Goundan*³. That was a case where there was no image of the Goddess in the temple and she was represented by Akasa or emptiness. It was nevertheless held that the offerings to the pujari in that case were made to the Goddess and that the lands endowed to the temple in that case were the property of the Goddess and not that of the pujari. But in that case the lands had been given to the temple by a poligar family. There was an inscription describing the dedication on the ceiling and the lands stood in the inam register in the name of the Goddess. The next case is *Srinivasacharyulu v. Pratyanga Rao*⁴. There the grant was expressly to the God and the family of the defendants were appointed as archakas. They claimed that the lands belonged to them subject only to the burden of service in the temple. It was held that the grant being clearly to the God, the usage according to the defendants could not be invoked in interpreting the grant. That has no application to a case where the grantor himself founded the temple and there is no written deed of grant. In such cases the only means of determining the nature of the grant is by the usage. In *Attorney-General v. Sidney Sussex College*⁵ Lord Hatherley, L.C., says:

"I think the appellants are entitled to apply that principle of the Court which says, that if there be any ambiguity, the course of construction and action upon the bequest may be called in aid, as inferring that the persons who are concerned in the trust have not been committing a breach of trust from the commencement downwards to the present time. The reason why the Court relies upon that rule with reference to charities, where there is anything doubtful in the construction of the will, is, that there have been persons alive who were competent to controvert any such conclusion, and it is not to be assumed that, where many persons were interested in controverting such a conclusion, a course of action has been adopted which has been a plain and clear breach of trust."

In *Attorney-General v. Bristol (Mayor of)*⁶ Lord Chancellor Eldon remarks:

"The construction in these cases, I take it, must be considered to go upon intention, and the different rules furnished by the cases I have mentioned, are to be considered as indicia of the intention. Was it then the intention of the donor that Bristol should be a trustee. . . . As far as I have read these ancient cases, they state it to depend upon the intention of the donor, and that one way of finding out that intention is, to enquire, whether the whole of the annual value of the property was, at the time of the foundation of the charity, distributed amongst the objects of the charity?"

In *Attorney-General v. The Corporation of Rochester*⁷ Lord Justice Turner says:

"Undoubtedly, if an instrument be doubtful in its terms, contemporaneous usage may be referred to; and if there has been a long usage in the application of funds to purposes which may be warranted upon one construction of the instrument, but which may not be warranted upon another construction of the instrument, the Court will lean to that construction of the instrument (provided it be doubtful) which will best correspond with the mode in which the funds have been for so long a period applied."

In *Attorney-General v. Skinners' Company*⁸ Vice-Chancellor Sir L. Shadwell quotes Lord Holt to the following effect:

"I do agree there is no Statute of Limitation shall bar a charity; but in a thing that is obscure and dark, and there hath been an enjoyment for a long time, I think an enjoyment for a long time, without interruption, is a great evidence of a right; for quiet enjoyment for a long time does presume a rightful enjoyment."

Turning to the Indian cases, in *Abhiram Goswami v. Shyama Charan Nandi*⁹, it was held that

"Though the mere fact of the proceeds of any land being used for the support of an idol may not be proof that that land formed an endowment for the purpose, yet it was a fact that might well be taken into consideration, when, as in this case, the intention of the founder had to be gathered from an ancient document expressed in ambiguous language."

The rule, therefore, is quite clear that in the absence of a written grant or where the terms of the written grant are ambiguous or where there is no direct evidence of the terms, usage can be looked to to determine the nature of the grant.

As regards the second contention that such a grant as is contended for by the defendants in the present case is not a legal one, no authority has been quoted. Reliance is placed on certain remarks of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., to the following effect at page 915:

"It would undoubtedly be regarded as a fraud practised upon the public that the income derived with reference to the sanctity and holiness of a shrine should be regarded as the perquisites of the persons in charge," and

"It would strike at the very root of religion in India to hold that the person who is permitted by the worshippers to receive the offerings is the owner, and not simply the trustee, of the income."

These must be considered as obiter dicta and in *Purazhiya Goundan v. Poonachi Goundan*³ Oldfield, J., criticises them saying that on this basis

"it is difficult to see how the existence of any private temple at all can claim legal recognition."

There are many temples where the archakas after performing puja and maintaining the temple are entitled to the surplus. On the abstract question of law, we may quote Tudor on Charities, Chapter V, 4th edition, page 115:

"The surplus income, and the benefit of any subsequent increase, which the charities do not take, may be specifically disposed of either by the devisees being directed to retain it for their own benefit or by its being directed to be applied in other directions."

In *Rambrahma v. Kedar*¹⁰ it was laid down that a charitable corporation, in so far as it is charitable, is the creature of the founder, and that the proof of intention of the founder of a religious institution becomes almost conclusive, where the usage is immemorial, though the intention may be presumed from a number of instances extending over a limited period, provided only that the existence of an invariable practice is made out by clear and unambiguous evidence; and that the Court will be slow to draw an inference which will defeat a right that has been exercised without question during a long period, and unless such inference is irresistible, the Court will presume everything that is reasonably possible to presume, in favour of such a right. In *Chinnatha Rowther v. Karunji Andi*¹¹ it was held that a member of a family of pujaris entitled to the surplus income of the suit properties belonging to a temple after meeting the puja and other expenses of the temple was entitled to maintain a suit to set aside certain alienations made by certain members of the family as not binding on the temple and to recover the properties on behalf of the trust.

Kumara-
swami Asari
v.
Poojari
Lakshmana
Goundan.

In the present case it is not denied that the temple had been maintained and greatly improved by the founder and the 1st defendant. These improvements were made at a cost of between Rs. 50,000 and Rs. 1,00,000. We are quite clear that there would have been nothing illegal in the founder of the temple having created a trust to the effect that the temple should be maintained out of the offerings to the idol and that the balance should go to himself and his family, provided this did not offend against the law of perpetuities or such other provisions with which we are not concerned. Their Lordships of the Privy Council say as quoted above:

"It may be assumed that he applied the balance of the income he so obtained to the support of himself and his family and in acquiring for his own benefit and that of his family some immoveable property which he possessed before he died."

They do not appear to think that this would be any violation of the trust merely because the temple is found to be a public one. In fact, the scheme now provides in section 24:

"The pujari shall not ordinarily be paid any salary for his work and duties from temple funds but if after the temple liabilities are discharged in full, at the end of any year after audit it be found that there is a balance of income over expenditure, the pujari will be paid 50 per cent. of that balance amount as his honorarium for that year."

This, according to the contention of the learned Advocate for the appellants, would be an illegal breach of the trust as he contends that all the money belongs to the deity. It is difficult to see on his argument how the pujari could even maintain himself out of such gifts.

The origin of the temple has been recounted and we have to try and determine what was the intention of the original founder. Lakshmana Goundan was probably a very pious man, but the evidence is perfectly clear that he did not regard all the offerings made or money taken as the property of the deity. It has to be remembered that besides his position as a pujari, he was also considered as a seer. Their Lordships of the Privy Council say as quoted above:

"It may be assumed that he applied the balance of the income he so obtained to the support of himself and his family and in acquiring for his own benefit and that of his family some immoveable property which he possessed before he died."

This is not merely an assumption but it is proved to the hilt by evidence. In Ex. II, a statement given by his son in 1859, the latter makes it clear that the property purchased by his father in 1835 and 1836 (Exs. XXII and XXII-a) were enjoyed and possessed by his father and himself, and there is no mention at all of their belonging to the deity. As Mr. Justice Burn correctly stated, some lands which were originally personal inams were acquired by Lakshmana Goundan in his own name without any indication in the title-deeds that they were intended for the benefit of the temple. It is true that after his death at some date which is unknown, these properties were entered in the name of the God and they are now admitted to be temple properties; but there can be little doubt that this change was effected after the death of Lakshmana Goundan and probably by his widow during her son's minority. Mr. Justice Burn says:

Kumara-
swami Asari
v.
Poojari
Lakshmana
Goundan.

"They are now entered in the public records as held on behalf of the temple by the pujaris. The history of the entries is not very clear."

Mr. Justice Oldfield says:

"The documents however available in each case Exs. XXII, XXII-a, XXI and LII for item 1, Exs. XV and XV-a for item 2 and XVIII and XVIII-a for item 6 contain no indication that the property was the deity's and not Lakshmana's own. In Ex. II a statement given to the Tahsildar in 1859, 1st defendant's father referred to item 1 without any suggestion that Sri Kandaswami had any interest in it or that it had been dedicated to the public, as an appanage of the temple; The inference is that these items were personal inams acquired by Lakshmana by purchase and the same appears explicitly as regards item 1 from the documents above referred to."

It is not as if Lakshmana Goundan did not draw a distinction between lands which he bought for himself and those which he bought for the deity. From Ex. C it will be seen that he did purchase land specifically in the name of the deity. This appears to have been the land which he first got on mortgage under Exs. XV and XV-a and while it is correct as stated by Mr. Justice Oldfield that Exs. XV and XV-a contain no indication that the properties were mortgaged to the deity, it would appear from Ex. C that a cadjan sale-deed, dated 1847, which is not forthcoming, was executed to Pujari Lakshmana Goundan for Kalipatti Kandaswami deity. In the light of these facts it cannot for a moment be contended that Lakshmana Goundan was so unworldly that he dedicated to the deity all the offerings made and took nothing for himself. We are not prepared therefore to accept as completely correct the remark of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., which is obiter (1919 M.W.N. at page 905):

"Notwithstanding the high character of Lakshmana Goundan, it is abundantly clear that it was the deity which attracted the worshippers and that it was the deity for whom the offerings were made. . . . therefore it is impossible to believe that offerings were made to Lakshmana Goundan personally and not to the idol."

Kumara-
swami Asari
v.
Poojari
Lakshmana
Goundan.

Again the remark (1919 M.W.N. at page 909):

"I do not think the fact that for a long time, the priest in charge was allowed uncontrolled possession of the income, is indication, at any rate in India, that the priest was the owner of the offerings."

It is clear from the facts stated that Lakshmana Goundan did not dedicate the properties bought under Exs. XXII and XXII-a, nor does it appear that when he took a mortgage of the lands under Exs. XV and XV-a, he took that mortgage for the deity though he seems afterwards to have dedicated these lands to the deity when they were sold to him.

As regards the attitude of the general public and the view they took of the offerings, the evidence is all one way. Until the final decision of the Privy Council that the temple was a public one, public officials and the villagers had regarded it as private. The Income-tax authorities had taxed the 1st defendant one year on the temple income. P.W. 18, who is a witness on inimical terms with the 1st defendant, states at page 90:

"Pujari spends the hundi collection. It is known to all. Knowing that pujari is spending it, we put money in the hundi."

No witness comes forward to say that he understood that all the money put into the hundi was the property of the God. Although admittedly the bulk of the money used to purchase the properties in dispute must have come out of the temple offerings, still it appears from the evidence of D.W. 10, that abishekam money went to the 1st defendant. He says 10 annas should be given for abishekam. Without that it will not be done. The witness was quoted to us as saying that neither naivedyam nor abishekam money was paid to the pujari, but as regards abishekam this does not appear to be correct. However, the matter is not really material, as this is not a case of mixing trust money with private money. For this reason, we think that the cases quoted to us with regard to mahants or matathipathis or of trustees who mix private money with trust money have no bearing on the present question and it is not necessary to refer to them. We see no reason to suppose that the trust was not one by which the founder maintained the idol and later on the temple and retained the surplus offerings. He not only founded the temple but admittedly he and his successors have greatly enriched and enlarged it. There is no question of breach of trust on this score. We see no reason to hold that the lands in dispute were bought from trust money or in breach of any trust.

That being so, it is not necessary to go into the second ground urged on behalf of the respondents that even if there was a breach of trust, it would amount to back-accounting to enforce restoration of these lands and that this should not be done where the breach of trust had been due to a bona fide mistake. In this connection, *The Attorney-General v. The Master, Wardens, etc.; of the Wax Chandlers Company*¹² and *Kelu Achan v. Sivarama Pattar Karikar*¹³ are quoted, but we consider it unnecessary to discuss the point.

Turning to the scheme itself, the appellants did not ask for the removal of the 1st defendant. Whatever may be his character otherwise, he has done a great deal for the temple and the remarks passed about him in various judgments show that the institution will probably suffer if he is not retained. It is, however, argued that owing to his conduct since he has been appointed as receiver, two co-trustees should be added. We think on the whole that this would not conduce to the smooth administration of the temple and that paragraphs 14 and 21 of the scheme will operate as a sufficient check upon the conduct of the 1st defendant. Paragraph 25 which provides for the modification of the scheme must be deleted, as it has been held that such an order is ultra vires. In other respects, we see no reason to modify the scheme.

The memorandum of cross-objections as regards jewels is not pressed.

In the result the appeal is dismissed and the judgment and decree of the Lower Court with the modification noted above are confirmed. The Privy Council allowed the costs of the suit from the temple funds.

We think, in the circumstances, the costs of this appeal on both sides also should be met from the temple funds.

S. R.

Appeal dismissed.

THE DANGEROUS DRUGS ACT, 1930.

ACT No. II OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to centralise and vest in the Governor-General in Council the control over certain operations relating to dangerous drugs and to increase and render uniform throughout British India the penalties for offences relating to such operations was presented to the Legislative Assembly on the 6th February, 1930:—

We, the undersigned members of the Select Committee to which the Bill to centralise and vest in the Governor-General in Council the control over certain operations relating to dangerous drugs and to increase and render uniform throughout British India the penalties for offences relating to such operations was referred, have considered the Bill Papers I-IV. and the papers noted in the margin, and have now the honour to submit this our Report, with the Bill as amended by us annexed thereto.

2. Clause 2.—In clauses (a), (c) and (e), we have made small drafting amendments.

We have omitted (e) (iii) as Government opium is raw opium, and comes within the scope of (e) (ii). To retain it might cause confusion and misunderstanding.

In clause (g) we have deleted the words “of the acceptance”, so that the Governor-General in Council may take action at once as soon as he recommends that the drug should be declared internationally to be a dangerous drug, without awaiting for the formal acceptance of the recommendation by the Convention. It is understood that the notification will be cancelled if, on further inquiry by the Convention, it is found that the drug should not be declared to be a dangerous drug.

We have amended clauses (i), (j), (k) and (l) so as to make clearer provision for these important classes of cases which may be exemplified by export and import between Burma and Bengal, or between Bombay and Madras. In the first example the import or export occurs across the open sea, and it might be held that such import and export was import into or export from British India. In the second case, the drugs may be carried across a stretch of Hyderabad territory. It is not the intention of the Bill to place the control of such import and export in the hands of the Governor-General; it is intended that such inter-provincial traffic should be left in the hands of the Local Governments concerned; and our re-draft is intended to place this beyond doubt.

We have made a small drafting amendment in sub-clause (n).

Clause 4.—We have amended sub-clause (b) so as not to penalise the preparation of prepared opium by a lawful owner's relative or servant, on his behalf.

In sub-clause (c) we have deleted the word “transport”, as the transport of prepared opium which is unlawfully possessed will be punishable as unlawful possession, whereas the transport of prepared opium lawfully possessed cannot, on practical grounds, be made punishable.

We have added a proviso which will allow Government to grow the coca plant, and to experiment in the manufacture of cocaine therefrom, as we think it desirable that India should not be debarred from having indigenous supplies of this valuable drug for proper medicinal uses. The same proviso is added, consequently, to clause 9.

Clauses 5, 6 and 7.—We have made small drafting amendments.

Clause 8.—In sub-clauses (1) and (2) we have made drafting amendments; and in sub-clause (3) we have inserted words which will empower Local Governments, subject to the control of the Governor-General in Council, to make express rules bringing Government-owned drugs within the scope of the section. This amendment is intended to apply to drugs kept in Government dispensaries, and the like, which should properly come under the control of Local Governments.

Clause 9.—We have inserted this clause in order that Local Governments may have some control over traffic in dangerous drugs, where the persons promoting the traffic have their headquarters in British India but the traffic itself lies entirely outside British India. Such a case would arise where a merchant in Bombay arranges with opium suppliers in Persia for the despatch of opium to China.

Clause 10 (old clause 9).—We have made two amendments consequential on the amendments made in clause 4. We also propose that for offences under clauses 10 and 11, the fine should be unlimited, as in clauses 12, 13, 14 and 15. The offences under clauses 10 and 11 may be very serious, and we think the Court should be given power to award heavy fines in very bad cases.

Clauses 15, 16 and 18 (old clauses 14, 15 and 17).—As clause 10 relates to the serious offences of the manufacture, import, export and sale of prepared opium, we consider it should be included within the category given in these clauses. The references in these clauses have been re-numbered.

Clause 18 (old clause 17).—We have added two new sub-clauses, in order to make it quite clear that a bond shall be cancelled when a conviction is set aside, and that an appellate court, or the High Court when exercising its revisional powers, shall be empowered to require a bond to be executed.

Clause 19 is introduced to supply the penalty for the new clause 9 inserted by us. We propose to limit the penalty to a fine of one thousand rupees without imprisonment.

Clause 22 (old clause 20).—We have amended this clause so as to give power to issue warrants to Presidency Magistrates in the presidency-towns; and also in order to give this power to selected Magistrates of the second class. The clause now confers these powers on the Courts which have similar powers under the Opium Act, 1878.

Clause 23 (old clause 21).—As the Bill is aimed at traffic in dangerous drugs, it is desirable that officers carrying out the search of a house containing dangerous drugs should be able to seize documents or other articles which may furnish valuable evidence that the drugs seized have been the subject-matter of an offence. We have amended sub-clause (c) accordingly.

We have added a proviso which will empower police and other officers to make searches by night, under circumstances where there is reason to believe that delay will result in the escape of the offenders or the removal of illicit drugs. We have added a new sub-clause to ensure that these powers shall be properly exercised.

Clauses 24 and 28 (old clauses 22 and 26).—The amendment in these clauses follows from the amendment to sub-clause (c) of clause 23.

Clauses 29 and 30 (old clause 27 and new clause 30).—We have introduced a new clause 30 giving Government power to invest Excise Officers with the powers of an officer in charge of a police station for the investigation of offences under this Act; and we have amended old clause 27 so that offenders arrested and articles seized may be forwarded to such officers. These amendments should facilitate the prosecution of offences and will tend to shorten the period during which persons are in custody pending their production before a Court.

Clause 31 (old clause 28).—We have re-drafted this clause so as to give jurisdiction to second-class Magistrates specially empowered and have thus brought it into line with the provisions of the Opium Act, 1878.

Clause 32 (old clause 29).—We have made a restricting amendment in sub-clause (b), as it seemed too wide.

Clause 34 (old clause 31).—Under this clause as it stood, persons who were not convicted had no right of appeal against an order confiscating their property. We have added a sub-clause giving them this right.

Clause 35 (old clause 32).—In sub-clause (b) we have made a small amendment in order to secure that Government may give rewards out of fines and confiscations to persons who are neither officers nor informers, such as private persons who take an active part in an important capture.

Clause 36 (old clause 33).—In sub-clause (2) we have provided for the case of the minor administration which has no local official Gazette.

Clause 41 (old clause 38).—We have made a drafting amendment.

Schedule I.—We have amended this in consequence of the amendments to section 18.

Schedule II.—The amendments to this schedule are extensive, but with the exceptions noted below they are all purely consequential, flowing necessarily from the amendments we have made in definitions (c), (e), (j) and (l) of clause 2 of the Bill. The exceptions are as follows:—

(1) The definitions of “import” and “export” throughout have been amended so as to preserve the existing control of the Local Governments over intoxicating drugs and narcotic substances which they may declare to be intoxicating drugs. These substances, by sub-clause (iv) of the various definitions of “intoxicating drug” now inserted in the local excise Acts, are not hemp, opium, coca leaf or manufactured drugs, and do not fall within the scope of the Bill. Their control in all respects, therefore, should remain, as heretofore, in the hands of the Local Governments.

(2) The Burma Opium Law Amendment Act, 1909 (Burma Act VII of 1909), has been introduced into the schedule and amended in several minor particulars. This Act has been overlooked when the Bill was drafted. The amendments are all purely formal and consequential and are designed to leave the substance of that Act untouched.

(3) Further amendments have been made in the Eastern Bengal and Assam Excise Act, 1910. That Act had been amended by the Assam Excise (Amendment) Act, 1927, while the Bill was being drafted. The amendments had the effect of bringing cocaine under the control of the Local Government, and the fresh amendments now introduced into the schedule place cocaine again under the control of the Governor-General in Council, in pursuance of the general scheme of the Bill.”—(Report of the Select Committee.)

SCHEDULE I.—Form of bond to abstain from the commission of offences under the Dangerous Drugs Act, 1930.

SCHEDULE II.—Amendments of local Acts.

[1st March, 1930.]

An Act to centralise and vest in the Governor-General in Council the control over certain operations relating to dangerous drugs and to increase and render uniform throughout British India the penalties for offences relating to such operations.

WHEREAS India participated in the Second International Opium Conference, which was convoked in accordance with the resolution of the Assembly of the League of Nations dated the 27th day of September 1923, met at Geneva on the 17th day of November 1924, and on the 19th day of February 1925, adopted the Convention relating to Dangerous Drugs (hereinafter referred to as the Geneva Convention);

AND WHEREAS India was a State signatory to the said Geneva Convention;

AND WHEREAS the Contracting Parties to the said Geneva Convention resolved to take further measures to suppress the contraband traffic in and abuse of Dangerous Drugs, especially those derived from opium, Indian hemp and coca leaf, such measures being more particularly set forth in the Articles of the said Geneva Convention;

AND WHEREAS for the effective carrying out of the said measures it is expedient that the control of certain operations relating to Dangerous Drugs should be centralised and vested in the Governor-General in Council;

AND WHEREAS it is also expedient that the penalties for certain offences relating to Dangerous Drugs should be increased, and that all penalties relating to certain operations should be rendered uniform throughout British India;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I.

PRELIMINARY.

Short title, extent and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE DANGEROUS DRUGS ACT, 1930.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and the Sonthal Parganas.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) “coca leaf” means—

(i) the leaf and young twigs of any coca plant, that is, of the Erythroxylon coca (Lamk.) and the Erythroxylon novogranatense (Hiern.) and their varieties, and of any other species of this genus which the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare to be coca plants for the purposes of this Act; and

(ii) any mixture thereof, with or without neutral materials; but does not include any preparation containing not more than 0.1 per cent. of cocaine;

(b) “coca derivative” means—

(i) crude cocaine, that is, any extract of coca leaf which can be used, directly or indirectly, for the manufacture of cocaine;

(ii) ecgonine, that is, laevo-ecgonine having the chemical formula $C_9H_{15}NO_3 \cdot H_2O$, and all the derivatives of laevo-ecgonine from which it can be recovered;

(iii) cocaine, that is, methyl-benzoyl-laevo-ecgonine having the chemical formula $C_{17}H_{21}NO_4$, and its salts; and

(iv) all preparations, official and non-official, containing more than 0.1 per cent. of cocaine;

(c) “hemp” means—

(i) the leaves, small stalks and flowering or fruiting tops of the Indian hemp plant (Cannabis sativa L.), including all forms known as bhāng, siddhi, or ganja;

(ii) charas, that is, the resin obtained from the Indian hemp plant, which has not been submitted to any manipulations other than those necessary for packing and transport; and

(iii) any mixture, with or without neutral materials, of any of the above forms of hemp or any drink prepared therefrom;

(d) "medicinal hemp" means any extract or tincture of hemp;

(e) "opium" means—

(i) the capsules of the poppy (Papaver somniferum L.);

(ii) the spontaneously coagulated juice of such capsules which has not been submitted to any manipulations other than those necessary for packing and transport; and

(iii) any mixture, with or without neutral materials, of any of the above forms of opium;

but does not include any preparation containing not more than 0.2 per cent. of morphine;

(f) "opium derivative" means—

(i) medicinal opium, that is, opium which has undergone the processes necessary to adapt it for medicinal use in accordance with the requirements of the British Pharmacopoeia, whether in powder form or granulated or otherwise or mixed with neutral materials;

(ii) prepared opium, that is, any product of opium obtained by any series of operations designed to transform opium into an extract suitable for smoking, and the dross or other residue remaining after opium is smoked;

(iii) morphine, that is, the principal alkaloid of opium having the chemical formula $C_{17}H_{19}NO_3$, and its salts;

(iv) diacetylmorphine, that is, the alkaloid, also known as diamorphine or heroin, having the chemical formula $C_{21}H_{23}NO_5$, and its salts; and

(v) all preparations, officinal and non-officinal, containing more than 0.2 per cent. of morphine, or containing any diacetylmorphine;

(g) "manufactured drug" includes—

(i) all coca derivatives, medicinal hemp and opium derivatives; and

(ii) any other narcotic substance which the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India made in pursuance of a recommendation under Article 10 of the Geneva Convention, declare to be a manufactured drug;

but does not include any preparation which the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India made in pursuance of a finding under Article 3 of the Geneva Convention, declare not to be a manufactured drug;

(h) "dangerous drug" includes coca leaf, hemp and opium, and all manufactured drugs;

(i) "to import into British India" means, subject to the provisions of clause (j), to bring into British India by land, sea or air;

(j) "to import inter-provincially" means to bring into one province from another, and includes—

(i) the bringing of a dangerous drug into a province from any territory of a Prince or Chief in India which is adjacent to or enclosed by the territories of such province, which the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare to be inter-provincial import; and

(ii) bringing into one province from another, in the course of a continuous journey, by sea or through the territory of a Prince or Chief in India;

(k) "to export from British India" means, subject to the provisions of clause (l), to take out of British India by land, sea or air;

(l) "to export inter-provincially" means to take out of one province into another, and includes—

(i) the taking of a dangerous drug out of a province into any territory of a Prince or Chief in India which is adjacent to or enclosed by the territories of such province, which the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare to be inter-provincial export; and

(ii) taking out of one province into another, in the course of a continuous journey, by sea or through the territories of a Prince or Chief in India;

(m) "to transport" means to take from one place to another in the same province; and

(n) "territory of a Prince or Chief in India" includes any territory in which the Governor-General in Council exercises powers or jurisdiction by virtue of the Indian (Foreign Jurisdiction) Order in Council, 1902.

Calculation of percentages in liquid preparations.

3. The Governor-General in Council may make rules prescribing the method by which percentages in the case of liquid preparations shall be calculated for the purposes of clauses (a), (b), (e) and (f) of section 2:

Provided that, unless and until such rules are made such percentages shall be calculated on the basis that a preparation containing one per cent. of a substance means a preparation in which one gramme of the substance, if a solid, or one millilitre of the substance, if a liquid, is contained in every one hundred millilitres of the preparation, and so in proportion for any greater or less percentage.

CHAPTER II.

PROHIBITION AND CONTROL.

4. No one shall—

(a) cultivate any coca plant, or gather any portion of a coca plant,

(b) manufacture or possess prepared opium, unless it is prepared from opium lawfully possessed for the consumption of the person so possessing it, or

(c) import into British India, export from British India, tranship or sell prepared opium:

Provided that this section shall not apply to the cultivation of any coca plant or to the gathering of any portion thereof on behalf of Government.

Prohibition of certain operations.

5. (1) No one shall—

(a) cultivate the poppy (Papaver somniferum L.), or

(b) manufacture opium,

save in accordance with rules made under sub-section (2) and with the conditions of any licence for that purpose which he may be required to obtain under those rules.

(2) The Governor-General in Council may make rules permitting and regulating the cultivation of the poppy (Papaver somniferum L.) and the manufacture of opium, and such rules may prescribe the form and conditions of licences for such cultivation and manufacture, the authorities by which such licences may be granted, the fees that may be charged therefor, and any other matter requisite to render effective the control of the Governor-General in Council over such cultivation and manufacture.

(3) The Governor-General in Council may also make rules permitting and regulating the sale of opium from Government factories for export or to Local Governments or to manufacturing chemists.

Control of Governor-
General in Council over production and supply of opium.

6. (1) No one shall manufacture any manufactured drug, other than prepared opium, save in accordance with rules made under sub-section (2) and with the conditions of any licence for that purpose which he may be required to obtain under those rules.

(2) The Governor-General in Council may make rules permitting and regulating the manufactured drugs, other than prepared opium, and such rules may prescribe the form and conditions of licences for such manufacture, the authorities by which such licences may be granted and the fees that may be charged therefor, and any other matter requisite to render effective the control of the Governor-General in Council over such manufacture.

Control of Governor-
General in Council over manufacture of manufactured drugs.

(3) Nothing in this section shall apply to the manufacture of medicinal opium or of preparations containing morphine, diacetylmorphine or cocaine from materials which the maker is lawfully entitled to possess.

Control of Governor-General in
operations at land and sea frontiers.

7. (1) No one shall—

(a) import into British India,

(b) export from British India, or any dangerous drug, other than prepared opium, save in accordance with rules made under sub-section (2) and with the conditions of any licence for that purpose which he may be required to obtain under those rules.

(c) tranship

(2) The Governor-General in Council may make rules permitting and regulating the import into and export from British India and the transshipment of dangerous drugs, other than prepared opium, and such rules may prescribe the ports or places at which any kind of dangerous drug may be imported, exported or transhipped, the form and conditions of licences for such import, export or transshipment, the authorities by which such licences may be granted, the fees that may be charged therefor, and any other matter requisite to render effective the control of the Governor-General in Council over such import, export and transshipment.

Control of Local Government over internal traffic in manufactured drugs and coca leaf.

8. (1) No one shall—

(a) import or export inter-provincially, transport, possess or sell any manufactured drug, other than prepared opium, or coca leaf, or

(b) manufacture medicinal opium or any preparation containing morphine, diacetylmorphine or cocaine, save in accordance with rules made under sub-section (2) and with the conditions of any licence for that purpose which he may be required to obtain under those rules.

(2) The Local Government may, subject to the control of the Governor-General in Council, make rules permitting and regulating—

(a) the inter-provincial import and export into and from the territories under its administration, the transport, possession and sale of manufactured drugs, other than prepared opium, and of coca leaf; and

(b) the manufacture of medicinal opium or of any preparation containing morphine, diacetylmorphine or cocaine from materials which the maker is lawfully entitled to possess.

Such rules may prescribe the form and conditions of licences for such import, export, transport, possession, sale and manufacture, the authorities by which such licences may be granted and the fees that may be charged therefor, and any other matters requisite to render effective the control of the Local Government over such import, export, transport, possession, sale and manufacture.

(3) Save in so far as may be expressly provided in rules made under sub-section (2), nothing in this section shall apply to manufactured drugs which are the property and in the possession of Government: .

Provided that such drugs shall not be sold or otherwise delivered to any person who, under the rules made by the Local Government under this section, is not entitled to their possession.

9. No one shall engage in or control any trade whereby a dangerous drug is obtained outside British India and supplied to any person outside British India, save in accordance with the conditions of a licence granted by and at the discretion of the Local Government.

Control of Local Government over external dealings in drugs.

CHAPTER III.

OFFENCES AND PENALTIES.

10. Whoever—

(a) cultivates any coca plant or gathers any portion of a coca plant,

(b) manufactures or possesses prepared opium otherwise than as permitted under section 4, or

(c) imports into British India, exports from British India, tranships or sells prepared opium, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both:

Provided that this section shall not apply to the cultivation of any coca plant or to the gathering of any portion thereof on behalf of Government.

Punishment
for contravention of section 4.

11. Whoever, in contravention of section 5, or any rule made under that section, or of any condition of a licence granted thereunder,

(a) cultivates the poppy, or

(b) manufactures opium, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Punishment
for contravention of section 5.

12. Whoever, in contravention of section 6, or any rule made under that section, or any condition of a licence granted thereunder, manufactures any manufactured drug, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Punishment
for contravention of section 6.

Punishment
for contravention of
section 7.

13. Whoever, in contravention of section 7, or any rule made under that section, or any condition of a licence granted thereunder,

(a) imports into British India,

(b) exports from British India, or any dangerous drug, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

(c) tranships

Punishment
for contravention of section 8.

14. Whoever, in contravention of section 8, or any rule made under that section, or any condition of a licence issued thereunder;

(a) imports or exports inter-provincially, transports, possesses or sells any manufactured drug or coca leaf, or

(b) manufactures medicinal opium or any preparations containing morphine, diacetylmorphine, or cocaine, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Punishment for allowing premises to be used for the commission of an offence.

15. Whoever, being the owner or occupier or having the use of any house, room, enclosure, space, vessel, vehicle, or place, knowingly permits it to be used for the commission by any other person of an offence punishable under section 10, section 12, section 13, or section 14, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Enhanced
punishment for certain offences after previous conviction.

16. Whoever, having been convicted of an offence punishable under section 10, section 12, section 13, or section 14, is guilty of any offence punishable under any of those sections, shall be subject for every such subsequent offence to imprisonment which may extend to four years, or to fine, or to both.

Enhanced
punishment for offence under section 15 after previous conviction.

17. Whoever, having been convicted of an offence punishable under section 15, is again guilty of an offence punishable under that section, shall be subject for every such subsequent offence to imprisonment which may extend to four years, or to fine, or to both.

Security for abstaining from commission of certain offences.

18. (1) Whenever any person is convicted of an offence punishable under section 10, section 12, section 13, or section 14, and the Court convicting him is of opinion that it is necessary to require such person to execute a bond for abstaining from the commission of offences punishable under those sections, the Court may, at the time of passing sentence on such person, order him to execute a bond for a sum proportionate to his means, with or without sureties, for abstaining from the commission of such offences during such period, not exceeding three years, as it thinks fit to fix.

(2) The bond shall be in the form contained in Schedule I, and the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, shall, in so far as they are applicable, apply to all matters connected with such bond as if it were a bond to keep the peace ordered to be executed under section 106 of that Code.

(3) If the conviction is set aside on appeal or otherwise, the bond so executed shall become void.

(4) An order under this section may also be made by an appellate Court, or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision.

19. Whoever engages in or controls any trade whereby a dangerous drug is obtained outside British India and supplied to any person outside British India, otherwise than in accordance with the conditions of a licence granted under section 9, shall be punished with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees.

Penalty for contravention of section 9.

20. Whoever attempts to commit an offence punishable under this Chapter, or to cause such an offence to be committed, and in such attempt does any act towards the commission of the offence, shall be punished with the punishment provided for the offence.

Attempts

21. (1) Whoever abets an offence punishable under this Chapter shall, whether such offence be or be not committed in consequence of such abetment, and notwithstanding anything contained in section 116 of the Indian Penal Code, be punished with the punishment provided for the offence.

Abetments.

(2) A person abets an offence within the meaning of this section who, in British India, abets the commission of any act in a place without and beyond British India which—

(a) would constitute an offence if committed within British India; or

(b) under the laws of such place, is an offence relating to dangerous drugs having all the legal conditions required to constitute it such an offence the same as or analogous to the legal conditions required to constitute it an offence punishable under this Chapter, if committed within British India.

CHAPTER IV.

PROCEDURE.

22. (1) The Collector, or other officer authorized by the Local Government in this behalf, or a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class, or a Magistrate of the second class specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, may issue a warrant for the arrest of any person whom he has reason to believe to have committed an offence punishable under Chapter III, or for the search, whether by day or by night, of any building, vessel or place in which he has reason to believe any dangerous drug in respect of which an offence punishable under Chapter III has been committed is kept or concealed.

Power to issue warrants.

(2) The officer to whom a search warrant under sub-section (1) is addressed shall have all the powers of an officer acting under section 23.

Power of entry, search, seizure and arrest without warrant.

23. (1) Any officer of the department of Excise, Police, Customs, Salt, Opium, or Revenue, superior in rank to a peon or constable, authorized in this behalf by the Local Government, who has reason to believe, from personal knowledge or from information given by any person and taken down in writing, that any dangerous drug in respect of which an offence punishable under Chapter III has been committed is kept or concealed in any building, vessel or enclosed place, may, between sunrise and sunset,—

(a) enter into any such building, vessel or place;

(b) in case of resistance, break open any door and remove any other obstacle to such entry;

(c) seize such drug and all materials used in the manufacture thereof and any other article which he has reason to believe to be liable to confiscation under section 33 and any document or other article which he has reason to believe may furnish evidence of the commission of an offence punishable under Chapter III relating to such drug; and

(d) detain and search, and, if he think proper, arrest any person who he has reason to believe to have committed an offence punishable under Chapter III relating to such drug:

Provided that if such officer has reason to believe that a search warrant cannot be obtained without affording opportunity for the concealment of evidence or facility for the escape of an offender, he may enter and search such building, vessel or enclosed place at any time between sunset and sunrise, after recording the grounds of his belief.

(2) Where an officer takes down any information in writing under sub-section (1), or records grounds for his belief under the proviso thereto, he shall forthwith send a copy thereof to his immediate official superior.

Power of seizure and arrest in public places.

24. Any officer of any of the departments mentioned in section 23 may—

(a) seize, in any public place or in transit, any dangerous drug in respect of which he has reason to believe an offence punishable under Chapter III has been committed, and, along with such drug, any other article liable to confiscation under section 33, and any document or other article which he has reason to believe may furnish evidence of the commission of an offence punishable under Chapter III relating to such drug;

(b) detain and search any person whom he has reason to believe to have committed an offence punishable under Chapter

III, and, if such person has any dangerous drug in his possession and such possession appears to him to be unlawful, arrest him and any other persons in his company.

25. The provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, shall apply, in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of sections 22, 23 and 24, to all warrants issued and arrests and searches made under those sections.

Mode of making searches and arrests.

26. All officers of the several department mentioned in section 23 shall, upon notice given or request made, be legally bound to assist each other in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

Obligations on officers to assist each other.

27. Whenever any person makes any arrest or seizure under this Act, he shall, within forty-eight hours next after such arrest or seizure, make a full report of all the particulars of such arrest or seizure to his immediate official superior.

Report of arrests and seizures.

28. Any person empowered under section 23 or section 24 who—

Punishment for vexatious entry, search, seizure or arrest.

(a) without reasonable grounds of suspicion, enters or searches, or causes to be entered or searched, any building, vessel or place;

(b) vexatiously and unnecessarily seizes the property of any person on the pretence of seizing or searching for any dangerous drug or other article liable to be confiscated under section 33, or of seizing any document or other article liable to seizure under section 23 or section 24; or

(c) vexatiously and unnecessarily detains, searches or arrests any person; shall be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

29. (1) Every person arrested and article seized under a warrant issued under section 22 shall be forwarded without delay to the authority by whom the warrant was issued; and every person arrested and article seized under section 23 or section 24 shall be forwarded without delay to the officer in charge of the nearest police station or to the nearest officer of the Excise Department empowered under section 30.

Disposal of persons arrested and of articles seized.

(2) The authority or officer to whom any person or article is forwarded under this section shall, with all convenient despatch, take such measures as may be necessary for the disposal according to law of such person or article.

30. The Local Government may invest any officer of the Excise Department or any class of such officers, with the powers of an officer in charge of a police station for the investigation of offences under this Act.

Power to invest Excise officers with powers of an officer in charge of a police station

to try offences.

31. No Magistrate shall try an offence under this Act unless he is a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class, or a Magistrate of the second class specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf.

Presumption from possession of illicit articles.

32. In trials under this Act it may be presumed, unless and until the contrary is proved, that the accused has committed an offence under Chapter III in respect of—

- (a) any dangerous drug;
- (b) any poppy or coca plant growing on any land which he has cultivated;
- (c) any apparatus specially designed or any group of utensils specially adapted for the manufacture of any dangerous drug; or
- (d) any materials which have undergone any process towards the manufacture of a dangerous drug, or any residue left of the materials from which a dangerous drug has been manufactured, for the possession of which he fails to account satisfactorily.

Liability of illicit articles to confiscation.

33. (1) Whenever any offence has been committed which is punishable under Chapter III, the dangerous drug, materials, apparatus and utensils in respect of which or by means of which such offence has been committed, shall be liable to confiscation.

(2) Any dangerous drug lawfully imported, transported, manufactured, possessed, or sold along with, or in addition to, any dangerous drug which is liable to confiscation under sub-section (1), and the receptacles, packages and coverings in which any dangerous drug, materials, apparatus or utensils liable to confiscation under sub-section (1) is found, and the other contents, if any, of such receptacles or packages, and the animals, vehicles, vessels and other conveyances used in carrying the same, shall likewise be liable to confiscation:

Provided that no animal, vehicle, vessel or other conveyance shall be liable to confiscation unless it is proved that the owner thereof knew that the offence was being, or was to be or was likely to be, committed.

Procedure in making confiscations.

34. (1) In the trial of offences under this Act, whether the accused is convicted or acquitted, the Court shall decide whether any article seized under this Chapter is liable to confiscation under section 33; and, if it decides that the article is so liable, it may order confiscation accordingly.

(2) Where any article seized under this Chapter appears to be liable to confiscation under section 33, but the person who committed the offence in connection therewith is not known or cannot be found, the Collector or other officer authorized by the Local Government in this behalf, may inquire into and decide such liability, and may order confiscation accordingly:

Provided that no order of confiscation of an article shall be made until the expiry of one month from the date of seizure, or without hearing any person who may claim any right thereto and the evidence, if any, which he produces in respect of his claim:

Provided, further, that, if any such article, other than a dangerous drug, is liable to speedy and natural decay, or if the Collector or other officer is of opinion that its sale would be for the benefit of its owner, he may at any time direct it to be sold; and the provisions of this sub-section shall, as nearly as may be practicable, apply to the net proceeds of the sale.

(3) Any person not convicted who claims any right to property which has been confiscated under this section may appeal to the Court of Session against the order of confiscation.

35. The Governor-General in Council may make rules to regulate—

(a) the disposal of all articles confiscated under this Act, and

(b) the rewards to be paid to officers, informers and other persons out of the proceeds of fines and confiscations under this Act.

Power to make rules regulating disposal of confiscated articles and rewards.

CHAPTER V.

MISCELLANEOUS.

36. (1) All rules made under this Act shall be subject to the condition of previous publication.

Provisions regarding rules.

(2) Rules made by the Governor-General in Council shall be published in the Gazette of India, and rules made by a Local Government shall be published in the local official Gazette or, where there is no local official Gazette, in the Gazette of India.

(3) Rules made by a Local Government shall not be inconsistent with any rules made by the Governor-General in Council, and shall be void to the extent of any such inconsistency.

37. (1) Any arrear of any licence fee chargeable by any rule made under this Act may be recovered from the person primarily liable to pay the same or from his surety (if any) as if it were an arrear of land-revenue.

Recovery of sums due to Government.

(2) When any person, in compliance with any rule made under this Act, gives a bond (other than a bond under section 18) for the performance of any act, or for his abstention from any act, such performance or abstention shall be deemed to be a public duty, within the meaning of section 74 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872; and, upon breach of the conditions of such bond by him, the whole sum named therein as the amount to be paid in case of such breach may be recovered from him or from his surety (if any) as if it were an arrear of land-revenue.

Application of the Sea
Customs Act,
1878.

38. All prohibitions and restrictions imposed by or under this Act on the import into British India, the export from British India, and the transshipment of dangerous drugs, shall be deemed to be prohibitions and restrictions imposed under section 19 or section 134 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, and the provisions of that Act shall apply accordingly: •

Provided that, where the doing of any thing is an offence punishable under that Act and under this Act, nothing in that Act or in this section shall prevent the offender from being punished under this Act.

Saving of local and special laws.

39. (1) Nothing in this Act or in the rules made thereunder shall affect the validity of any enactment of a local Legislature for the time being in force, or of any rule made thereunder, which imposes any restriction not imposed by or under this Act, or imposes a restriction greater in degree than a corresponding restriction imposed by or under this Act, on the consumption of or traffic in any dangerous drug within British India.

(2) Nothing in this Act or in the rules made thereunder shall affect the validity of the Opium Act, 1857: •

Provided that, where the doing of any thing is an offence punishable under that Act and under this Act, nothing in that Act or in this sub-section shall prevent the offender from being punished under this Act.

Amendment
of certain enactments.

40. The enactments specified in the first three columns of Schedule II are hereby amended to the extent and in the manner mentioned in the fourth column thereof.

Saving of things already done.

41. When anything done under any enactment specified in the first three columns of Schedule II is in force immediately prior to the commencement of this Act, it shall be deemed, as from the commencement of this Act, to have been done under this Act or under that enactment as hereby amended as the case may require.

THE INDIAN SALE OF GOODS ACT, 1930.

ACT No III OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTES:—History of the Act.—The history of this enactment has been explained as follows by the First Select Committee in their report. The Committee was composed of such lawyers of eminence as Mr. D. F. Mulla, Mr. Jayakar, Mr. Alladi Krishnasami Iyer, the Advocate-General, Madras, with the Hon. Sir B. L. Mitter, Law Member of the Council of the Governor-General as the Chairman. They said:—

2. A Bill to amend and define the law relating to the sale of goods, with the notes setting forth the reasons for the proposed amendments, which had already been prepared in the Legislative Department of the Government of India, was placed before us, and formed the basis of our discussions.

3. Before the passing of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, Chapter VII of which contains the law relating to the sale of goods or moveables, the law on this subject was not only not uniform throughout British India but was also, outside the limits of the original jurisdiction of the High Courts, extremely uncertain in its application. Within the limits of the Presidency-towns, the rules of English law, including those in the Statute of Frauds, were applied, whilst in the mufassal it was doubtful whether the Statute of Frauds was applicable and, as observed by the Indian Law Commissioners in their second report, the Judge was to a great extent without the guidance of any positive law beyond the rule that his decision should be such as he deemed to be in accordance with "justice, equity and good conscience." To remedy this unsatisfactory state of affairs, the Indian Law Commissioners framed, in their second report, dated the 28th July 1866, a set of rules relating to the general law of contracts including therein provisions relating to the sale of moveables. The draft of the Law Commissioners underwent several changes at the hands of the then Law Members, Sir Henry Maine and Sir James Stephen, and also in the Select Committee of the Indian Legislature. But, as stated by Sir James Stephen himself while presenting the report of the Select Committee on the Indian Contract Bill, the chapter on the sale of goods, except in regard to the rule as to market overt, represented generally the English law on the subject as it then stood.

4. The rules of English law relating to the sale of goods had grown up mainly out of judicial decisions. Along with the general law of contract, they were the product of many generations and were adapted to the circumstances and exigencies of the times and the dealings of the people. They were, however, largely dominated by the provisions of the Statute of Frauds which was passed in the reign of Charles The Second. The Law Commissioners, as well as those who were ultimately responsible for framing the Indian Contract Act, at once realized that the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, although followed in the Presidency-towns, were not suitable to the conditions prevailing in this country, and that "any law relating to this important subject must at any rate be free from the inexpressible confusion and intricacy which is thrown over every part of that Statute in consequence of its vague language".

5. In 1870, various branches of law were being codified in British India. The main object in view was, in the words of Sir James Stephen, "that of providing a body of law to the Government of the country so expressed that it might be readily understood both by English and Native Government servants without extrinsic help from the English law libraries". What was urgently needed was a guide for the judge or magistrate who had but little legal training, derived little or no assistance from the Bar and worked at a distance from any law library.

6. Whatever merit the simple and elementary rules embodied in the Indian Contract Act may have had, and however sufficient and suitable they may have been for the needs which they were intended to meet in 1872, the passage of time has revealed defects the removal of which has become necessary in order to keep the law abreast of the developments of modern business relations. The law relating to the sale of goods appertains mainly to mercantile transactions. There can be no doubt that during the last half century conditions in this country relating to trade and business have undergone material changes. Methods of business have largely altered and new relations have arisen between man and man. In dealing with these relations, it has been necessary to give recognition to new principles, and the Indian Courts have found that a law enacted more than fifty years ago is entirely inadequate to enable them to deal with these new relations or give effect to the new principles. The result has been that on various occasions the Courts have had to hold that Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act is not exhaustive, and to import therein analogies from the decisions of the English Courts.

7. The English law relating to the sale of goods which was admittedly the basis of Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act has itself since 1872 undergone drastic changes, and was finally codified in 1893 by the present Sale of Goods Act (56 & 57 Vict., c. 71), which discards many of the old common law rules upon which Chapter VII of the Indian Act was based, in favour of provisions more suited to modern conditions or more convenient in actual practice.

8. By the Bill referred to for our consideration, the law relating particularly to the sale of goods is embodied in a separate enactment, although many of the general principles contained in the Indian Contract Act will continue to be applicable thereto. When Sir James Stephen moved the Indian Contract Bill, he admitted that it was not, and could not pretend to be, a complete code upon the branch of law to which it related. He, however, expressed a hope that in later years it would be easy to enact supplementary chapters relating to the several branches of the law of contract which the Bill did not touch. This hope has never been fulfilled. In later years it was found more convenient to have separate enactments for the several branches of the law of contract, e.g., the Transfer of Property Act, the Negotiable Instruments Act, and the Merchant Shipping Act. In our opinion, in view of the complexity of modern conditions, the time has now come when this process should be accelerated by embodying the different branches of law relating to contract in separate self-contained enactments; and we hope that the Bill which we attach to our Report may be passed into law at an early date and may be but the first of the series required to complete the task which we have outlined above.

9. The Bill referred to us was mainly based on the English Sale of Goods Act, 1893. This Act has stood the test of nearly thirty-five years of practical application, and in the words of Lord Parker in re Parchim, (1918) A. C. 157 at pages 160-161, "is a very successful and correct codification of this branch of the mercantile law". As is shown in the note below, most of the Colonies and Overseas Dominions have adopted and re-enacted the Act with only such small variations as have been found necessary to adapt its provisions to local circumstances. It is also remarkable that the Uniform Sales Act, passed in 1906 in the United States of America and adopted in twenty out of fifty-three States and territories, is based very largely on the English Act. These facts constitute striking evidence of the completeness and the universal suitability of its provisions.

10. In mercantile transactions a conflict of laws should, as far as possible, be avoided. Uniformity of law in various countries, particularly in those which have business or trade dealings with one another, is highly convenient and desirable. We, therefore, approve of the proposal to adopt the provisions of the English Sale of Goods Act so far as they are suitable to Indian conditions as the basis for the present Bill, and thus to make the Indian Law relating to the sale of goods as nearly as possible uniform with the law in force in other parts of the British Empire.

11. The provisions of the English Act are far more elaborate and comprehensive than those of Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act, and in their arrangement the English Act is more logical and methodical. As we have already observed, it has revised and brought up to date the rules of the English Common Law. Moreover, the adoption of the English Act as the basis of the present Bill will enable Indian Courts to interpret its provisions in the light of the decisions of the English Courts.

12. In adopting the provisions of the English Act we have not been unmindful of the needs and exigencies of this country. Wherever it has been found that a rule obtaining in England, such as that relating to market overt, is not suitable to Indian conditions, the rule has been rejected. We have, moreover, carefully scrutinised the provisions of the English Act in the light of the decisions of English Courts since 1893, and where those decisions have shown the provisions of the English Act to be defective or ambiguous, we have attempted to improve upon them. We have also retained several of the provisions of the Indian Contract Act which we consider necessary or useful to meet special conditions existing in India.

The Bill as revised by us on the above lines is attached to our Report as Appendix C.

13. A detailed explanation of the various clauses of the Bill is set out in our notes on clauses. But we think it desirable to draw attention to the following few points of importance:

(a) The present Bill embodies the principle that the question whether a contract for the sale of goods does or does not pass the property in the goods from the buyer to the seller must in all cases be determined by the intention of the parties to the contract. The provisions of Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act are vague and conflicting on this point. The Bill codifies the rules by which that intention may be ascertained, but the operation of these rules will be displaced by any terms of the contract defining the intention or by any attendant circumstances, including the conduct of the parties, rendering it ascertainable. In following this principle, we have borne in mind that in mercantile matters the certainty of the rule is often of more importance than the substance. If the parties know beforehand what their legal position is, they can provide for their particular wants by express stipulations. Sale, after all, is a consensual contract, and the Bill does not prevent the parties from making any bargain they please. Its object is to lay down clear rules for the cases where the parties have either formed no intention or failed to express it.

(b) The distinction between a sale and an agreement to sell, which was not clear in Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act, has been clearly brought out. This distinction is very necessary to determine the rights and liabilities of the parties to the contract.

(c) It is made clear that a contract of sale can be made by mere offer and acceptance. Neither payment nor delivery is necessary for the purpose.

(d) Before 1893 the law in England relating to warranties and conditions was in a very confused state. In the Indian Contract Act the word "warranty" has been used in a very vague sense. In some provisions it denotes a condition which would enable a party aggrieved by its breach to repudiate the contract, while in others it enables him to claim damages only. In the Bill this ambiguity has been removed.

(e) There is much conflict of decisions in India regarding the meaning of section 108 of the Indian Contract Act which relates to sales by ostensible owners. This is to a certain extent due to the obscure phraseology of the section itself. We had tried to remove this obscurity in clauses 27 to 30 of the Bill to simplify the law on the subject.

(f) We have elaborated the rules relating to delivery to carriers, stoppage in transit and auction sales.

(g) We have anxiously considered the question of the retention of the Illustrations appearing in Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act and of the insertion of Illustrations to new provisions. Our decision is that the better policy is to forego all Illustrations, leaving the Courts to construe the sections as they stand.—(Report of the 1st Select Committee.)

This being a highly technical piece of Legislation, the Bill was again referred to another Select Committee, who in the course of their report said:—

"The History of this Bill is as follows:—In 1926-27 an exhaustive examination of the case-law bearing on certain portions of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, including Chapter VII, which embodies the law relating to sale of goods, was made in the Legislative Department under the supervision of the late Mr. S. R. Das, then Law Member of the Executive Council of the Governor-General. In 1928 the results of that examination were considered by Mr. D. F. Mulla (now Sir Dinsha Mulla), at that time holding the office of the Law Member, and a draft Bill was prepared on the lines of the English Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vic., c. 71), embodying the provisions of law relating to sale of goods in a separate enactment. In order to ensure general approval for a measure of such a highly technical character, the Government of India in 1929 appointed a Committee consisting of the Honourable the Law Member, Sir Dinsha Mulla, Mr. A. Krishnaswami Ayyar, the Advocate-General of Madras, and Mr. M. R. Jayakar, Barrister-at-Law, M.L.A., to consider generally the question of amending the law relating to sale of goods contained in Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, and in particular to examine the draft Bill. This Committee agreed to the proposal that the law relating to the sale of goods should be embodied in a separate enactment, and considered the draft Bill referred to them, in which they made certain additions and alterations. The Bill as settled by the Committee was circulated for opinion by executive order, and was introduced in the Legislative Assembly in September 1929. The reasons for the various clauses of the Bill are fully set out in the Report of the Committee which was appended as a Statement of Objects and Reasons thereto. The opinions received show that the Bill has met with almost unanimous approval in legal and commercial circles. The object, therefore, for which the Committee was appointed has been amply justified.

After considering the opinions received, we find ourselves in agreement with almost all the provisions contained in the Bill. We entirely approve of the scheme followed in the Bill in adopting as far as possible the provisions of English Sale of Goods Act, 1893, in arrangement as well as wording. As pointed out in paragraph 9 of the Committee's Report referred to above, that Act has met with uniform approval and has stood the test for more than a third of a century. It has been adopted in most of the overseas Dominions and Colonies and also in the United States of America. We find in commercial transactions there ought to be as far as possible uniformity of law in countries which have dealings with one another."—(Report of the 2nd Select Committee.)

As stated above, the Act is based to a very large extent on the English Sale of Goods Act.

The History of the English Sale of Goods Act is as follows:—The English Sale of Goods Bill was originally drafted by Mr. Chalmers in 1888. He then settled it in consultation with Lord Herschell, who kindly consented to take charge of it. In 1889, Lord Herschell introduced it in the House of Lords, not to press it on, but to get criticisms on it. In 1890 there was no opportunity of proceeding with it, but in 1891 the Bill was again introduced in the Lords, and referred to a Select Committee. It had, in the meantime, been criticised by Lord Bramwell, Mr. Walter Ker, and other lawyers and the Bar Committee had submitted a valuable memorandum on it. In the Lords it was carefully considered by a Select Committee, consisting of Lords Herschell, Halsbury, Bramwell, and Watson. Professor Richard Brown and Mr. Spens of Glasgow took an infinity of pains to suggest the necessary amendments. In 1893 the Bill was again passed through the Lords in the form in which it was settled in 1892. It was then considered by a Select Committee of the House of Commons and further amended. The Committee consisted of Sir Charles Russell, A.G., Sir R. Webster, Q.C., Mr. Asher, Q.C. (the Scotch Solicitor-General), Mr. Shiress Will, Q.C., Mr. Bousfield, Q.C., Mr. Ambrose, Q.C., and Mr. Mather. Some of the amendments introduced by the Commons were modified on its return to the Lords, and it was finally settled in its present form. The Bill, in its original form, was drafted on the same lines as the Bills of Exchange Bill. On Lord Herschell's advice it endeavoured to reproduce as exactly as possible the existing law, leaving any amendments that might seem desirable to be introduced in committee on the authority of the Legislature. In mercantile matters, the certainty of the rule, is often of more importance than the substance of the rule (Cf. Lockyer v. Offley, 1 T. R., at p. 259). If the parties know before hand what their legal position is, they can provide for their particular wants by express stipulation. Sale is a consensual contract, and the Act does not seek to prevent the parties from making any bargain they please. Its object is to lay down clear rules for the case where the parties have either formed no intention, or failed to express it.

The codification in England of the law relating to the sale of goods has produced a somewhat unexpected benefit. It has to a great extent produced uniformity in this branch of the law throughout the dominions of the Crown. Most of the Colonies have adopted and re-enacted the Act, with, of course, small variations to adapt it to local circumstances.

Defects in the Contract Act.—As has been stated the Indian Contract Act is not exhaustive of the Law relating to Contracts. See the Preamble to that Act which refers only to certain parts of the Law of Contracts; also 21 M. L. J. 600; 11 M. L. T. 57; 11 I. C. 570; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 285; 18 Cal. 620; 18 I. A. 121 (P. C.); A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 990; 25 Bom. L. R. 778; 77 I. C. 150; A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 41. The Contract Act was also found defective in other respects (See A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 41).

The Bill which afterwards became the Contract Act was drawn in 1866 in England by the Indian Law Commissioners. In the following year it was introduced in the Council of the Governor-General during the absence of Mr. (afterwards Sir Henry) Maine by the Right Hon. W. N. Massey, referred to a Select Committee, and published and circulated to the Local Governments. Thereupon a controversy arose between the Secretary of State and the Commissioners on the one side, the Home and the Indian authorities on the other, as to the Commissioners' proposal that all penalties should be treated as liquidated damages, and that the ownership of goods may be acquired by buying them from any person who is in possession of them, if the buyer acts in good faith, and under circumstances which do not raise a presumption that the possessor has no right to sell them, in other words, that every place in India should become a market overt. The result was that the Secretary of State permitted the Government of India to take their own course as to altering the Bill; the Commissioners resigned; and the Bill (whose early enactment was directed by the Secretary of State) was carried through the Council with some important amendments, by Mr. (afterwards Sir Fitzjames) Stephen. (See Whitley Stokes' Anglo-Indian Codes, Vol. 1, P. 534.)

Thus, in the preparation of the Contract Act, "not only the work of different hands, but work done from quite different points of view, had been pieced together with an incongruous effect..... Another source of unequal workmanship, and sometimes of positive error, is that the framers of the Indian Codes, and of the Contract Act in particular, were tempted to borrow a section here and a section there from the draft Civil Code of New York, an infliction which the sound Lawyers of that State have been happily successful so far in averting from its citizens. This Code is in our opinion, and we believe in that of most competent Lawyers who have examined it, about the worst piece of codification ever produced. It is constantly defective and inaccurate, both in apprehending the rules of Law which it purports to define and in expressing the draftsman's more or less satisfactory understanding of them. The clauses on fraud and misrepresentation in contracts which are rather worse, if anything, than the average badness of the whole were most unfortunately adopted in the Indian Contract Act. Whenever this Act (the Indian Contract Act) was revised, it was felt that it would be necessary that everything taken from Mr. Dudley Field's Code should be struck out and the sections carefully recast after independent examination of the best authorities". In fact, the Contract Act passed through not less than three distinct stages: First, there was the draft prepared in England by the Indian Law Commission, uniform in style and possessing great merit as an elementary statement of the combined effect of common law and equity doctrine as understood some forty years ago. Next, this was revised and in parts elaborated by the Legislative departments in India. The borrowing from the New York draft Code seems to belong to this phase. Lastly, Sir James made or supervised the final revision, and added the introductory definitions, which are wholly in a different style and not altogether in harmony with the body of the work. Evidently this process could not satisfy the conditions of a model Code. It is much to the credit of the workman that the result, after allowing for all drawbacks, was a generally sound and useful one. (See Preface to the first edition of Pollock's Contract Act.)

Mr. Whitley Stokes wrote as early as 1887 as follows:—"Unfortunately it (the Contract Bill) had been sent out to India in a very crude form; it never underwent the patient penetrating revision by a skilled draftsman necessary in the case of such a measure; and though the Indian Judges have loyally endeavoured to give effect to its provisions, these are so incomplete and sometimes so inaccurately worded that the time seems to have come for repealing the Act, and re-enacting it with the amendments in arrangements, wording and substance, suggested by the cases decided upon it during the last fourteen years. Should this be done it would be well to incorporate the existing laws relating to negotiable instruments, to exchanges, and to sales and mortgages and leases of immoveable property, and to add chapters on carriers and insurance." (Whitley Stokes' Anglo-Indian Codes.)

General operation.—"The English Sale of Goods Act, 1893," says Lord Parker, "is in fact merely a codification, and, as is generally admitted, a very successful and correct codification of this branch of English mercantile law. It embodies the principle that the question whether a contract for sale of goods does or does not pass the property in the goods contracted to be sold must in all cases be determined by the intention of the parties to the contract. The Act codifies the rules by which that intention is to be ascertained, but the inference based on the rules may always be displaced by the terms of the contract itself, or the surrounding circumstances, including the conduct of the parties. No doubt the municipal law with reference to which the parties enter into the particular transaction is material in considering their intention as to the passing of the property; and if it appears that they contracted with reference to a municipal law other than English and if it be further proved that that municipal law is different in any material respect from the English law, this will of course be taken into account in determining their intention. But having regard to the presumption that, unless the contrary be proved, the general law of a foreign country is the same as the English law the mere fact that the contract was entered into with reference to the law of another country will be immaterial." [The Parchim, (1918) A. C. 157, at pp. 160, 161 (P. C.).]

Places where the English Sale of Goods Act has been adopted as the basis for legislation.—The following countries have adopted the English Sale of Goods Act as the model for legislation on this branch of law: Alberta, Sale of Goods Ordinance, Terr. Cons. Ord. 1898, c. 39 (omits section 22).

Bahamas, Sale of Goods Ordinance, 4 Edw. 7, c. 37 [omits sections 49 (3) and 59, as applicable to Scottish law].

Barbados, 1895, No. 91 (omits sections 4, 17 and 22).

British Columbia, Rev. St. 1911, c. 203 (has section 4, value 50 dollars; has section 22, but introduces for protection of subsequent buyers, etc., special provisions as to formalities of conditional sales).

British Guiana, Sale of Goods Ordinance, 1913 (Ord. No. 26) (has section 4, value 48 dollars; has section 22, which applies to "goods sold in any public market held under the authority of the Government, or otherwise in accordance with the law, according to the usage of the market"; section 60, sub-section (2), adds to the savings the law of warranty and suretyship).

British Honduras, 1899, No. 14.

Ceylon, 1896, No. 11 (section 4 is applied to all contracts for the sale of goods, by omitting words limiting the value; section 22 is omitted).

Gibraltar, 1895, No. 20 (has section 4, value 250 pesetas; omits section 22).

Hong Kong, 1896, No. 7 (has section 4, value 100 dollars; has section 22 and defines market overt).

Isle of Man, 1895, Sale of Goods Act (has section 4, value £5; section 24-Eng. section 22, but is subject to the provisions of section 26 as to re-vesting of property on conviction where goods are stolen).

Jamaica, 1895, No. 12 (omits section 22).

Manitoba, Rev. Stat. 1902, c. 152 (has section 4, value 50 dollars; omits section 22).

New Brunswick, 1919, c. 4.

Newfoundland, 1899, 62 Vict., c. 2 (has section 4, value 50 dollars; omits section 22).

New Zealand, 1895, No. 23, now Sale of Goods Act, 1908, No. 168 (section 24-Eng. section 22, but sub-section (3) enacts that nothing in the Act "shall be construed to create a market overt in New Zealand").

North-West Territories of Canada, Consol. Ord. 1905, c. 39 [has section 4, value 50 dollars; omits section 22; and adopts sections 49 (3) and 59 from Scottish law].

Nova Scotia, Sale of Goods Act, 1910 [has section 4, value 40 dollars; and section 32, sub-section (3), is made to apply to "sea, lake, or river" transit].

Ontario, c. 40, 1920.

Prince Edward Island, 1919, c. 11.

Queensland, 1896, 60 Vict. No. 6 (omits section 22).

Saskatchewan, Sale of Goods Act, Rev. Stat. 1909, c. 147 [has section 4 (50 dollars). The proviso to section 14, sub-section (1) is not adopted, whereas sections 49 (3) (dealing with interest on the price) and 59 (payment into Court) are adopted from Scottish law].

South Australia, 1895, No. 630.

Tasmania, 1896, No. 14 [does not adopt the Scottish law declared in sections 49 (3) and 59; adds in section 31 the words "or warrant" after "writ of feri facias" and before "or other writ". Section 27, sub-section (2), saves the law relating to "cattle"].

Trinidad and Tobago, 1895, No. 64 (omits section 22).

Victoria, 1896, No. 1422. (Part I is identical with the English Act, but the Victoria Act has a wider scope and provides for the law relating to consignees, mercantile agents, documents of title to goods, etc.)

(Benjamin on Sale, pages 196-197, Chalmers' Sale of Goods, pages 157-158, Journal of Comparative Legislation, 3rd Series, Vol. II, p. 79.)

Construction of the Act.—The Act, just as the English Sale of Goods Act, is divided into Chapters, and those Chapters are again sub-divided by various headings. Regard must be had to these divisions in construing the Act [Inglis vs. Robertson, (1898) A. C. 616 at p. 630].

Canon of construction.—The canon for construing a codifying Act was discussed by the House of Lords in a case on the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. "I think," says Lord Herschell, "the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the statute, and see what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law; and not to start with inquiring how the law previously stood, and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if it will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view."

But, of course, as he proceeds to point out, if any provision be of doubtful import resort to the previous state of the law would be perfectly legitimate [Vagliano vs. Bank of England, (1891) A. C. 107 at p. 145.]

Construction of mercantile contracts.—As a general rule there is in law no difference of construction between mercantile contracts and other instruments. The grammatical meaning is, as in other cases, the meaning to be adopted unless there be some reasons to the contrary. (Per Jessel, M. R., Southwell vs. Bowditch, (1876) 1 C. P. D. p. 376, 45 L. J. C. P. 630. But "in looking at a document between businessmen, I do not think it is wise to look at technical rules of construction. I think it is well to look at the whole document, to look at the subject-matter with which the parties are dealing, and then to take the words in their natural and ordinary meaning and construe the document in that way." [Per Lord Halsbury Tatham vs. Burr, (1898) A. C. 382 (386); 67 L. J. P. 463.] In dealing with mercantile instruments the court must look at the substance of the matter and is not restrained to such nicety of construction as is the case with regard to conveyances, pleadings and the like. [Cockburn vs. Alexander, (1848) 6 C. B. 791, 814; 18 L. J. C. P. 74, 83, per Maule, J.] Mansfield, C. J., said that all mercantile documents ought to have a liberal interpretation. As has been laid down by the courts, in construing mercantile contracts the governing principle must be to ascertain the intention of the parties through the words they have used. [Mc Connel vs. Murphy, (1873) L. R. 5 P. C. 203, 218.]

Another principle of construction of mercantile contracts is that "no clause should as far as possible be regarded as superfluous; courts must assume that each clause was inserted by the parties for some good purpose with some definite meaning. This is the usual rule in all mercantile contracts: and merchants are not in the habit of inserting in their contracts stipulations to which they do not attach some value or importance." [Bowes vs. Shand, (1877) 2 App. Cas. 455.]

Their Lordships of the Privy Council stated that in respect of mercantile instruments the construction which commended itself to their Lordships is "one that gave a meaning to every part of the document." (Thakurani vs. Rae Jagupal, 31 I. A. 142.)

Uniformity of rules desirable.—It is highly desirable that the law relating to the construction of mercantile contracts and the remedies for the breach should generally proceed on the same principle in all parts of the world; and especially that this uniformity should prevail in respect of a mother country and its dependencies. Similarly courts in India should, as far as possible, proceed on one and the same principle in construing contracts among merchants in different parts of the country. [Dimeek vs. Corlett, (1858) 12 Moo. P. C. 199, 299; Remfry Sale of Goods, Tagore Law Lectures.]

Trade usages.—Mercantile contracts are also largely controlled by trade usages, and trade customs,—a trade usage being merely a usage so general and well understood with reference to the business, place and class of persons, that the parties are presumed to have made their contract with tacit reference to it and to have intended to be governed by it in the same way and to the same extent as other like persons in like cases. [Moult vs. Halliday, (1898) 1 Q. B. 130.]

[15th March, 1930.]

An Act to define and amend the law relating to the sale of goods.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend the law relating to the sale of goods; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I.

PRELIMINARY.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN SALE OF GOODS Act, 1930.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and the Sonthal Parganas.

(3) It shall come into force on the first day of July, 1930.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(1) “buyer” means a person who buys or agrees to buy goods;

(2) “delivery” means voluntary transfer of possession from one person to another;

(3) goods are said to be in a “deliverable state” when they are in such state that the buyer would under the contract be bound to take delivery of them;

(4) “document of title to goods” includes a bill of lading, dock-warrant, warehouse keeper’s certificate, wharfingers’ certificate, railway receipt, warrant or order for the delivery of goods and any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods; or authorizing or purporting to authorize, either by endorsement or by delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive goods thereby represented;

Short title extent and commencement.

Definitions.

(5) "fault" means wrongful act or default;

(6) "future goods" means goods to be manufactured or produced or acquired by the seller after the making of the contract of sale;

(7) "goods" means every kind of moveable property other than actionable claims and money; and includes stock and shares, growing crops, grass, and things attached to or forming part of the land which are agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale;

(8) a person is said to be "insolvent" who has ceased to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business, or cannot pay his debts as they become due, whether he has committed an act of insolvency or not;

(9) "mercantile agent" means a mercantile agent having in the customary course of business as such agent authority either to sell goods, or to consign goods for the purposes of sale, or to buy goods, or to raise money on the security of goods;

(10) "price" means the money consideration for a sale of goods;

(11) "property" means the general property in goods, and not merely a special property;

(12) "quality of goods" includes their state or condition;

(13) "seller" means a person who sells or agrees to sell goods;

(14) "specific goods" means goods identified and agreed upon at the time a contract of sale is made; and

(15) expressions used but not defined in this Act and defined in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, have the meanings assigned to them in that Act.

Application of provisions of Act IX of 1872.

3. The unrepealed provisions of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, save in so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of this Act, shall continue to apply to contracts for the sale of goods.

CHAPTER II.

FORMATION OF THE CONTRACT.

Contract of Sale.

Sale and agreement to sell.

4. (1) A contract of sale of goods is a contract whereby the seller transfers or agrees to transfer the property in goods to the buyer for a price. There may be a contract of sale between one part-owner and another.

(2) A contract of sale may be absolute or conditional.

(3) Where under a contract of sale the property in the goods is transferred from the seller to the buyer, the contract is called a sale, but where the transfer of the property in the goods is to take place at a future time or subject to some condition thereafter to be fulfilled, the contract is called an agreement to sell.

(4) An agreement to sell becomes a sale when the time elapses or the conditions are fulfilled subject to which the property in the goods is to be transferred.

Formalities of the Contract.

5. (1) A contract of sale is made by an offer to buy or sell goods for a price and the acceptance of such offer. The contract may provide for the immediate delivery of the goods or immediate payment of the price or both, or for the delivery or payment by instalments, or that the delivery or payment or both shall be postponed.

Contract of sale how made.

(2) Subject to the provisions of any law for the time being in force, a contract of sale may be made in writing or by word of mouth, or partly in writing and partly by word of mouth or may be implied from the conduct of the parties.

Subject-matter of Contract.

6. (1) The goods which form the subject of a contract of sale may be either existing goods, owned or possessed by the seller, or future goods.

Existing or future goods.

(2) There may be a contract for the sale of goods the acquisition of which by the seller depends upon a contingency which may or may not happen.

(3) Where by a contract of sale the seller purports to effect a present sale of future goods, the contract operates as an agreement to sell the goods.

7. Where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods, the contract is void if the goods without the knowledge of the seller have, at the time when the contract was made, perished or become so damaged as no longer to answer to their description in the contract.

Goods
before
contract.

8. Where there is an agreement to sell specific goods, and subsequently the goods without any fault on the part of the seller or buyer perish or become so damaged as no longer to answer to their description in the agreement before the risk passes to the buyer, the agreement is thereby avoided.

Goods
perishing before sale but after agreement to sell.

The Price.

9. (1) The price in a contract of sale may be fixed by the contract or may be left to be fixed in manner thereby agreed or may be determined by the course of dealing between the parties.

Ascertain-
price.

(2) Where the price is not determined in accordance with the foregoing provisions, the buyer shall pay the seller a reasonable price. What is a reasonable price is a question of fact dependent on the circumstances of each particular case.

sell at valuation.

10. (1) Where there is an agreement to sell goods on the terms that the price is to be fixed by the valuation of a third party and such third party cannot or does not make such valuation, the agreement is thereby avoided:

Provided that, if the goods or any part thereof have been delivered to; and appropriated by, the buyer, he shall pay a reasonable price therefor.

(2) Where such third party is prevented from making the valuation by the fault of the seller or buyer, the party not in fault may maintain a suit for damages against the party in fault.

Conditions and Warranties.

Stipulations
as to time.

11. Unless a different intention appears from the terms of the contract, stipulations as to time of payment are not deemed to be of the essence of a contract of sale. Whether any other stipulation as to time is of the essence of the contract or not depends on the terms of the contract.

Condition and warranty.

12. (1) A stipulation in a contract of sale with reference to goods which are the subject thereof may be a condition or a warranty.

(2) A condition is a stipulation essential to the main purpose of the contract, the breach of which gives rise to a right to treat the contract as repudiated.

(3) A warranty is a stipulation collateral to the main purpose of the contract, the breach of which gives rise to a claim for damages but not to a right to reject the goods and treat the contract as repudiated.

(4) Whether a stipulation in a contract of sale is a condition or a warranty depends in each case on the construction of the contract. A stipulation may be a condition, though called a warranty in the contract.

When condition to be treated as warranty.

13. (1) Where a contract of sale is subject to any condition to be fulfilled by the seller, the buyer may waive the condition or elect to treat the breach of the condition as a breach of warranty and not as a ground for treating the contract as repudiated.

(2) Where a contract of sale is not severable and the buyer has accepted the goods or part thereof, or where the contract is for specific goods the property in which has passed to the buyer, the breach of any condition to be fulfilled by the seller can only be treated as a breach of warranty and not as a ground for rejecting the goods and treating the contract as repudiated, unless there is a term of the contract, express or implied, to that effect.

(3) Nothing in this section shall affect the case of any condition or warranty fulfilment of which is excused by law by reason of impossibility or otherwise.

14. In a contract of sale, unless the circumstances of the contract are such as to show a different intention there is—

Implied undertaking as to title, etc.

(a) an implied condition on the part of the seller that, in the case of a sale, he has a right to sell the goods and that, in the case of an agreement to sell, he will have a right to sell the goods at the time when the property is to pass;

(b) an implied warranty that the buyer shall have and enjoy quiet possession of the goods;

(c) an implied warranty that the goods shall be free from any charge or encumbrance in favour of any third party not declared or known to the buyer before or at the time when the contract is made.

15. Where there is a contract for the sale of goods by description, there is an implied condition that the goods shall correspond with the description; and, if the sale is by sample as well as by description, it is not sufficient that the bulk of the goods corresponds with the sample if the goods do not also correspond with the description.

Sale by description.

16. Subject to the provisions of this Act and of any other law, for the time being in force, there is no implied warranty or condition as to the quality or fitness for any particular purpose of goods supplied under a contract of sale, except as follows:—

Implied conditions as to quality or fitness.

(1) Where the buyer, expressly or by implication, makes known to the seller the particular purpose for which the goods are required, so as to show that the buyer relies on the seller's skill or judgment, and the goods are of a description which it is in the course of the seller's business to supply (whether he is the manufacturer or producer or not), there is an implied condition that the goods shall be reasonably fit for such purpose:

Provided that, in the case of a contract for the sale of a specified article under its patent or other trade name, there is no implied condition as to its fitness for any particular purpose.

(2) Where goods are bought by description from a seller who deals in goods of that description (whether he is the manufacturer or producer or not), there is an implied condition that the goods shall be of merchantable quality:

Provided that, if the buyer has examined the goods, there shall be no implied condition as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed.

(3) An implied warranty or condition as to quality or fitness for a particular purpose may be annexed by the usage of trade.

(4) An express warranty or condition does not negative a warranty or condition implied by this Act unless inconsistent therewith.

Sale by sample.

17. (1) A contract of sale is a contract for sale by sample where there is a term in the contract, express or implied, to that effect.

(2) In the case of a contract for sale by sample there is an implied condition—

(a) that the bulk shall correspond with the sample in quality;

(b) that the buyer shall have a reasonable opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample;

(c) that the goods shall be free from any defect, rendering them unmerchantable, which would not be apparent on reasonable examination of the sample.

CHAPTER III.

EFFECTS OF THE CONTRACT.

Transfer of property as between seller and buyer.

Goods must be ascertained.

18. Where there is a contract for the sale of unascertained goods, no property in the goods is transferred to the buyer unless and until the goods are ascertained.

Property passes when intended to pass.

19. (1) Where there is a contract for the sale of specific or ascertained goods the property in them is transferred to the buyer at such time as the parties to the contract intend it to be transferred.

(2) For the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties regard shall be had to the terms of the contract, the conduct of the parties and the circumstances of the case.

(3) Unless a different intention appears, the rules contained in sections 20 to 24 are rules for ascertaining the intention of the parties as to the time at which the property in the goods is to pass to the buyer.

Specific goods in a deliverable state.

20. Where there is an unconditional contract for the sale of specific goods in a deliverable state, the property in the goods passes to the buyer when the contract is made, and it is immaterial whether the time of payment of the price or the time of delivery of the goods, or both, is postponed.

Specific goods to be put into a deliverable
state.

21. Where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods and the seller is bound to do something to the goods for the purpose of putting them into a deliverable state, the property does not pass until such thing is done and the buyer has notice thereof.

Specific goods in a deliverable state,

22. Where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods in a deliverable state, but the seller is bound to weigh, measure, test or do some other act or thing with reference to the goods for the purpose of ascertaining the price, the property does not pass until such act or thing is done and the buyer has notice thereof.

when the seller has to do anything thereto in order to ascertain price

23. (1) Where there is a contract for the sale of unascertained or future goods by description and goods of that description and in a deliverable state or unconditionally appropriated to the contract, either by the seller with the assent of the buyer or by the buyer with the assent of the seller, the property in the goods thereupon passes to the buyer. Such assent may be express or implied, and may be given either before or after the appropriation is made.

Sale of unascertained goods and appropriation.

(2) Where, in pursuance of the contract, the seller delivers the goods to the buyer or to a carrier or other bailee (whether named by the buyer or not) for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, and does not reserve the right of disposal, he is deemed to have unconditionally appropriated the goods to the contract.

Delivery to carrier.

24. When goods are delivered to the buyer on approval or "on sale or return" or other similar terms, the property therein passes to the buyer—

Goods sent on approval or "on sale or return".

(a) when he signifies his approval or acceptance to the seller or does any other act adopting the transaction;

(b) if he does not signify his approval or acceptance to the seller but retains the goods without giving notice of rejection, then, if a time has been fixed for the return of the goods, on the expiration of such time, and, if no time has been fixed, on the expiration of a reasonable time.

25. (1) Where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods or where goods are subsequently appropriated to the contract, the seller may, by the terms of the contract or appropriation, reserve the right of disposal of the goods until certain conditions are fulfilled. In such case, notwithstanding the delivery of the goods to a buyer, or to a carrier or other bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, the property in the goods does not pass to the buyer until the conditions imposed by the seller are fulfilled.

Reservation of right of disposal.

(2) Where goods are shipped and by the bill of lading the goods are deliverable to the order of the seller or his agent, the seller is prima facie deemed to reserve the right of disposal.

(3) Where the seller of goods draws on the buyer for the price and transmits the bill of exchange and bill of lading to the buyer together, to secure acceptance or payment of the bill of exchange, the buyer is bound to return the bill of lading if he does not honour the bill of exchange and if he wrongfully retains the bill of lading the property in the goods does not pass to him.

Risk prima facie passes with property.

26. Unless otherwise agreed, the goods remain at the seller's risk until the property therein is transferred to the buyer, but when the property therein is transferred to the buyer, the goods are at the buyer's risk whether delivery has been made or not:

Provided that, where delivery has been delayed through the fault of either buyer or seller, the goods are at the risk of the party in fault as regards any loss which might not have occurred but for such fault:

Provided also that nothing in this section shall affect the duties or liabilities of either seller or buyer as a bailee of the goods of the other party.

Transfer of title.

Sale by person not the owner.

27. Subject to the provisions of this Act and of any other law for the time being in force, where goods are sold by a person who is not the owner thereof and who does not sell them under the authority or with the consent of the owner, the buyer acquires no better title to the goods than the seller had, unless the owner of the goods is by his conduct precluded from denying the seller's authority to sell:

Provided that, where a mercantile agent is, with the consent of the owner, in possession of the goods or of a document of title to the goods, any sale made by him, when acting in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent, shall be as valid as if he were expressly authorized by the owner of the goods to make the same; provided that the buyer acts in good faith and has not at the time of the contract of sale notice that the seller has not authority to sell.

Sale by one of joint owners.

28. If one of several joint owners of goods has the sole possession of them by permission of the co-owners, the property in the goods is transferred to any person who buys them of such joint owner in good faith and has not at the time of the contract of sale notice that the seller has not authority to sell.

Sale by person in possession under voidable contract.

29. When the seller of goods has obtained possession thereof under a contract voidable under section 19 or section 19-A of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, but the contract has not been rescinded at the time of the sale, the buyer acquires a good title to the goods; provided he buys them in good faith and without notice of the seller's defect of title.

Seller or buyer in possession after sale.

30. (1) Where a person, having sold goods, continues or is in possession of the goods or of the documents of title to the goods, the delivery or transfer by that person or by a mercantile agent acting for him, of the goods or documents of title under any sale, pledge or other disposition thereof to any person receiving the same in good faith and without notice of the previous sale shall have the same effect as if the person making the delivery or transfer were expressly authorized by the owner of the goods to make the same.

(2) Where a person, having bought or agreed to buy goods, obtains, with the consent of the seller, possession of the goods or the documents of title to the goods, the delivery or transfer by that person or by a mercantile agent acting for him, of the goods or documents of title under any sale, pledge or other disposition thereof to any person receiving the same in good faith and without notice of any lien or other right of the original seller in respect of the goods shall have effect as if such lien or right did not exist.

CHAPTER IV.

PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT.

31. It is the duty of the seller to deliver the goods and of the buyer to accept and pay for them, in accordance with the terms of the contract of sale.

Duties of seller and buyer.

32. Unless otherwise agreed, delivery of the goods and payment of the price are concurrent conditions, that is to say, the seller shall be ready and willing to give possession of the goods to the buyer in exchange for the price, and the buyer shall be ready and willing to pay the price in exchange for possession of the goods.

Payment and delivery are concurrent conditions.

33. Delivery of goods sold may be made by doing anything which the parties agree shall be treated as delivery or which has the effect of putting the goods in the possession of the buyer or of any person authorized to hold them on his behalf.

Delivery.

34. A delivery of part of goods, in progress of the delivery of the whole, has the same effect, for the purpose of passing the property in such goods, as a delivery of the whole; but a delivery of part of the goods, with an intention of severing it from the whole, does not operate as a delivery of the remainder.

Effect of part delivery.

35. Apart from any express contract, the seller of goods is not bound to deliver them until the buyer applies for delivery.

Buyer to apply for delivery.
Rules as to delivery.

36. (1) Whether it is for the buyer to take possession of the goods or for the seller to send them to the buyer is a question depending in each case on the contract, express or implied, between the parties. Apart from any such contract, goods sold are to be delivered at the place at which they are at the time of the sale, and goods agreed to be sold are to be delivered at the place at which they are at the time of the agreement to sell, or, if not then in existence, at the place at which they are manufactured or produced.

(2) Where under the contract of sale the seller is bound to send the goods to the buyer, but no time for sending them is fixed, the seller is bound to send them within a reasonable time.

(3) Where the goods at the time of sale are in the possession of a third person, there is no delivery by seller to buyer unless and until such third person acknowledges to the buyer that he holds the goods on his behalf:

Provided that nothing in this section shall affect the operation of the issue or transfer of any document of title to goods.

(4) Demand or tender of delivery may be treated as ineffectual unless made at a reasonable hour. What is a reasonable hour is a question of fact.

(5) Unless otherwise agreed, the expenses of and incidental to putting the goods into a deliverable state shall be borne by the seller.

Delivery of wrong quantity.

37. (1) Where the seller delivers to the buyer a quantity of goods less than he contracted to sell, the buyer may reject them, but if the buyer accepts the goods so delivered he shall pay for them at the contract rate.

(2) Where the seller delivers to the buyer a quantity of goods larger than he contracted to sell, the buyer may accept the goods included in the contract and reject the rest, or he may reject the whole. If the buyer accepts the whole of the goods so delivered, he shall pay for them at the contract rate.

(3) Where the seller delivers to the buyer the goods he contracted to sell mixed with goods of a different description not included in the contract, the buyer may accept the goods which are in accordance with the contract and reject the rest, or may reject the whole.

(4) The provisions of this section are subject to any usage of trade, special agreement or course of dealing between the parties.

Instalment deliveries.

38. (1) Unless otherwise agreed, the buyer of goods is not bound to accept delivery thereof by instalments.

(2) Where there is a contract for the sale of goods to be delivered by stated instalments which are to be separately paid for, and the seller makes no delivery or defective delivery in respect of one or more instalments, or the buyer neglects or refuses to take delivery of or pay for one or more instalments, it is a question in each case depending on the terms of the contract and the circumstances of the case, whether the breach of contract is a repudiation of the whole contract, or whether it is a severable breach giving rise to a claim for compensation, but not to a right to treat the whole contract as repudiated.

Delivery to carrier or wharfinger.

39. (1) Where, in pursuance of a contract of sale, the seller is authorized or required to send the goods to the buyer, delivery of the goods to a carrier, whether named by the buyer or not, for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, or delivery of the goods to a wharfinger for safe custody, is prima facie deemed to be a delivery of the goods to the buyer.

(2) Unless otherwise authorized by the buyer, the seller shall make such contract with the carrier or wharfinger on behalf of the buyer as may be reasonable having regard to the nature of the goods and the other circumstances of the case. If the seller omits so to do, and the goods are lost or damaged in course of transit or whilst in the custody of the wharfinger, the buyer may decline to treat the delivery to the carrier or wharfinger as a delivery to himself, or may hold the seller responsible in damages.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed, where goods are sent by the seller to the buyer by a route involving sea transit, in circumstances in which it is usual to insure, the seller shall give such notice to the buyer as may enable him to insure them during their sea transit, and if the seller fails so to do, the goods shall be deemed to be at his risk during such sea transit.

40. Where the seller of goods agrees to deliver them at his own risk at a place other than that where they are when sold, the buyer shall, nevertheless, unless otherwise agreed, take any risk of deterioration in the goods necessarily incident to the course of transit.

Risk where goods are delivered at distant place.

41. (1) Where goods are delivered to the buyer which he has not previously examined, he is not deemed to have accepted them unless and until he has had a reasonable opportunity of examining them for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are in conformity with the contract.

Buyer's right of examining the goods.

(2) Unless otherwise agreed, when the seller tenders delivery of goods to the buyer, he is bound, on request, to afford the buyer a reasonable opportunity of examining the goods for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are in conformity with the contract.

42. The buyer is deemed to have accepted the goods when he intimates to the seller that he has accepted them, or when the goods have been delivered to him and he does any act in relation to them which is inconsistent with the ownership of the seller, or when, after the lapse of a reasonable time, he retains the goods without intimating to the seller that he has rejected them.

Acceptance.

43. Unless otherwise agreed, where goods are delivered to the buyer and he refuses to accept them, having the right so to do, he is not bound to return them to the seller, but it is sufficient if he intimates to the seller that he refuses to accept them.

Buyer no bound to return rejected goods.

44. When the seller is ready and willing to deliver the goods and requests the buyer to take delivery, and the buyer does not within a reasonable time after such request take delivery of the goods, he is liable to the seller for any loss occasioned by his neglect or refusal to take delivery, and also for a reasonable charge for the care and custody of the goods:

Liability of buyer for neglecting or refusing delivery of goods.

Provided that nothing in this section shall affect the rights of the seller where the neglect or refusal of the buyer to take delivery amounts to a repudiation of the contract.

CHAPTER V.

RIGHTS OF UNPAID SELLER AGAINST THE GOODS.

"Unpaid seller" defined.

45. (1) The seller of goods is deemed to be an "unpaid seller" within the meaning of this Act—

(a) when the whole of the price has not been paid or tendered;

(b) when a bill of exchange or other negotiable instrument has been received as conditional payment, and the condition on which it was received has not been fulfilled by reason of the dishonour of the instrument or otherwise.

(2) In this Chapter, the term "seller" includes any person who is in the position of a seller, as, for instance, an agent of the seller to whom the bill of lading has been indorsed, or a consignor or agent who has himself paid, or is directly responsible for, the price.

Unpaid seller's rights.

46. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act and of any law for the time being in force, notwithstanding that the property in the goods may have passed to the buyer, the unpaid seller of goods, as such, has by implication of law—

(a) a lien on the goods for the price while he is in possession of them;

(b) in case of the insolvency of the buyer a right of stopping the goods in transit after he has parted with the possession of them;

(c) a right of re-sale as limited by this Act.

(2) Where the property in goods has not passed to the buyer, the unpaid seller has, in addition to his other remedies, a right of withholding delivery similar to and co-extensive with his rights of lien and stoppage in transit where the property has passed to the buyer.

Unpaid seller's lien.

Seller's lien.

47. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the unpaid seller of goods who is in possession of them is entitled to retain possession of them until payment or tender of the price in the following cases, namely:—

(a) where the goods have been sold without any stipulation as to credit;

(b) where the goods have been sold on credit, but the term of credit has expired;

(c) where the buyer becomes insolvent.

(2) The seller may exercise his right of lien notwithstanding that he is in possession of the goods as agent or bailee for the buyer.

48. Where an unpaid seller has made part delivery of the goods, he may exercise his right of lien on the remainder, unless such part delivery has been made under such circumstances as to show an agreement to waive the lien.

Part delivery.

49. (1) The unpaid seller of goods loses his lien thereon—

Termination of lien.

(a) when he delivers the goods to a carrier or other bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer without reserving the right of disposal of the goods;

(b) when the buyer or his agent lawfully obtains possession of the goods;

(c) by waiver thereof.

(2) The unpaid seller of goods, having a lien thereon, does not lose his lien by reason only that he has obtained a decree for the price of the goods.

Stoppage in transit.

50. Subject to the provisions of this Act, when the buyer of goods becomes insolvent, the unpaid seller who has parted with the possession of the goods has the right of stopping them in transit, that is to say, he may resume possession of the goods as long as they are in the course of transit, and may retain them until payment or tender of the price.

Right of stoppage in transit.

51. (1) Goods are deemed to be in course of transit from the time when they are delivered to a carrier or other bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, until the buyer or his agent in that behalf takes delivery of them from such carrier or other bailee.

Duration of transit.

(2) If the buyer or his agent in that behalf obtains delivery of the goods before their arrival at the appointed destination, the transit is at an end.

(3) If, after the arrival of the goods at the appointed destination, the carrier or other bailee acknowledges to the buyer or his agent that he holds the goods on his behalf and continues in possession of them as bailee for the buyer or his agent, the transit is at an end and it is immaterial that a further destination for the goods may have been indicated by the buyer.

(4) If the goods are rejected by the buyer and the carrier or other bailee continues in possession of them, the transit is not deemed to be at an end, even if the seller has refused to receive them back.

(5) When goods are delivered to a ship chartered by the buyer, it is a question depending on the circumstances of the particular case, whether they are in the possession of the master as a carrier or as agent of the buyer.

(6) Where the carrier or other bailee wrongfully refuses to deliver the goods to the buyer or his agent in that behalf, the transit is deemed to be at an end.

(7) Where part delivery of the goods has been made to the buyer or his agent in that behalf, the remainder of the goods may be stopped in transit, unless such part delivery has been given in such circumstances as to show an agreement to give up possession of the whole of the goods.

How stoppage in transit is effected.

52. (1) The unpaid seller may exercise his right of stoppage in transit either by taking actual possession of the goods, or by giving notice of his claim to the carrier or other bailee in whose possession the goods are. Such notice may be given either to the person in actual possession of the goods or to his principal. In the latter case the notice, to be effectual, shall be given at such time and in such circumstances that the principal, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, may communicate it to his servant or agent in time to prevent a delivery to the buyer.

(2) When notice of stoppage in transit is given by the seller to the carrier or other bailee in possession of the goods, he shall re-deliver the goods to, or according to the directions of, the seller. The expenses of such re-delivery shall be borne by the seller.

Transfer by buyer and seller.

Effect of sub-sale or pledge by buyer.

53. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the unpaid seller's right of lien or stoppage in transit is not affected by any sale or other disposition of the goods which the buyer may have made, unless the seller has assented thereto:

Provided that where a document of title to goods has been issued or lawfully transferred to any person as buyer or owner of the goods, and that person transfers the document to a person who takes the document in good faith and for consideration, then, if such last mentioned transfer was by way of sale, the unpaid seller's right of lien or stoppage in transit is defeated, and, if such last mentioned transfer was by way of pledge or other disposition for value, the unpaid seller's right of lien or stoppage in transit can only be exercised subject to the rights of the transferee.

(2) Where the transfer is by way of pledge, the unpaid seller may require the pledgee to have the amount secured by the pledge satisfied in the first instance, as far as possible, out of any other goods or securities of the buyer in the hands of the pledgee and available against the buyer.

54. (1) Subject to the provisions of this section, a contract of sale is not rescinded by the mere exercise by an unpaid seller of his right of lien or stoppage in transit.

Sale not generally rescinded by lien or stoppage in transit.

(2) Where the goods are of a perishable nature, or where the unpaid seller who has exercised his right of lien or stoppage in transit gives notice to the buyer of his intention to re-sell, the unpaid seller may, if the buyer does not within a reasonable time pay or tender the price, re-sell the goods within a reasonable time and recover from the original buyer damages for any loss occasioned by his breach of contract, but the buyer shall not be entitled to any profit which may occur on the re-sale. If such notice is not given, the unpaid seller shall not be entitled to recover such damages and the buyer shall be entitled to the profit, if any, on the re-sale.

(3) Where an unpaid seller who has exercised his right of lien or stoppage in transit re-sells the goods, the buyer acquired a good title thereto as against the original buyer, notwithstanding that no notice of the re-sale has been given to the original buyer.

(4) Where the seller expressly reserves a right of re-sale in case the buyer should make default, and, on the buyer making default, re-sells the goods, the original contract of sale is thereby rescinded, but without prejudice to any claim which the seller may have for damages.

CHAPTER VI.

SUITS FOR BREACH OF THE CONTRACT.

55. (1) Where under a contract of sale the property in the goods has passed to the buyer and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay for the goods according to the terms of the contract, the seller may sue him for the price of the goods.

Suit for price.

(2) Where under a contract of sale the price is payable on a day certain irrespective of delivery and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay such price, the seller may sue him for the price although the property in the goods has not passed and the goods have not been appropriated to the contract.

56. Where the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to accept and pay for the goods, the seller may sue him for damages for non-acceptance.

Damages for non-acceptance.

57. Where the seller wrongfully neglects or refuses to deliver the goods to the buyer, the buyer may sue the seller for damages for non-delivery.

Damages for non-delivery.

58. Subject to the provisions of Chapter II of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, in any suit for breach of contract to deliver specific or ascertained goods, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the plaintiff, by its decree direct that the contract shall be performed specifically, without giving the defendant the option of retaining the goods on payment of damages. The decree may be unconditional, or upon such terms and conditions as to damages, payment of the price or otherwise, as the Court may deem just, and the application of the plaintiff may be made at any time before the decree.

Remedy for breach of warranty.

59. (1) Where there is a breach of warranty by the seller, or where the buyer elects or is compelled to treat any breach of a condition on the part of the seller as a breach of warranty, the buyer is not by reason only of such breach of warranty entitled to reject the goods; but he may—

(a) set up against the seller the breach of warranty in diminution or extinction of the price; or

(b) sue the seller for damages for breach of warranty.

(2) The fact that a buyer has set up a breach of warranty in diminution or extinction of the price does not prevent him from suing for the same breach of warranty if he has suffered further damage.

Repudiation of contract before due date.

60. Where either party to a contract of sale repudiates the contract before the date of delivery, the other may either treat the contract as subsisting and wait till the date of delivery, or he may treat the contract as rescinded and sue for damages for the breach.

Interest by
ges and special damages.

61. (1) Nothing in this Act shall affect the right of the seller or the buyer to recover interest or special damages in any case where by law interest or special damages may be recoverable, or to recover the money paid where the consideration for the payment of it has failed.

(2) In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the Court may award interest at such rate as it thinks fit on the amount of the price—

(a) to the seller in a suit by him for the amount of the price from the date of the tender of the goods or from the date on which the price was payable;

(b) to the buyer in a suit by him for the refund of the price in a case of a breach of the contract on the part of the seller from the date on which the payment was made.

CHAPTER VII.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Exclusion of implied terms and conditions.

62. Where any right, duty or liability would arise under a contract of sale by implication of law, it may be negatived or varied by express agreement or by the course of dealing between the parties, or by usage, if the usage is such as to bind both parties to the contract.

63. Where in this Act any reference is made to a reasonable time, the question what is a reasonable time is a question of fact.

Reasonable time a question of fact.

64. In the case of a sale by auction—

Auction sale.

(1) Where goods are put up for sale in lots, each lot is prima facie deemed to be the subject of a separate contract of sale;

(2) the sale is complete when the auctioneer announces its completion by the fall of the hammer or in other customary manner; and, until such announcement is made, any bidder may retract his bid;

(3) a right to bid may be reserved expressly by or on behalf of the seller and, where such right is expressly so reserved, but not otherwise, the seller or any one person on his behalf may, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, bid at the auction;

(4) where the sale is not notified to be subject to a right to bid on behalf of the seller, it shall not be lawful for the seller to bid himself or to employ any person to bid at such sale, or for the auctioneer knowingly to take any bid from the seller or any such person; and any sale contravening this rule may be treated as fraudulent by the buyer;

(5) the sale may be notified to be subject to a reserved or upset price;

(6) if the seller makes use of pretended bidding to raise the price, the sale is voidable at the option of the buyer.

65. Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, is hereby repealed.

Repeal.

66. (1) Nothing in this Act or in any repeal effected thereby shall affect or be deemed to affect—

Savings.

(a) any right, title, interest, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred before the commencement of this Act, or

(b) any legal proceedings or remedy in respect of any such right, title, interest, obligation or liability, or

(c) anything done or suffered before the commencement of this Act, or

(d) any enactment relating to the sale of goods which is not expressly repealed by this Act, or

(e) any rule of law not inconsistent with this Act.

(2) The rules of insolvency relating to contracts for the sale of goods shall continue to apply thereto, notwithstanding anything contained in this Act.

(3) The provisions of this Act relating to contracts of sale do not apply to any transaction in the form of a contract of sale which is intended to operate by way of mortgage, pledge, charge or other security.

THE INDIAN CONTRACT (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Act No. IV of 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE.—The following extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons would show the circumstances that led to the passing of this Act:—

“The object of this Bill is to give effect to the recommendation of the Special Committee, appointed by the Government of India to examine and draft the Indian Sale of Goods Bill, that section 178 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, should be amended so as to make it consistent with the amendment proposed by the Committee in section 108. Both the sections are cognate and are based on the same principle; and there has been considerable conflict of decisions regarding their scope. The Special Committee has proposed to remove this conflict in section 108 by restricting its provisions to sales by persons who are in possession of the subject-matter of the sale as mercantile agents only, and the present Bill amends section 178 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, on the same lines.”—(Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

The following is the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill:—

We, the undersigned members of the Select Committee to which the Bill further to amend the Indian Contract Act, 1872, for certain purposes was referred, have considered the Bill and have the honour to submit this report with the Bill as amended by us annexed hereto.

2. This Bill is supplementary to the Indian Sale of Goods Bill. On the lines of the amendment made in clause 27 of that Bill we have substituted the words “a mercantile agent” for the words “where an agent . . . to security of goods”. We have also substituted the words “documents of title to goods” for the words “bill of lading, dock order . . . thereby represented”. As the expressions “mercantile agent” and “documents of title” are not defined in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, in which this section will remain, we have added an Explanation stating that those expressions will have the meanings assigned to them in the Indian Sale of Goods Act, 1930.

For the reasons stated in the note to clause 29 in our report on the Indian Sale of Goods Bill, we have inserted a new section as 178-A to provide for the case of a pledge by a person in possession under a voidable contract.

3. We have also made a few alterations of a purely drafting nature.

[15th March, 1930.]

An Act to amend the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Indian Contract Act, 1872, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN CONTRACT (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

(2) It shall come into force on the first day of July 1930.

2. For section 178 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, the following sections shall be substituted, namely:—

Amendment
of section 178,
Act IX of

“ 178. Where a mercantile agent is, with the consent of the owner, in possession of goods or the documents of title to goods, any pledge made by him, when acting in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent, shall be as valid as if he were expressly authorized by the owner of the goods to make the same; provided that the pawnee acts in good faith and has not at the time of the pledge notice that the pawnor has not authority to pledge.

1872.
Pledge by mercantile agent.

Explanation.—In this section, the expressions “mercantile agent” and “documents of title” shall have the meanings assigned to them in the Indian Sale of Goods Act, 1930.

178-A. When the pawnor has obtained possession of the goods pledged by him under a contract voidable under section 19 or section 19-A, but the contract has not been rescinded at the time of the pledge, the pawnee acquires a good title to the goods, provided he acts in good faith and without notice of the pawnor’s defect of title.”

Pledge by person in possession under void-able contract

THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Act No. V of 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following is the Statement of Objects and Reasons annexed to the Bill:—

“The formal amendments contained in this Bill are designed to carry out the intentions of Explanation I contained in section 4 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929. The difficulties sought to be met by the latter part of the body of the Explanation are not confined to cases where registration is effected under sub-section (2) of section 30 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, but they are also encountered when an instrument relating to scattered properties is registered in the ordinary manner. Further, it is possible, under the present Explanation, that a subsequent transferee may make a genuine search in the offices of all the sub-districts in which the property he seeks to acquire is situated, and find no record of a transfer; but may still find himself saddled with notice of a transfer by reason of a memorandum relating to some other property, included in a previous transfer along with the property he is interested in, having been filed in some distant sub-district. The Bill is intended to remove all these anomalies.”

[15th March, 1930.]

An Act to amend the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929, for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Amendment
of section 4,
Act XX of 1929.

2. In section 4 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929,—

(i) in Explanation I, for the words “if the instrument has been registered under sub-section (2) of section 30 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, from the earliest date on which a memorandum thereof has been filed by any Sub-Registrar under section 66 of that Act” the following words shall be substituted, namely:—

“where the property is not all situated in one sub-district, or where the registered instrument has been registered under sub-section (2) of section 30 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, from the earliest date on which any memorandum of such registered instrument has been filed by any Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district any part of the property which is being acquired, or of the property wherein a share or interest is being acquired, is situated”, and

(ii) in proviso (2) to Explanation I, after the word “instrument” the words “or memorandum” shall be inserted.

THE PRISONS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. VI OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons would show the circumstances that led to the passing of this enactment:—

Section 27 (2) of the Prisons Act, 1894 (IX of 1894), provides that male prisoners under the age of 18 should be separated altogether from the other prisoners, and that those of them who have arrived at the age of puberty should be separated from those who have not. The effect of this provision is the creation of four distinct groups under the age of 18, as it applies both to under-trial and to convicted prisoners. In 1923 the maximum age-limit for adolescents was fixed by executive order at 18 and the principle was accepted that arrangement should be made to separate adolescents guilty of grave crime from other adolescents. The result of these orders was divided into two. In 1928 on the recommendation of the Second Conference of Inspectors-General of Prisons the age-limit for an adolescent prisoner was raised to 21 years, resulting in three more groups between the ages of 18 and 21. It has been found impossible in practice to effect the segregation of so many groups of prisoners in each jail and it is therefore proposed that section 27 (2) of the Prisons Act should be amended so as to substitute the word "twenty-one" for the word "eighteen". All prisoners up to the age of 21 will then be treated as one class and separated into the number of groups now prescribed for prisoners under the age of 18.—(Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

An Act further to amend the Prisons Act, 1894, for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Prisons Act, 1894, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. This Act may be called THE PRISONS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Short title.

2. In clause (2) of section 27 of the Prisons Act, 1894, for the word "eighteen" the word "twenty-one" shall be substituted.

Amendment
of section 27,
Act IX of 1894,

THE INDIAN PATENTS AND DESIGNS (AMENDMENT)
ACT, 1930.

ACT No. VII OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following is the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill:—

Clause 3 (a) (iii).—In the new proviso we have substituted the word "other" for the word "additional" to make the meaning clear.

We have also made an amendment of substance, designed to avoid hardship to applicants. Unless the Controller has power to fix later dates, as proposed by us, it may happen that the time for acceptance of additional applications prescribed in sub-section (4) of section 5 will be over before these applications can be properly examined and accepted. We have further provided that the date borne by the application shall for all purposes be deemed to be the date on which it was made. The amendment follows the English practice. At the same time, we consider it advisable that the Controller's discretion in fixing dates should be curtailed, and we recommend that a rule should be made under section 77 restricting the fixing of the date of an additional application to within one month of the date of the original application. If this is found to be insufficient in practice, the period may be extended.

Clause 3 (b).—It has been held that an application under section 5 (4) for extension of time made after the expiry of twelve months from the date of the application cannot be granted inasmuch as the application will already have become void. We understand that it is convenient from the administrative point of view that such applications should be granted, and this sub-clause is designed to permit of this.

Clause 5.—We felt that there was substance in the criticisms of clause 5 on the ground of vagueness, and have preferred simply to substitute an extension from three to four months for the more intricate provision relating to the time requisite for obtaining copies of the specification. We are of opinion that that time is fairly represented by one month, but hope that the operation of this new provision will be carefully watched with a view to ascertaining its adequacy.

Clause 6 (1).—We have introduced some drafting amendments designed to indicate that a direction by the Controller is not a “decision” such as is referred to in section 9 (3) of the Act.

Clause 6 (2) (ii).—We have made an addition necessitated by the fact that various provisions of section 10 of the Act allow various periods for sealing a patent.

Clause 9 (c) is designed to achieve, mutatis mutandis, an object similar to that mentioned above in connexion with clause 3 (b).

Clause 15.—Opinions received on proposed section 21 disclose some apprehension that irresponsible persons may be permitted to issue written authorisations on behalf of Government departments. We have preferred to revert to the precise wording of the proviso to existing section 21, which does not appear to have caused any inconvenience in practice.

We have also, in deference to opinions received, provided in sub-sections (2) and (3) of proposed section 21 that notice should be given to the inventor or patentee.

The other changes in this clause are of a drafting nature.

Clauses 24 and 27 (c).—We do not consider that the interposition of the Governor-General in Council between the Controller and the High Court in the matter of references under proposed section 51-A (2) and proposed sub-section (3) of existing section 64 serves any useful purpose. We have therefore omitted this provision in each case.

Clause 28-A.—We have extended the period of limitation for appeals under section 70 from two to three months. The shorter period has in practice been found too short for appeals in India and a fortiori for overseas appeals.

2. Our attention has been directed by the opinions received to the fact that section 7 of the Statute 7 Edward VII, c. 29 contains more elaborate provisions for preliminary examination of an application than those contained in the Indian Act. We have reason to believe that an amplification of the Indian Act on the lines of the British Statute would be conducive to the interests of applicants, who, in existing conditions, possibly suffer loss by being encouraged to expend money on inventions when applications for patents in respect of them have not been summarily rejected. We desire to place on record our opinion that this question deserves careful examination by Government.

3. Opinions received also disclose a considerable volume of opinion in favour of registration of trade marks. We understand that the absence of such registration is one of the reasons which prevent India participating in the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property and we have reason to believe that India's want of participation in this Convention affects prejudicially the interests of Indian inventors in foreign countries in certain matters. We feel, however, that this subject is not strictly germane to the present Bill and content ourselves with the suggestion that it be examined by Government.—(Report of the Select Committee.)

[16th March, 1930.]

• An Act further to amend the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911, for certain purposes.

• WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN PATENTS AND DESIGNS (AMENDMENT) Act, 1930.

Short title and commencement

(2) It shall come into force on the 1st day of July 1930.

2. In section 2 of the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act),—

Amendment
of section 2,
Act II of 1911.

(a) for clause (5) the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

“(5) ‘ design ’ means only the features of shape, configuration, pattern or ornament applied to any article by any industrial process or means, whether manual, mechanical or chemical, separate or combined, which in the finished article appeal to and are judged solely by the eye; but does not include any mode or principle of construction or anything which is in substance a mere mechanical device, and does not include any trade mark as defined in section 478, or property mark as defined in section 479, of the Indian Penal Code: ”;

(b) for clause (12) the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

“(12) ‘ patentee ’ means the person for the time being entered on the register of patents kept under this Act as the grantee or proprietor of the patent; ”; and

(c) in clause (14), for the words “ new and original ” the words “ new or original ” shall be substituted.

3. In section 5 of the said Act,—

Amendment
of section 5.
Act II of 1911.

(a) in sub-section (1),—

(i) in clause (b), the words “ or relate to more than one invention ” shall be omitted;

(ii) after clause (e) the following shall be inserted, namely:—

“ or

(f) the specification relates to more than one invention; ”; and

(iii) the following proviso shall be added to the sub-section, namely:—

“ Provided that, when a specification comprises more than one invention, the application shall, if the Controller or the applicant so requires, be restricted to one invention and the other inventions may be made the subject-matter of fresh applications; and any such fresh application shall be proceeded with as a substantive application, but the Controller may, in his discretion, direct that any such fresh application made before the acceptance of the original application shall bear the date of the original application or such later date as he may fix, and the fresh application shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Act, to have been made on the date which it bears in accordance with such direction.”; and

(b) in sub-section (4), for the proviso the following proviso shall be substituted, namely:—

“Provided that where, before, or within three months after, the expiration of the said period of twelve months, a request is made to the Controller for an extension of time by any period not exceeding three months, the application shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, be continued or revived, as the case may be, during, but not beyond, the period of extension so requested.”

4. Section 8 of the said Act shall be omitted.

5. In sub-section (1) of section 9 of the said Act, for the word “three” the word “four” shall be substituted.

6. (1) After sub-section (1) of section 10 of the said Act the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

“(1-A) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), where—

(a) an applicant has agreed in writing that on the grant to him of a patent he will assign it to another party or to a joint applicant and refuses to proceed with the application, or

(b) disputes arise between joint applicants as to proceeding with an application, the Controller, if he is satisfied of the existence of such agreement or, in any other case, that any joint applicant or applicants ought to be allowed to proceed alone, may direct that such other party or joint applicant or applicants may proceed with the application accordingly and may grant a patent to him or them, as the case may be:—

Provided that—

(i) the Controller shall not give any such direction until every party interested has had an opportunity of being heard by him, and

(ii) an appeal from any such direction shall lie to the Governor-General in Council.”

(2) In sub-section (2) of the same section,—

(i) in clause (b) of the proviso, the words “or by a reference under section 8,” shall be omitted; and

(ii) in clause (d), for the words “in consequence of the neglect or failure of the applicant to pay any fee” the words “for any reason” shall be substituted; after the words “allowed by”

Omission of section 8
from Act II of 1911.

Amendment
of section 9,
Act II of 1911.

Amendment
of section 10,
Act II of

the words "any of the foregoing provisions of" shall be inserted; and for the words "to such an extent as may be prescribed" the words "to the extent applied for but not exceeding three months" shall be substituted.

7. In section 11 of the said Act, for the words "publication of the specification" the words "advertisement of the acceptance of the application" shall be substituted.

Amendment
of section 11,
Act II of 1911.

8. For sub-section (2) of section 13 of the said Act the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

Amendment
of section 13
Act II of 1911.

"(2) Where a patent has been revoked by the High Court on the ground that it has been obtained in fraud of the true and first inventor, or where the grant of a patent has been refused by the Controller under section 9 on the ground stated in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of that section, the Controller may, on the application of the true inventor or his legal representative or assign made in accordance with the provisions of this Act, grant to him a patent for the whole or any part of the invention, and the patent so granted shall bear the same date as the patent so revoked or, in the case of a patent the grant of which has been refused, the same date as would have been borne by the patent if it had been granted:

Provided that no suit shall be brought for any infringement of the patent so granted committed before the actual date when such patent was granted."

9. In section 14 of the said Act,—

Amendment
of section 14,
Act II of 1911.

(a) in sub-section (1), for the word "fourteen" the word "sixteen" shall be substituted;

(b) after the same sub-section the following sub-sections shall be inserted, namely:—

"(1-A) Any patent the original term of which had not expired on or before the 1st day of July, 1930, shall have effect as if the term mentioned therein was sixteen years instead of fourteen years, and any licence existing at that date which has been granted for the term of the patent shall be treated as having been granted for the term as so extended if the licensee so desires.

(1-B) Where any party to a contract with the patentee or any other person entered into before the 1st day of January, 1930, is subjected to loss or liability by reason of the extension of the term of any patent under this section, any District Court having jurisdiction may determine in what manner and by which parties such loss or liability shall be borne."; and

(c) in sub-section (2), for the proviso the following proviso shall be substituted, namely:—

"Provided that, where the patentee, before, or within three months after, the expiration of the time for payment, applies to the Controller for an extension of time by any period not exceeding three months, the patent shall, on payment of such additional fee as may be prescribed, be continued or revived, as the case may be, during, but not beyond, the period of extension applied for."

Amendment
of section 15,
Act II of 1911.

10. In section 15 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), the words "after advertising in the prescribed manner his intention to do so," shall be omitted; and after the words "prescribed fee" the following shall be added, namely:—

"and must be advertised by the patentee within the prescribed time and in the prescribed manner";

(b) in sub-section (2), after the word "may" the words "within such time as may be prescribed and on payment of the prescribed fee," shall be inserted; and

(c) in sub-section (6), for the words "seven" and "fourteen" the words "five" and "ten" shall be substituted, respectively.

Insertion of new section
15-A in
Act II of 1911.

11. After section 15 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

Patents of addition.

"15-A. (1) Where a patent for an invention has been applied for or granted, and the applicant or the patentee, as the case may be, applies for a further patent in respect of any improvement in or modification of the invention, he may in his application for the further patent request that the term limited in that patent for the duration thereof be the same as that of the original patent or so much of that term as is unexpired, and, if he does so, a patent (hereinafter referred to as a patent of addition) may be granted for such term as aforesaid.

(2) Save as otherwise expressly provided by this Act, a patent of addition shall remain in force as long as the patent for the original invention remains in force, but no longer, and in respect of a patent of addition no fees shall be payable for renewal:

Provided that if the patent for the original invention is revoked, then the patent of addition shall, if the authority by which it is revoked so orders, become an independent patent, and the fees payable, and the dates when they become payable, shall be determined by its date, but its duration shall not exceed the unexpired term of the patent for the original invention.

(3) The grant of a patent of addition shall be conclusive evidence that the invention is a proper subject for a patent of addition, and the validity of the patent shall not be questioned on the ground that the invention ought to have been the subject of an independent patent."

12. In section 18 of the said Act, after the word "disclaimer" the words "correction or explanation" shall be inserted.

Amendment
of section 18,
Act II of 1911.

13. In section 19 of the said Act, for the words "before the disclaimer, correction or explanation" the words "before the date of the decision allowing the amendment" shall be substituted.

Amendment
of section 19,
Act II of 1911.

14. In sub-section (4) of section 20 of the said Act, the words "and unless such copies have been so supplied, such deeds, licenses or other documents shall not be received as evidence of any transaction affecting a patent" shall be omitted.

Amendment
of section 20,
Act II of 1911.

15. For section 21 of the said Act the following sections shall be substituted, namely:—

Substitution of new sections for section 21,
Act II of 1911.

"21. (1) Subject to the other provisions of this section, a patent shall have to all intents the like effect as against His Majesty the King as it has against a subject.

Patent to bind Crown.

(2) The officers or authorities administering any department of the service of His Majesty may, by themselves or by such of their agents, contractors or others as may be authorized in writing by them, at any time after the application, and after giving notice to the applicant or patentee, make, use or exercise the invention for the service of the Crown on such terms as may, either before or after the use thereof, be agreed on, with the approval of the Governor-General in Council, between such officers or authorities and the applicant or patentee, or, in default of agreement, as may be settled in the manner hereinafter provided. And the terms of any agreement or license concluded between the applicant or patentee and any person other than such officers or authorities, shall be inoperative so far as concerns the making, use or exercise of the invention for the service of the Crown.

(3) Where an invention which is the subject of any patent has, before the date of the patent, been duly recorded in a document by, or tried by or on behalf of, the officers or authorities administering any department of the service of His Majesty (such invention not having been communicated directly or indirectly by the applicant or patentee), such officers or authorities, or such of their agents, contractors, or others, as may be authorized in writing by them, may, after giving notice to the applicant or patentee, make, use or exercise the invention so recorded or tried for the service of the Crown, free of any royalty or other payment to the applicant or patentee, notwithstanding the existence of the patent. If, in the opinion of such officers or authorities, the disclosure to the applicant or patentee, as the case may be, of the document recording the invention, or the evidence of the trial thereof, if required, would be detrimental to the public interest; it may be made confidentially to counsel on behalf of the applicant or patentee, or to any independent expert mutually agreed upon.

(4) In the event of any dispute as to the making, use or exercise of an invention under this section, or the terms therefor, or as to the existence or scope of any record or trial as aforesaid, the matter shall be referred to the High Court for decision, who shall have power to refer the whole matter or any question or issue of fact arising thereon to be tried before a special or official referee or an arbitrator upon such terms as it may direct. The Court, referee or arbitrator, as the case may be, may, with the consent of the parties, take into consideration the validity of the patent for the purposes only of the reference and for the determination of the issues between the applicant or patentee and such officers or authorities. The Court, referee or arbitrator, further, in settling the terms as aforesaid, shall be entitled to take into consideration any benefit or compensation which the applicant or patentee, or any other person interested in the patent, may have received directly or indirectly from the Crown or from such officers or authorities in respect of such patent.

Provided that, if the inventor or patentee is a Government servant and the subject-matter of the invention is certified by the Governor-General in Council or Local Government to be connected with work done in the course of such service, any such dispute shall be settled by the Governor-General in Council after hearing the applicant or patentee and any other person having an interest in the invention or patent.

(5) The right to use an invention for the services of the Crown under the provisions of this section, or any provisions for which this section is substituted, shall include, and shall be deemed always to have included, the power to sell any articles made in pursuance of such right which are no longer required for the services of the Crown.

(6) Nothing in this section shall affect the right of the Crown or of any person deriving title directly or indirectly from the Crown to sell or use any articles forfeited under any law for the time being in force relating to customs or excise.

Assignment of patent to the Secretary of State for India in Council.

21-A. (1) The inventor of any improvement in instruments or munitions of war may (either for or without valuable consideration) assign to the Secretary of State for India in Council on behalf of His Majesty all the benefit of the invention and of any patent obtained or to be obtained for the invention; and the Secretary of State for India in Council may be a party to the assignment.

(2) The assignment shall effectually vest the benefit of the invention and patent in the Secretary of State for India in Council on behalf of His Majesty, and all covenants and agreements therein contained for keeping the invention secret and otherwise shall be valid and effectual (notwithstanding any want of valuable consideration), and may be enforced accordingly by or on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

(3) Where any such assignment has been made, the Governor-General in Council may, at any time before the publication of the specification, certify to the Controller that, in the interest of the public service, the particulars of the invention and of the manner in which it is to be performed should be kept secret.

(4) If the Governor-General in Council so certify, the application and specifications, with the drawings (if any) and any amendment of the specification and any copies of such documents and drawings, shall, instead of being left in the ordinary manner at the Patent Office, be delivered to the Controller in a packet sealed by authority of the Governor-General in Council.

(5) The packet shall, until the expiration of the term during which a patent for the invention may be in force, be kept sealed by the Controller, and shall not be opened save under the authority of an order of the Governor-General in Council.

(6) The sealed packet shall be delivered at any time during the continuance of the patent to any person authorized by the Governor-General in Council to receive it, and shall, if returned to the Controller, be again kept sealed by him.

(7) On the expiration of the term of the patent, the sealed packet shall be delivered to the Governor-General in Council.

(8) Where the Governor-General in Council certifies as aforesaid after an application for a patent has been left at the Patent Office but before the publication of the specification, the application and specifications, with the drawings (if any), shall be forthwith placed in a packet sealed by authority of the Controller, and the packet shall be subject to the foregoing provisions respecting a packet sealed by authority of the Governor-General in Council.

(9) No proceeding by petition or otherwise shall lie for revocation of a patent granted for an invention in relation to which a certificate has been given by the Governor-General in Council as aforesaid.

(10) No copy of any specification or other document or drawing, by this section required to be placed in a sealed packet, shall in any manner whatever be published or open to the inspection of the public, but, save as otherwise provided in this section, the provisions of this Act shall apply in respect of any such invention and patent as aforesaid.

(11) The Governor-General in Council may at any time waive the benefit of this section with respect to any particular invention, and the specifications, documents and drawings shall be thenceforth kept and dealt with in the ordinary way.

(12) The communication of any invention for any improvement in instruments or munitions of war to the Secretary of State for India in Council or the Governor-General in Council or to any person or persons authorized by the Secretary of State for India in Council or the Governor-General in Council to investigate the same or the merits thereof, shall not, nor shall anything done for the purposes of the investigation, be deemed use or publication of such invention so as to prejudice the grant or validity of any patent for the same."

Amendment
of section 22,
Act II of 1911.

16. In section 22 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1) for the words "the reasonable requirements of the public with respect to a patented invention have not been satisfied" the words "the demand for a patented article in British India is not being met to an adequate extent and on reasonable terms" shall be substituted;

(b) in sub-section (4), for the words "the reasonable requirements of the public with reference to the patented invention have not been satisfied" the words "the demand for the patented article in British India is not being met to an adequate extent and on reasonable terms" shall be substituted; and for the words "the reasonable requirements of the public will not be satisfied" the words "the demand will not be adequately met" shall be substituted;

(c) in sub-section (5),—

(i) for the words "the reasonable requirements of the public shall not be deemed to have been satisfied" the words "the demand for a patented article shall not be deemed to have been met to an adequate extent and on reasonable terms" shall be substituted;

(ii) in clause (a), the words "or the demand for the patented article or the article produced by the patented process is not reasonably met" shall be omitted; and

(iii) in clause (b), the words "before or after the commencement of this Act" shall be omitted; and

(d) sub-section (6) shall be omitted.

Amendment
of section 23,
Act II of 1911.

17. In section 23 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), for the words "for the revocation of the patent" the words "for relief under this section" shall be substituted; and

(b) in sub-section (2), after the words "may make an order" the letter and brackets "(a)" shall be inserted; and after clause (ii) the following shall be added, namely:—

“or

(b) ordering the patentee to grant a licence to the applicant which may be a licence exclusive to him or otherwise as the Governor-General in Council may direct.”

18. After section 23 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

“23-A. An order of the High Court under section 22 or of the Governor-General in Council under section 22 or section 23, directing the grant of any licence shall, without prejudice to any other method of enforcement, operate as if it were embodied in a deed granting a licence and executed by the patentee and all other necessary parties.”

19. In clause (g) of sub-section (1) of section 26 of the said Act, for the words “a part”, in both places where they occur, the words “the whole or a part” shall be substituted.

20. In sub-section (1) of section 35 of the said Act, for the words “either of” the word “all” shall be substituted.

21. After section 35 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

“35-A. Notwithstanding anything contained in section 19, if the Court in any action for infringement of a patent finds that any one or more of the claims in the specification in respect of which the infringement is alleged are valid, it may, subject to its discretion as to costs and as to the date from which damages should be reckoned and to such terms as to amendment as it may deem desirable, grant relief in respect of any of such claims which are infringed without regard to the invalidity of any other claim in the specification. In exercising such discretion the Court may take into consideration the conduct of the parties in inserting such invalid claims in the specification or permitting them to remain there.”

22. In section 36 of the said Act,—

(1) for the words “to be the patentee of an invention” the words “to have an interest in a patent” shall be substituted;

(2) for the words “any legal rights of the person making such threats” the words “the patent” shall be substituted; and

(3) for the proviso the following shall be substituted, namely:—

“Provided that this section shall not apply if an action for infringement of the patent is commenced and prosecuted with due diligence.”

Insertion of new section 23-A in Act II of 1911.

Operation of order under section 22 or section 23.

Amendment of section 26, Act II of 1911.

Grant of relief in respect of particular claims.

Amendment of section 36, Act II of 1911.

Amendment
of section 44,
Act II of 1911.

23. In section 44 of the said Act,—

(1) in clause (a), for the words “new and original design” the words “new or original design” shall be substituted; and

(2) after clause (b) the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

“Provided that such subsequent registration shall not extend the period of copyright in the design beyond that arising from previous registration.”

Insertion of new sections
51-A and 51-B in Act II of 1911.

24. After section 51 of the said Act the following sections shall be inserted, namely:—

Cancellation of registration.

“51-A (1) Any person interested may present a petition for the cancellation of the registration of a design—

(a) at any time after the registration of the design, to the High Court on any of the following grounds, namely:—

(i) that the design has been previously registered in British India; or

(ii) that it has been published in British India prior to the date of registration; or

(iii) that the design is not a new or original design; or

(b) within one year from the date of the registration, to the Controller on either of the grounds specified in sub-clauses (i) and (ii) of clause (a).

(2) An appeal shall lie from any order of the Controller under this section to the High Court, and the Controller may at any time refer any such petition to the High Court, and the High Court shall decide any petition so referred.

Registration of designs to bind the Crown.

51-B: The provisions of section 21 shall apply to registered designs as if those provisions were re-enacted herein and in terms made applicable to registered designs.”

Amendment
of section 62,
Act II of 1911.

25. In section 62 of the said Act, clause (b) shall be omitted.

Amendment
of section 63,
Act II of 1911.

26. In section 63 of the said Act,—

(a) for sub-sections (1) and (2) the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

(1) Where a person becomes entitled by assignment, transmission or other operation of law to a patent or to the copyright in a registered design, he may make application to the Controller to register his title, and the Controller shall, on receipt of such application and on proof of title to his satisfaction, register him as the proprietor of such patent or design, and shall cause an entry to be made in the prescribed manner in the register of the assignment, transmission or other instrument affecting the title.

(2) Where any person becomes entitled as mortgagee; licensee or otherwise to any interest in a patent or registered design, he may make application to the Controller to register his title, and the Controller shall, on receipt of such application and on proof of title to his satisfaction, cause notice of the interest to be entered in the prescribed manner in the register of patents or designs, as the case may be, with particulars of the instrument, if any, creating such interest.”; and

(b) after sub-section (3) the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

“(4) Except in the case of an application made under section 64, a document or instrument in respect of which no entry has been made in the register in accordance with the provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2) shall not be admitted in evidence in any Court in proof of the title to a patent or to copyright in a design or to any interest therein, unless the Court, for reasons to be recorded in writing, otherwise directs.”

27. In section 64 of the said Act,—

Amendment
of section 64
Act II of 1911.

(a) in sub-section (1), for the words “A High Court” the words “The Controller” and for the words “as it may think fit” the words “as he thinks fit and rectify the register accordingly” shall be substituted, respectively;

(b) in sub-section (2), for the word “Court” the word “Controller” shall be substituted;

(c) for sub-section (3) the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

“(3) An appeal shall lie to the High Court from any order of the Controller under this section; and the Controller may refer any application under this section to the High Court for decision, and the High Court shall dispose of any application so referred.”; and

(d) for sub-section (5) the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

“(5) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to empower the Controller—

(a) to rectify the register of patents or to decide any question relating to a patent, otherwise than for the purpose of correcting a mistake of fact apparent from a reference either to the patent itself or to some order of a competent authority made under any other provision of this Act, or

(b) to make any such order cancelling the registration of a design as is provided for in section 51-A."

Amendment
of section 69,
Act II of 1911.

28. Section 69 of the said Act shall be re-numbered as sub-section (1) of that section, and to that section as so re-numbered the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

"(2) An appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council from an order of the Controller under this section."

Amendment
of section 70,
Act II of 1911.

29. In section 70 of the said Act, for the word "two" in both places where it occurs, the word "three" shall be substituted:

Insertion of
new section
74-A in Act
II of 1911.

30. After section 74 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

Security for costs.

"74-A. Where a person giving notice of any opposition under this Act or giving notice to the Court of appeal from any decision of the Controller under this Act, neither resides nor carries on business in British India, the Controller or the Court, as the case may be, may require such person to give security for the payment of all costs incurred and likely to be incurred in the proceedings or appeal, as the case may be, and, in default of such security being given, may disallow the opposition or dismiss the appeal."

Amendment
of section 77,
Act II of 1911.

31. In section 77 of the said Act,—

(1) after clause (e) of sub-section (1) the following clauses shall be inserted, namely:—

"(ee) for the manner in which fees leviable under this Act may be paid;

(eee) for ensuring secrecy with respect to patents to which section 21-A applies;" and

(2) after sub-section (2) the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

"(2-A) Nothing in sub-section (2) shall apply in the case of rules made for the purpose specified in clause (eee) of sub-section (1); and any such rules may modify any of the provisions of this Act so far as may be necessary for that purpose."

Amendment
of section
78-A, Act II of 1911.

32. In section 78-A of the said Act,—

(1) in clause (a) of the proviso to sub-section (1), for the word "four" the word "six" shall be substituted; and

(2) in sub-section (4), after the words "His Majesty's dominions", where they first occur, the words "or of any State in India", and after those words where they occur for the second time, the words "or in that State, as the case may be," shall be inserted.

33. In the Schedule to the said Act, in the entry specifying the fee payable before the expiration of the 8th year from the date of a patent, for the figures "50" the figures "100" shall be substituted, and for the last five entries the following shall be substituted, namely:—

On application for registration of a design ..	3"

THE REPEALING AND AMENDING ACT, 1930.

ACT No. VIII OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following is the Statement of Objects and Reasons annexed to the Bill:—

The object of the Bill is to make some necessary amendments of a formal nature in certain enactments and to repeal certain spent or useless matter in the Statute-book.

The reasons for the proposed amendments and repeals are explained as follows:—

- (1) The Indian Penal Code.—The amendment is consequential on the insertion of the words "Chapter V-A" in section 40 by Act VIII of 1913.
- (2) The Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1865.—The object is to provide in the form mentioned in section 6 an extra column for the signatures of the contracting parties which are required by that section to be entered therein.
- (3) The Burma Municipal Act, 1898.—The amendment is designed to correct an obvious error introduced into section 46 by Act XXXVIII of 1920.
- (4) The Indian Stamp Act, 1899.—The amendment is partly formal and partly consequential on U. P. Act XII of 1922.
- (5) The Indian Extradition Act, 1903.—The amendment is consequential on the decision that in future the forces of Indian States should be styled "Indian States Forces" instead of "Indian State Forces".

- (6) The Indian Limitation Act, 1908.—This amendment is consequential on the re-enactment in Act XXXIX of 1925 of the provisions referred to in article 43 of the First Schedule to Act IX of 1908.

The second amendment is purely formal.

- (7) (a) The Indian Army Act, 1911.

- (b) The Indian Factories Act, 1911.

The amendments are formal only.

- (8) The Benares Hindu University Act, 1915.—The change is merely grammatical.

- (9) The Cantonments Act, 1924.—

- (a) The amendment of section 95 is designed to supply an obvious omission.

- (b) The amendments of sections 150, 196, 197 and 231 are merely grammatical.

- (c) An obvious misprint in section 156 is corrected.

- (10) (a) The Bengal Pilot Service (Centralisation of Administration) Act, 1929.

- (b) The Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1928.

The amendments are purely formal.

- (11) The Indian Arms Act, 1878.—The repeal is consequential on the repeal of Regulation IX of 1874 by Regulation I of 1916.

- (12) The Elephants' Preservation Act, 1879.—The provision repealed has its counterpart in sections 26 (1) (j) and 32 (j) of Act XVI of 1927 and has therefore become otiose.

- (13) The Punjab University Act, 1882.—The repeal is consequential on the repeal of section 18 by Act VIII of 1904.

- (14) The Petroleum (Customs-duty) Act, 1888.—The Act is spent.

- (15) The Indian Limitation Act, 1908.—Sections 30 and 31 and the Second Schedule are obviously spent.

- (16) The Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920.—The repeal is consequential on the repeal of Act VI of 1900 by Act XI of 1923.

- (17) The Auxiliary Force Act, 1920.—The repeal is consequential on the repeal of clause (d) of section 4 by Act X of 1928.

- (18) The Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1923.—Section 3 is already virtually repealed by the repeal of section 68 of Act XI of 1922 by Act XII of 1927.

- (19) The Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act, 1924.—The Act was virtually repealed by the amendments effected in sections 372 and 373 of the Indian Penal Code by Act XVIII of 1924.

- (20) (a) The Indian Finance Act, 1926.

- (b) The Indian Finance Act, 1927.

- (c) The Indian Finance Act, 1928.

The provisions repealed are spent.

- (21) The Repealing and Amending Act, 1928.—The repealing provisions of this Act are themselves repealed according to current practice in order to abbreviate the Statute-book.

[16th March, 1930.]

An Act to amend certain enactments and to repeal certain other enactments.

WHEREAS it is expedient that certain amendments should be made in the enactments specified in the First Schedule;

AND WHEREAS it is also expedient that the enactments specified in the Second Schedule, which are spent or have otherwise become unnecessary, or have ceased to be in force otherwise than by expressed specified repeal, should be expressly and specifically repealed;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. This Act may be called THE REPEALING AND AMENDING ACT, 1930.

Short title.

2. The enactments specified in the First Schedule are hereby amended to the extent and in the manner mentioned in the fourth column thereof.

Amendment
of certain enactments.

3. The enactments specified in the Second Schedule are hereby repealed to the extent mentioned in the fourth column thereof.

Repeal of certain enactments.

4. The repeal by this Act of any enactment shall not affect any Act or Regulation in which such enactment has been applied, incorporated or referred to; and this Act shall not affect the validity, invalidity, effect or consequences of anything already done or suffered, or any right, title, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred, or any remedy or proceeding in respect thereof, or any release or discharge of or from any debt, penalty, obligation, liability, claim or demand or any indemnity already granted, or the proof of any past act or thing; nor shall this Act affect any principle or rule of law, or established jurisdiction, form or course of pleading, practice or procedure, or existing usage, custom, privilege, restriction, exemption, office or appointment, notwithstanding that the same respectively may have been in any manner affirmed, recognized or derived by, in or from any enactment hereby repealed;

Savings.

nor shall the repeal by this Act of any enactment revive or restore any jurisdiction, office, custom, liability, right, title, privilege, restriction, exemption, usage, practice, procedure or other matter or thing not now existing or in force.

THE CANTONMENTS (HOUSE-ACCOMMODATION AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. IX OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following is the Statement of Objects and Reasons attached to the Bill:—

"The Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act, 1923, was intended to continue the powers possessed by the military authorities to appropriate, where the need arose, such houses in cantonments as were originally intended, and were suitable for occupation by military officers or messes; and to safeguard the rights of house-owners, and to secure for them fair rents and equitable conditions of tenancy, when their houses were appropriated.

The working of the Act during the past five years has shown that some of its provisions are obscure, and others are defective with reference to one or other of the two main intentions stated above. The present Bill aims at removing these obscurities and defects.

Further, as the law stands at present, the question of the rent of, and repairs to, a building appropriated under the Act may be referred on appeal first to a Committee of Arbitration and then to the Civil Court. The Committee of Arbitration is composed of a Chairman (who must be a person neither in the service of Government or the Cantonment Authority, nor having any interest in house property liable to appropriation under the Act), two persons nominated by the Officer Commanding the Station, and two local residents nominated by the owner. Difficulties have been experienced in obtaining a Chairman and non-official members with the requisite qualifications to undertake these thankless and, in many cases, laborious honorary duties, and when a Committee has been appointed, it is frequently unable to reach a decision within a short time. In order to obviate the inconveniences and delays of the present system, it is proposed to abolish the Arbitration Committees and provide for the reference of the abovementioned matters to the Civil Courts direct.

The opportunity has been taken at the same time to introduce certain other improvements of minor importance. Notes on the clauses are attached.

NOTES ON CLAUSES.

Clause 2 (a).—Owing to the proposed abolition of Arbitration Committees, the words "Cantonment Authority" will disappear from the Act and a definition is no longer required.

Clause 2 (b).—The proposed addition to the definition of "Officer Commanding the Station" brings it into line with the definition in section 2 (ix) of the Cantonments Act, 1924. Thus the Officer Commanding the District can in no case be called upon to perform the duties of the Officer Commanding the Station and remains in all cases the administrative appellate authority under the Act.

Clause 2 (c).—The revisional jurisdiction under section 2 (2) of the Act is not magisterial in character. It is exercised by the officer in his administrative capacity and it is therefore preferable to call him "the Collector".

Clause 3.—The amendment of section 6 is designed to afford a clearer definition of the circumstances in which the liability under section 5 may be enforced than the somewhat obscure instructions at present contained in section 8. Two main sets of circumstances are contemplated. The liability may be enforced in the first place as a result of an application from an individual officer, but only if he can satisfy the Officer Commanding the Station that he cannot be provided with Government quarters and that after making all reasonable efforts he has been unable to make satisfactory private arrangements. In the second place, a shortage of accommodation in the Cantonment as a whole may render it necessary for the Officer Commanding to take more comprehensive action on his own initiative, instead of awaiting applications from individual officers, and new section 6 (1) (b) describes the circumstances in which he may do so. The "inspection" notice for which the section provides is intended to enable the Officer Commanding the Station to judge whether the building is a "house" as defined by the Act—namely, suitable for occupation by a military officer or mess.

Clause 4.—Section 7 (3) (a) of the Act, as it stands at present, makes it incumbent upon Government without any qualification to re-deliver a house to an owner, on the expiration of the lease, in a state of reasonable repair as defined in section 2 (1) (i). The ordinary rule, according to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is that a lessee shall hand back the property in as good condition as it was at the time when he was put in possession, subject only to the changes caused by reasonable wear and tear or irresistible force; and that a lease should, at the option of the lessee, be void if any material part of the property is wholly destroyed, or rendered unfit for the purposes for which it was let, as a result of fire, tempest, flood or violence, provided that the injury was not occasioned by the wrongful act or default of the lessee. The Government have no intention of departing from the principle of section 7 (3) (a), which is already more than usually favourable to the lessor, but they see no reason why they should be excluded from the latter benefit mentioned above, and the Bill accordingly provides for the protection of Government in this respect to the same extent as in the case of an ordinary lessee.

Clause 5.—The omission of section 8 of the Act and of the words “with the previous sanction of the Officer Commanding the District” in the previous section [clause 4 (a)] is due to the fact that the Officer Commanding the District is himself, under section 30, the appellate authority against a decision to appropriate a house. The grounds which would justify such a decision are fully explained for the guidance of the Officer Commanding the Station in section 6 as amended, and it is illogical that the previous sanction of the Officer Commanding the District should be required to a decision on the correctness of which he may himself be called upon to adjudicate in appeal.

Clause 6.—The amendments to section 10 are designed, firstly, to protect the existing bona fide owner-occupier from disturbance, but to make it difficult or impossible for owners of houses in future to defeat the first object of the Act (i.e., to secure accommodation for military officers) by going into “bogus occupation” on the eve of contemplated appropriation proceedings; and secondly, to make it clear that Government do not intend to appropriate houses built on private property which were not originally intended to provide accommodation for military officers.

Clauses 7, 8 and 9.—The reference to a Committee of Arbitration on the questions of the purchase value of a house, its rental value, or the amount of repairs required is done away with and the new clauses provide for a direct reference to the civil courts in these matters. The time allowed for the reference on the question of rent and repairs is extended to 30 days and the new sub-section (3) of section 16 gives the owner an opportunity to set forth his case on the question of repairs before the civil court.

Clause 10.—The new section makes it clear that the owner's failure to execute the repairs in time or his reference to the civil court need not cause any delay in the appropriation proceedings and thus prevent the Government from making use of the house for which they are paying rent. The Government is empowered to execute the repairs in spite of the reference, and the interests of the owner are safeguarded by the express provision that his liability is limited to the amount finally fixed by the courts.

Clause 11.—The chapter dealing with the procedure of Committees of Arbitration becomes superfluous and is replaced by a chapter explaining the procedure to be followed in hearing references to the civil courts made under sections 13, 15 and 16. The new sections are self-explanatory.

Clause 12.—The amended section provides for an appeal to the High Court, in place of the appeal to the civil court which previously lay from the decision of the Arbitration Committee.

Clause 13.—The amendment is consequential on the alteration of the definition of the Officer Commanding the Station [see clause 2 (b)].

Clause 14.—The first part of the amendment is consequential. The second part requires the Officer Commanding the District to record his reasons when deciding an appeal, which was not previously necessary.

Clause 15.—The amendment is consequential.

Clause 16.—The amendment extends to all references and appeals under the Act the provision in existing section 30 (2), to the effect that the period allowed for making an appeal should be computed in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.

Clause 17.—The amendment is consequential.

The following Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act, 1923, for certain purposes, was presented to the Legislative Assembly on the 11th February 1930:—

We, the undersigned members of the Select Committee to which the Bill further to amend the Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act, 1923, for certain purposes, was referred, have considered the Bill, and have now the honour to submit this our Report, with the Bill as amended by us annexed thereto.

Clause 3.—We are of opinion that the Officer Commanding the Station should make a regular inquiry before deciding whether he is satisfied as to the circumstances set forth in proposed section 6 (1) (a) and (b), and have made provision to that effect. We wish to express a hope that rules made under the Act will provide that the inquiry shall include a reference in each case to the house-owner.

We have somewhat extended the notice to be given under this section by expressing it to be three clear days' notice.

It seems advisable that the power of inspection should only be exercised between sunrise and sunset.

We have supplied an obvious omission by providing for applications in respect of a military mess.

The other changes in this clause are simply of a drafting nature, designed to make the meaning more clear.

Clause 6.—In the interests of house-owners we have considered it advisable to reduce the periods of three months and ten years referred to in proposed clauses (c) and (cc) of section 10 to one month and three years, respectively.

We have also in proposed clause (cc) of section 10 inserted an obviously desirable reference to military messes.

Clause 14.—We have made the purely formal amendment of omitting the word "General".

2. The Bill was published in the Gazette of India on the 7th September 1929.

3. We think that the Bill has not been so altered as to require re-publication, and we recommend that it be passed as now amended.

MINUTE OF DISSENT.

Under the Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act, 1923, the Officer Commanding the station may, with the sanction of the Officer Commanding the District, issue a notice in respect of a house, suitable for occupation by a military officer or a military mess, requiring the owner "to execute a lease of the house to the Government for a specified period which shall not be less than five years." No such notice can, however, be issued in respect of a house which is occupied by the owner. The procedure which has to be followed makes it possible for the owner to move into his house when it is vacated by a tenant, before a notice is served on him, and thus render it impossible for Government to appropriate it on a lease. The principal object of the present Bill is to deprive house-owners of the right referred to above which they enjoy at present. Under clause 6 (c) of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee a house will not be liable for appropriation only if the owner has been residing in it "continuously during the one month immediately preceding the issue of the notice." This condition will place it within the power of the military authorities to prevent the owner of a house from occupying it in future if he does not live in it already.

Strong reasons must be adduced before we can agree to the above-mentioned provision. It is reasonable on the part of Government to desire that there should be sufficient accommodation for military officers in cantonments, but no instance was given to us in the Select Committee of any place where military officers are without accommodation. All that we understood was that in the more important places there was only a small number of houses available for future occupation by military officers. The shortage of accommodation for military officers may therefore be felt in future, but it has as yet brought about no serious situation which must be dealt with immediately in the manner suggested in the Bill. Generally speaking Indian house-owners have shown a tendency to occupy their houses in cantonments for two reasons. In some places, for instance on the frontier, there is much greater security in the cantonments than in the Indian part of the town. Again, there is in some places serious congestion in the Indian quarter and at the same time there is no civil station to which Indians, desirous of living in healthier surroundings, can shift. Unless these facts are recognized no equitable solution of the problem, which Government wish to deal with, is possible. If cantonments are extended so as to provide for the construction of bungalows for military officers with private capital, or civil stations are established, there will probably be no need for the legislation brought forward by Government. It is the duty of Government to devise a constructive scheme which will meet the requirements both of the military officers and of Indians and at the same time provide for the needs of Indians who desire to live outside old towns, in greater security and in more sanitary surroundings.

For reasons given above, and particularly, because no case was made out in the Select Committee in favour of clause 6 (c) of the Bill on the ground that there was shortage of accommodation, we are opposed to its inclusion in the Bill.—(Report of the Select Committee.)

[20th March, 1930.]

An Act further to amend the Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act, 1923, for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act, 1923, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE CANTONMENTS (HOUSE-ACCOMMODATION AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Amendment
of section 2,
Act VI of 1923.

2. In section 2 of the Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act, 1923 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act),—

(a) clause (b) of sub-section (1) shall be omitted and clause (bb) shall be re-lettered as clause (b);

(b) in clause (d) of sub-section (1), after the words "in a cantonment" the following words shall be added, namely:—

"or, if that officer is the Officer Commanding the District, the military officer who would be in command of those forces in the absence of the Officer Commanding the District"; and

(c) in sub-section (2), for the words "District Magistrate" the word "Collector" shall be substituted.

3. For section 6 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

"6. (1) Where—

(a) a military officer who is stationed in or has been posted to the cantonment, or a President of a military mess in the cantonment, applies in writing to the Officer Commanding the Station stating that he is unable to secure suitable accommodation in the cantonment for himself or the mess on reasonable terms by private agreement, and that no suitable house or quarter belonging to Government is available for his occupation or for the occupation of the mess, and the Officer Commanding the Station is satisfied on inquiry of the truth of the facts so stated; or

(b) the Officer Commanding the Station is satisfied on inquiry that there is not in the cantonment a sufficient and assured supply of houses available at reasonable rates of rent by private agreement to meet the requirements of the military officers and military messes whose accommodation in the cantonment is in his opinion necessary or expedient, the Officer Commanding the Station may, with a view to enforcing the liability under section 5, serve a notice on the owner of any house which appears to him to be suitable for occupation by a military officer or a military mess, as the case may be, within the cantonment, or, if this Act is in force in part only of the cantonment, within that part, requiring the owner to permit the house to be inspected, measured and surveyed by such person and on such date, not being less than three clear days from the service of the notice, and at such time between sunrise and sunset, as may be specified in the notice.

(2) On the date and at the time so specified the owner shall be bound to afford all reasonable facilities to the person specified in the notice for the purpose of the inspection, measurement and survey of the house and, if he refuses or neglects to do so, such person may, subject to any rules made under this Act, enter on the premises and do all such things as may be reasonably necessary for the said purpose."

4. In section 7 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), the words "with the previous sanction of the Officer Commanding the District," shall be omitted; and

Substitution of new section
for section 6,
Act VI of 1923.

Conditions on which houses may be appropriated.

Amendment
of section 7,
Act VI of 1923.

(b) to sub-section (3) the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

“Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall be deemed to affect the right of the Government to avoid the lease in any such event as is specified in clause (e) of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.”

Omission of section 8, Act
VI of 1923.

5. Section 8 of the said Act, shall be omitted.

Amendment
of section 13,
Act VI of 1923.

6. In sub-section (2) of section 13 of the said Act, for the words “a Committee of Arbitration” the words “a Civil Court, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter IV” shall be substituted.

Amendment
of section 15,
Act VI of 1923.

7. In section 15 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), for the word “fifteen” the word “thirty” shall be substituted, and for the words “require that the matter be referred by the Officer Commanding the Station to a Committee of Arbitration” the words and figures “refer the matter to a Civil Court, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter IV” shall be substituted; and

(b) in sub-section (2), for the word “requisition” the word “reference” shall be substituted.

Amendment
of section 16,
Act VI of 1923.

8. In section 16 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), for the word “fifteen” the word “thirty” shall be substituted;

(b) in sub-section (2), for the word “fifteen” the word “thirty” shall be substituted, and for the words “require that the matter be referred by the Officer Commanding the Station to a Committee of Arbitration” the words and figures “refer the matter to a Civil Court, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter IV” shall be substituted; and

(c) after sub-section (2), the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

“(3) Every reference under sub-section (2) shall be accompanied by an estimate of the repairs, if any, which the owner considers necessary in order to put the house into a state of reasonable repair.”

Substitution of new section
for section 17,
Act VI of 1923.

9. For section 17 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

Power to have repairs executed and recover cost.

“17. If the owner fails to comply with a notice issued under sub-section (1) of section 16, the Military Engineer Services or the Public Works Department may, with the previous sanction of the Officer Commanding the Station and notwithstanding any right of reference conferred by that section, cause the repairs specified in the notice to be executed at the expense of the Government, and the cost thereof, or, where a reference has been made, the amount finally determined by the Civil Court, may be deducted from the rent payable to the owner."

10. For Chapter IV of the said Act, the following Chapter shall be substituted, namely:—

"CHAPTER IV.

PROCEDURE IN REFERENCES.

19. All references under this Act shall be made by application to, and tried by, the Court of the District Judge.

20. References under this Act shall be deemed to be proceedings within the meaning of section 141 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and in the trial thereof the Court may exercise any of its powers under that Code.

21. The scope of the inquiry in a reference under this Act shall be restricted to a consideration of the matters referred to the Court in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

11. For section 29 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

"29. (1) An appeal shall lie to the High Court against the decision of the Court of the District Judge upon a reference tried by it.

(2) No appeal under this section shall be admitted unless it is made within thirty days from the date of the decision against which it is preferred.

(3) An appeal preferred under this section shall be deemed to be an appeal from an order within the meaning of section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908."

12. For section 30 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

"30. The owner or any tenant of a house in respect of which a notice has been issued under section 7 may, within a period of twenty-one days from the date of the service thereof, appeal to the Officer Commanding the District against the decision of the Officer Commanding the Station to appropriate the house."

13. In section 32 of the said Act,—

Substitution of new Chapter for Chapter IV, Act VI of 1923. Jurisdiction in references.

Procedure and powers of the Court.

Restriction of scope of inquiry.

Substitution of new section for section 29, Act VI of 1923.

Appeal to High Court.

Substitution of new section for section 30, Act VI of 1923.

Appeal to Officer Commanding the District.

Amendment of section 32, Act VI of 1923,

(a) the words "or of the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, the Command, as the case may be" shall be omitted; and

(b) after the proviso, the words "and in giving a decision the Officer Commanding the District shall record briefly the grounds therefor" shall be added.

Amendment
of section 33,
Act VI of 1923.

Insertion of
new section
34-A in Act
VI of 1923.

Computation of period of limitation.

Amendment
of section 35,
Act VI of 1923.

14. In section 33 of the said Act, for the words "by sub-section (2) of that section" the word, "therein" shall be substituted.

15. After section 34 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

"34-A. The period prescribed for making any reference or preferring any appeal under this Act shall be computed in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908."

16. In section 35 of the said Act, clause (a) of sub-section (2) shall be omitted.

THE INSOLVENCY LAW (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. X OF 1930.

PRELIMINARY NOTE:—The following extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons would show the necessity for the passing of this Act:—

"The object of the Bill is to remove certain defects in the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act, 1909, and the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, which have been recently brought to notice. The reasons for the several amendments proposed therein are explained in the appended Notes on Clauses.

NOTES ON CLAUSES.

Clauses 2, 4 and 5.—There is no specific provision in the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act, 1909, for the appointment of a deputy official assignee who could discharge all the duties and exercise all the functions of the official assignee. The insolvency work of the High Courts has increased since 1909 and the necessity of affording relief to the official assignees has been felt. It is therefore proposed to give power to the Chief Justices of the High Courts to appoint one or more deputy official assignees with the necessary powers.

Clause 3.—It has been held by some of the High Courts that section 18 (1) of the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act does not empower a Judge of the High Court sitting in insolvency to stay proceedings pending in respect of the same debtor in a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court under the Provincial Insolvency Act. The need for such power has been felt, particularly in Calcutta where a common practice prevails, whereby debtors, who have carried on business in Calcutta, retire to some part of the province sufficiently remote and get an accommodating creditor to present a petition in insolvency against them in a District Court. This is done with the object of discouraging Calcutta creditors from prosecuting their claims or securing a searching investigation of the debtor's conduct and affairs. The clause gives power to the Judge of a High Court sitting in insolvency to stay or annul insolvency proceedings pending under the Provincial Insolvency Act in any Court subject to its superintendence in respect of the same debtor. It also empowers him to give necessary directions for the administration of the debtor's estate in the High Court.

Clause 6.—Section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act has given rise to conflicting judicial decisions as to whether the terminus a quo for the calculation of the period of two years referred to therein should be the date of the order of adjudication or the date of the presentation of the insolvency petition. The view that the terminus a quo should be the date of the presentation of the petition is in pursuance of the policy underlying the Act, and the contrary view leads to an abuse of the provision by dishonest and litigious debtors. The clause gives effect to the former view.”—(Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

[20th March, 1930.]

An Act to amend the law relating to insolvency, for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law relating to insolvency, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. This Act may be called THE INSOLVENCY LAW (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

2. In clause (c) of section 2 of the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act, 1909 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), after the words “acting official assignee”, the words “and a deputy official assignee, whether permanent or acting” shall be added.

3. After section 18 of the said Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

“18-A. (1) The Court may, at any time after the presentation of an insolvency petition, stay any insolvency proceedings pending against the debtor in any Court subject to the superintendence of the Court, and may, at any time after the making of an order of adjudication, annul an adjudication against the debtor made by any such Court.

(2) Where an adjudication is annulled under sub-section (1), all sales and dispositions of property and payments duly made and all acts done by the Court whose order is annulled, or by the receiver appointed by it or other person acting under his authority, shall be valid, but the property vested in such Court or receiver shall vest in the official assignee, and the Court may make such direction in regard to the custody of such property as it thinks fit.

(3) Notice of the order annulling an adjudication under sub-section (1) shall be published in the local official Gazette and in such other manner as may be prescribed."

Amendment
of section 77,
Act III of 1909.

4. In section 77 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1),—

(i) after the word "estates" the words "and such person or persons as he thinks fit to the office of deputy official assignee" shall be inserted, and

(ii) for the words "that office" the words "any of the said offices" shall be substituted;

(b) after sub-section (1), the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

"(1-A) Subject to rules made under section 112, the deputy official assignee shall have all the powers and shall discharge all the duties and in exercise of such powers and in the discharge of such duties shall be subject to all the liabilities of the official assignee under this Act"; and

(c) in sub-section (2), after the words "official assignee" the words "and every deputy official assignee" shall be inserted.

Amendment
of section 112,
Act III of 1909.

5. In sub-section (2) of section 112 of the said Act, after clause (r), the following clause shall be added, namely:—

"(s) the distribution of work between the official assignee and his deputy or deputies".

Amendment
of section 53,
Act V of 1920.

6. In section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, after the words "is adjudged insolvent" the words "on a petition presented" shall be inserted.

THE INDIAN TARIFF (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XI OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following are extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons:—

The object of this Bill is to give effect to certain minor amendments which it is proposed to make in Schedule II to the Indian Tariff Act, 1894 (VIII of 1894). The more important proposals in the Bill are dealt with seriatim below. They are included in a separate Bill instead of in the Finance Bill, because they have not been made primarily with reference to the revenues of 1930-31.

1. Barks for tanning.—It is proposed to abolish the 15 per cent. duty on these barks, which are now included in Item No. 92, on the grounds that they are raw material of an important industry; that it is more economical to use wattle bark, which forms the bulk of the imported barks, than other tanning materials available in India; and that they are cheap and bulky and are entirely destroyed in the process of tanning hides and skins.

2. Plants, living.—In pursuance of a recommendation of the Royal Commission on Agriculture, living plants, which were liable to a duty of 15 per cent. have been exempted from duty by a notification under section 23 of the Sea Customs Act. It is now proposed to place this exemption on a statutory basis.

3. Arms.—Under the exception to the Second Schedule to the Arms Act of 1878 read with section 8 thereof, the appendages mentioned in this item were liable to the same duty, as was leviable on firearms under Item 2 of the Tariff Act of 1875. The Tariff Act of 1875 was replaced by the Tariff Act of 1882 which took over from the Arms Act the Second Schedule and the exception thereto. The effect of this was to exempt these parts and accessories from duty altogether. This unintentional exemption has been continued in successive Acts, though these spare parts are rarely imported in the same case with a firearm. It is now proposed to omit Item No. 12 (a) altogether.

4. Poultry Farming Appliances—Incubators.—It is proposed to amend the heading of item 16 so as to enable poultry farming appliances to be treated in the same way as dairy appliances and to remove the import duty of 15 per cent. on incubators by adding them to the list of appliances specified under that item as so amended. A consequential amendment is also proposed in the item.

5. Pans for boiling sugarcane juice; sugar centrifuges and pug-mills and parts thereof.—It is proposed to place these on the free list under Item No. 18 of the Import Tariff. This and the amendments referred to in Item 4 are proposed in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 110 of the Agricultural Commission's Report.

6. Saccharine (except in tablets) and similar substances.—Saccharine (except in tablets) is now liable to a specific duty of Rs. 5 per pound under Item No. 34-A of the Import Tariff. It is now proposed to add to this item other substances of a like nature or use to saccharine so as to bring under it substances from which saccharine can readily be made, but which are at present subject to lower duties.

7. Wireless apparatus.—By a notification under section 23 of the Sea Customs Act, the import duty leviable on apparatus for wireless telegraphs designed either for transmission or reception whether by telegraphy or telephony, including their component parts, has been reduced to 2½ per cent. It is now proposed to incorporate the exemption in the statutory tariff.

8. Insulated copper cables containing pilot cores of a sectional area of less than one-eightieth part of a square inch.—These cables are liable to a duty of 15 per cent. ad valorem under Item 90-A of the Import Tariff. By a notification under section 23 of the Sea Customs Act, however, they have been exempted from so much of this duty as is in excess of the duty (if any) to which they would have been liable if they had had no core of a sectional area of less than 1/80th part of a square inch. The effect of this exemption is to make them free, if they are insulated otherwise than by rubber [vide Item 18-A (5)] and to make them subject to a duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem, if they are insulated by rubber [vide Item 43-B].

The reason for making the exemption is that the pilot cores only perform a subsidiary function and that it is the size of the power cores that should determine the question whether the cables should be assessed to duty under Item 90-A or should enjoy privileged treatment under Item 18-A (5) or 43-B. It is now proposed to place the exemption on a statutory basis.

9. Domestic refrigerators.—Certain kinds of refrigerators are operated by machines requiring more than ½ brake horse power and are therefore free under Item No. 18-A, while other competing types, which are not so operated are assessed to duty under item No. 96. It has been represented that this manner of assessment gives undue advantage to one type of refrigerators over the others. As Item 18-A was intended to encourage the importation of machinery representing fixed capital employed in productive industries and household refrigerators do not fulfil this condition, it is proposed to insert a new item (90-B) so as to make all domestic refrigerators, without regard to the mode of operation, liable to duty at the general rate of 15 per cent. ad valorem.

10. Bangles, beads and false pearls.—It is considered that these articles, whatever the material of which they are made, should be treated alike and be subject to a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem. It is accordingly proposed to omit Item No. 131 and the heading thereto and to insert a new item under the heading "Miscellaneous" in the same part, namely, "Bangles, beads and false pearls".

11. The amendments are intended to come into effect from the seventh day after the Bill becomes law.—(Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

The following are extracts from the Report of the Select Committee:—

We have amended Item 9 in the Schedule so as to make provision for the specification by notification of such substances as it may be considered necessary to bring under the specific duty applicable to Saccharine. The formula contained in the Bill would leave to the various Collectors of Customs at the time of importation the decision whether any particular substance was or was not a substance of a like nature or use to Saccharine. The object of our amendment is to secure uniformity of treatment at the various ports.

We have deleted Item 11 of the Schedule. We understand that on account of the failure of the Indian Broadcasting Company since the Bill was drafted, proposals for the continuation of broadcasting operations by direct Government agency are under consideration, and that, if such a scheme materializes, it will be necessary to provide in it that revenues corresponding to those previously received by the Indian Broadcasting Company shall in future be received by the Government. The Indian Broadcasting Company's revenues were derived partly from a portion of the licence fees charged on receiving sets and partly from a "tribute" of 10 per cent. on the invoiced value of certain of the apparatus required for wireless telegraphy. The import duty on wireless apparatus has been reduced from the statutory rate of 15 per cent. ad valorem to 2 1/2 per cent. ad valorem by a notification under section 23 of the Sea Customs Act. The most convenient method of securing to Government a revenue corresponding to that formerly received by the Indian Broadcasting Company from imports of wireless receiving sets is by restoring the statutory duty of 15 per cent. ad valorem, or part of it. The exact adjustment of the import tariff which will be necessary for this purpose has yet to be determined, and in the meantime it is desirable that no alteration should be made in the statutory tariff.—(Report of Select Committee.)

18. In Item No. 136, after the word "manufactured", the words "not otherwise specified" shall be inserted.

THE STEEL INDUSTRY (PROTECTION) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XII OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following are extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons annexed to the Bill:—

"Under item No. 152 of the Tariff Schedule read with item No. 62 (c) (i) and (ii) thereof, round and square bars and rods of sizes $\frac{1}{2}$ inch and above are liable to a protective duty of Rs. 26 or 37 per ton, according as they are of British manufacture or not. It has been represented to Government that steel bars of sizes of $15\frac{1}{32}$ inch and $31\frac{1}{64}$ inch, manufactured to special orders for use in substitution for $\frac{1}{2}$ inch bars, are being imported with the object of evading the protective duty leviable on $\frac{1}{2}$ inch bars. Statistics specially maintained to watch the imports of bars and rods show that the importations of these special sizes are increasing. As there is no stock size intermediate between $\frac{1}{2}$ inch and $7\frac{1}{16}$ inch, it is evident that the object of these importations is as stated above and that as far as $\frac{1}{2}$ inch bars and rods are concerned the intention of the Steel Industry (Protection) Act, 1927, is being defeated to a considerable extent. It is accordingly proposed to bring all steel bar and rod over $7\frac{1}{16}$ inch under the protective duty so as to make the protection granted to $\frac{1}{2}$ inch bars fully effective. Item 2 of the Schedule to the Bill provides for this.

2. The Tariff Board, in paragraph 159 of their Report regarding the continuance of protection to the steel industry recommended that spikes and tie-bars should be subject to the same protective duties as bars so that the basic duty would be Rs. 26 per ton and the additional duty Rs. 11 per ton. Item No. 150 of the Indian Tariff Act which was inserted by the Steel Industry (Protection) Act, 1927, was intended to give effect to this recommendation. It has been held, however, that the wording of the entry does not in fact carry out the intention, and that tie-bars for cast iron sleepers are not subject to the protective duty leviable thereunder, but are assessable at 10 per cent. ad valorem as "fastenings" for such sleepers under item No. 61. Items 1 and 3 of the schedule to the Bill accordingly amend items Nos. 61 and 150 of the Import Tariff, so as to give full effect to the scheme of protection adopted by the Legislature.”—(Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

The Select Committee to which the Bill was referred made no alterations therein.—(See Report of Select Committee.)

[21st March, 1930.]

An Act to amend the law relating to the fostering and development of the steel industry in British India for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law relating to the fostering and development of the steel industry in British India for the purposes hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called THE STEEL INDUSTRY (PROTECTION) ACT, 1930.

Short title and commencement.

(2) It shall come into force on such date as the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint.

2. In the Second Schedule to the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, there shall be made the amendments specified in the Schedule to this Act.

Amendment of Second Schedule to Act VIII of 1894.

THE SCHEDULE.

(See section 2.)

AMENDMENTS TO THE SECOND SCHEDULE TO THE INDIAN TARIFF ACT, 1894.

1. In item No 61, in the fifth sub-item (relating to IRON OR STEEL railway track material not otherwise specified), after the words “fastenings therefor”, the words “other than tie-bars” shall be inserted.

2. In item No. 62, in the fifth sub-item (relating to STEEL, bar and rod), in part (c) thereof—

(a) for the entry “(i) rounds under 1½ inch diameter”, the entry “(i) rounds not over 7½ inch diameter” shall be substituted; and

(b) for the entry “(ii) squares under 1½ inch side”, the entry “(ii) squares not over 7½ inch side” shall be substituted.

3. In item No. 150,—

(a) in part (a) of sub-item A, entry (iii) relating to spikes and tie-bars shall be omitted;

(b) in part (b) of sub-item A, the words “spikes and tie-bars” shall be omitted; and

(c) the following sub-item shall be added, namely:—

“D. Spikes and tie-bars—of British manufacture

.. Rs. 26 per ton.

not of British manufacture

.. Rs. 37 per ton.”

THE INLAND STEAM-VESSELS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Act No. XIII of 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Inland Steam-Vessels Act, 1917, was presented to the Legislative Assembly on 20th January, 1930:—

We, the undersigned, Members of the Select Committee to which the Bill further to amend the Inland Steam-Vessels Act, 1917, was referred, have considered the Bill and the papers noted in the Papers Nos. I-III. margin, and have now the honour to submit this our Report, with the Bill as amended by us annexed thereto.

2. We have amended the long title and preamble so as to bring them into the usual form.

In sub-clause (2) of clause 1, we propose that the Bill should come into force at the beginning of the year following its passing, except in the case of clause (b) of sub-section (1) of proposed section 54-A, which is discussed in paragraph 5 below.

The following paragraphs give our reasons for re-drafting the proposed new sections 54-A and 54-B.

3. The new section 54-A provides that the Governor-General in Council should fix maximum and minimum fares and freights "after such inquiry as he considers necessary". We contemplate that the inquiry would be carried out by a Rates Committee appointed after consultation with the Local Government concerned, but we do not consider it necessary to make specific provision in the Bill for the manner in which it should be constituted.

4. We have modified the provisions of sub-section (1) of the proposed section 54-A, so as to empower the Governor-General in Council to fix maximum or minimum rates per mile for any system of inland waterways, or for any stretch of inland waterway, or for the run between any two stations on an inland waterway. If, however, the rates are fixed per mile, a difficulty arises which we have endeavoured to meet by the insertion of clause (d) of the sub-section. In view of the conditions prevailing, at any rate in Bengal and Assam, we are agreed that, if the Bill is not to be infructuous, Government should be empowered to fix not only the rate per mile, but also to declare the distance which should be deemed to be the distance between any two stations for the purpose of calculating the passenger fares or the freight charges for goods. River channels, particularly in the deltaic area in Bengal, are unstable and liable to frequent changes and the routes taken by steamers are not only liable to variation from year to year but from season to season. If a maximum rate per mile only were fixed, the onus of proving that the mileage adopted for the purpose of calculating the fare or freight was incorrect would be upon the aggrieved party, and we fear that this would render the Bill in a large measure ineffective.

5. We are agreed that the provision in the Bill relating to maximum freight rates on goods should come into force from such date as the Governor-General in Council may appoint. Many complaints have been made about passenger fares charged by the inland steamship companies, particularly in Bengal, but the complaints about goods rates have been comparatively few. It is possible, indeed, that the competition of the country boats may act as a check on the freights which the steamship companies can charge for certain classes of goods. We think that further evidence must be brought forward before the necessity of maximum goods rates can be held to be established, and it is for this reason we have provided in clause 1 of the Bill that clause (b) of sub-section (1) of the new section 54-A should not come into force from the same date as the other sub-clauses.

6. To justify the imposition of minimum rates of fares and freights, we are agreed that it should be established to the satisfaction of the Governor-General in Council that a rate-war is in progress between competing steamer companies. Sub-section (2) of proposed section 54-A provides for this.

7. The classification of goods for the purpose of fixing freight rates is necessarily complicated, and the determination of minimum freight rates for each class of goods would be a difficult undertaking. It may not be necessary, however, for Government to undertake the determination of minimum freight rates for all classes of goods. Ordinarily it should be sufficient for the purpose of the Bill for Government to determine minimum freight rates for the staple commodities in which competition is most likely to be severe.

8. We consider the question whether provision should be made in the Bill to guard against the danger that the minimum freights and fares fixed by Government might be evaded by secret rebates, the payment of claims of doubtful validity and similar devices, but we felt that we had not before us the materials which would justify any specific recommendation. We think, however, that if after minimum rates have been fixed, there is reason to believe that evasion is being practised, Government should instruct the Rates Committee which, as we have recommended, will make the inquiries before maximum or minimum rates are fixed, to investigate the complaints received and to make recommendations as to the measures necessary to remedy such abuses as are found to exist.

9. Under the provisions of the new section 54-B, the constitution, procedure and functions of the Advisory Committees to be appointed will be regulated by the rules made by Local Governments. We believe that several Committees constituted to represent particular local areas will be more useful than a single Committee for a whole province. We have re-drafted the new section 54-B, and made it cover the shippers of goods as well as passengers.

An Act further to amend the Inland Steam-Vessels Act, 1917, for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Inland Steam-Vessels Act, 1917, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INLAND STEAM-VESSELS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Short title and commencement.

(2) It shall come into force on the first day of January, 1931, except clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 54-A of the Inland Steam-Vessels Act, 1917, as hereby enacted, which shall come into force on such date as the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint.

Insertion of new sections
54-A and 54-B in Act I of 1917.

Power of Governor-
General in Council to fix maximum and minimum rates for passenger fares and freight for goods.

2. In Chapter VI of the Inland Steam-Vessels Act, 1917, after section 54 the following sections shall be inserted, namely:—

“54-A. (1) The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, after such inquiry as he may consider necessary, in respect of any system of inland waterways, or of any stretch of inland waterway, or of the run between any two stations on the inland waterway,—

(a) fix the maximum or minimum rate per mile which may be charged for passenger fares for passengers of any class travelling on inland steam-vessels;

(b) fix the maximum rate per mile which may be charged for freight on goods of any description carried in inland steam-vessels;

(c) fix the minimum rate per mile which may be charged for freight on goods of any description carried in inland steam-vessels; and

(d) declare what shall be deemed to be the distance between any two stations on an inland waterway for the purpose of calculating passengers' fares or freight on goods where maximum or minimum rates have been fixed under this section.

(2) The Governor-General in Council shall not fix any minimum rate under clause (a) or clause (c) of sub-section (1) in respect of any class of passengers or description of goods carried on any system of waterways, or stretch of waterway, or on the run between any two stations on an inland waterway, unless he is satisfied that the rates charged on any inland steam-vessel or group of such vessels in respect of such passengers or goods have been reduced to such an extent as to disclose an intention to force any other inland steam-vessel or group of such vessels to cease from carrying such passengers or goods.

Power to make rules providing for the appointment of Advisory Committees.

54-B. The Local Government may make rules providing for the appointment, constitution, procedure and functions of Committees to advise the owners, agents and charterers of inland steam-vessels on questions affecting the interests of passengers and shippers of goods.”

THE INDIAN RAILWAYS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XIV OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following are extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons annexed to the original Bill:—

1. The Washington Convention, limiting the hours of work in industrial undertakings, provides inter alia that in British India the principle of a sixty-hour week shall be adopted for workers in the industries covered by the Indian Factories Act (XII of 1911), in mines and in such branches of railway work as shall be specified for this purpose by the competent authority.

2. In the Geneva Convention concerning the grant of weekly rest in industrial undertakings, the definition of 'industrial undertakings' is subject to the special national exceptions contained in the Washington Convention, from which it follows that the concession of the weekly rest is also prescribed for the same categories of workers in British India as are covered by the Washington Convention.

3. These Conventions were promulgated in 1919 and 1921, and ratified by the Government of India in 1921 and 1928, respectively, and their application to Indian railways has been the subject of prolonged investigations. Persons employed in workshops and collieries have already been brought under the Conventions by the amendment of the Indian Factories Act, 1911, and the enactment of the Indian Mines Act, 1923.

With regard to the railway staffs, efforts have hitherto been directed towards the application of the principles of the Conventions to railway servants in India by executive orders to the State-managed railway administrations and by invitation to the Company-managed railway administrations.

In the opinion of the Governor-General in Council the time has now arrived to institute measures for giving effect to the statutory obligations incurred by the ratification of the Conventions, and the first step in this direction is to create a competent authority which will specify the branches of railway work and frame other rules for this purpose.

4. It is accordingly proposed to amend the Indian Railways Act, 1890, by the insertion of a new section 47-A empowering the Governor-General in Council to make the rules generally to regulate the hours of work and periods of rest of railway servants other than those working in factories and in mines (for whom adequate provision is already made in the Factories and Mines Acts) and the proposed amendment is embodied in clause 2 of the Bill.

Clause 3 amends section 143 so as to secure that the rules made under section 47-A shall not come into force until they have been published in the Gazette of India.—(Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

The following are extracts from Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Railways Act, 1890:—

The Bill as introduced contained merely a rule-making power and it was intended that the rules should contain the provisions necessary to give effect to the Washington and the Geneva Conventions in their application to railways in British India. We consider that the Bill should go further than this and should embody the principal relevant provisions of these two Conventions. We have expanded the Bill accordingly. We would emphasise, however, that the draft rules laid before us by the Government contained all the provisions which we have now embodied in the Bill, and we consider, therefore, that we are introducing no new principle into the Bill but are merely expressing in it principles which, according to the original intention, were to have been expressed in statutory rules made under it.

We consider it advisable to record some notes on the various provisions of the Bill in order not only to explain their nature but also to show how the Bill now carries out the Washington and the Geneva Convention.

Clause 1.—Sub-clause (2) is necessary as conditions on the different railways vary, and some railways will be in a position to give effect to this Bill earlier than others. It is desirable that the Bill should come into force on each railway as soon as possible and for this reason we have not fixed any one date, which might be too early for some railways or too late for others. We understand that Government has already taken preliminary steps to give effect to the provisions of the Bill, in regard to hours of work and periods of rest on all railways in British India, that to a large extent its provisions will be introduced on all railways within a comparatively short period, and that complete effect will be given to all the provisions of the Bill in about two years from the date on which it becomes law.

Clause 2.—Proposed section 71-A.—The definition in clause (a) explains the words “essentially intermittent” used in article 6 (a) of the Washington Convention.

Proposed section 71-C.—Sub-section (1) is the substance of Article 10 of the Washington Convention. Sub-section (2) fixes a limit to the hours of work of those railway servants whose work is essentially intermittent. The Convention does not require the imposition of such a limit, but we consider it desirable that it should find a place in the law as a maximum. Sub-section (3) is based on Article 3 and clause (b) of article 6 of the Washington Convention.

In connection with sub-section (1) we considered the suggestion whether a forty-eight hour week should not be provided for in the Bill, but we consider that the primary object of this Bill is to enable the Government of India to make good the obligations incurred under the two International Conventions and that it is not desirable to attempt to do more than this at present. The introduction of a forty-eight hour week would necessitate a further prolonged period of preparation, and would also involve very heavy expenditure. For this reason we have not accepted the suggestion. We understand, however, that an investigation has been started by Government, and will be continued, with a view to fixing the hours of work at a lower figure than fifty-six hours a week for those railway servants whose duties are specially arduous and involve continuous concentration.

As regards the proviso to sub-section (3), the Bill provides that overtime must be paid only in cases falling under clause (b), that is, cases of exceptional pressure of work. The proviso does not cover clause (a), which relates to emergencies involving serious interference with the ordinary working of the railway. We considered whether the proviso should not apply also to overtime work in cases falling under clause (a), but the Bill, as redrafted, is in accordance with the Washington Convention, which does not make the payment of overtime obligatory except when the extra hours of duty are due to exceptional pressure of work; and, until the question has been further examined, we do not consider it advisable to impose a statutory obligation to pay overtime in cases falling under clause (a). We are informed that the present practice varies on different railways, and we think that Government should investigate the question whether some provision ought not to be made either for the payment of overtime in such cases or for a compensatory period of rest.

Proposed section 71-D.—The body of sub-section (1) gives effect to Article 2 of the Geneva Convention; and the proviso is based upon Article 4, read with paragraph 2 of Article 1. Sub-sections (2) and (3) are based on Article 4. The proviso to sub-section (3) is based upon Article 5 of the Geneva Convention.

Proposed section 71-E. contains a much reduced rule-making power necessary to implement the provisions of the Bill.

Proposed section 71-F.—We are of opinion that the investigation recommended by us in connection with the proviso to clause 71-C should also cover the question of the payment of overtime or grant of compensatory periods of rest to railway servants who may have to work for extra time in the circumstances contemplated by this section.

Proposed section 71-G.—The scheme of this section is that the Governor-General in Council should appoint suitable persons, who will be independent of the railway administrations, to make regular inspections of labour conditions on railways in order to furnish Government with reliable and independent evidence of the manner in which the provisions of the law are being carried out.—(Report of the Select Committee.)

NOTE.

I think, I owe it to myself that I should state my reasons for signing the Select Committee's Report. The essential feature of the rules embodied in this Bill is that, statutory provision is now for the first time being made for (1) limitation of maximum period of employment both for continuous and essentially intermittent workers, (2) the obligation to give both these classes of workers a necessary period of rest at fixed intervals. This provision, it is claimed, carries out the obligation of the Government to give effect to the provisions of the Geneva and Washington Conventions. But it does not come up to the demands put forward by the Railway Workmen's Unions in this respect. I do not think these demands unreasonable in themselves. But I have persuaded myself to agree to the present provision in the Statutory Rules about the periods of employment and rest as only a first instalment. The obligation to conform to the provisions of the two conventions cannot prevent Government from reducing the hours of employment, increasing the periods of rest, and reducing the intervals between them, if they mean to do it. Therefore, I do not regard the alleged obligation to conform to the conventions as a valid reason for not complying with the demands of the Railwaymen's Unions. But I take into consideration the assurance given to us on behalf of the Railway Board, that "An investigation has been started by Government and will be continued, with a view to fixing hours of work at a lower figure than 56 hours a week for those Railway servants, whose duties are specially arduous and involve continuous concentration".

I recognise that after all every thing that is due to the workers, in respect of the limitation of employment and the provision for periodical rest, cannot be secured by a rigid or a uniform statutory provision. If, on the one hand, the equities due to the Railway workmen must be taken into consideration, on the other hand, one must also take into consideration, from the tax-payer's point of view, the expenditure likely to be involved at a jump in a sudden compliance with the workmen's full demands. Also on many points arising out of the new scheme, a prolonged investigation, we were told, will have to be made into the working of the administrative machinery so that the intended benefits of the new provisions about the periods of employment and rest may be fully realised by the workers.

This is quite possible, and it is reasonable, to allow the Railway Board some time to make the necessary investigation. But I hope, that there will be on the part of the Railway Board an earnest effort, to make the investigation, to carry out the adjustment, with the sole purpose, as far as possible, of approximating to the Railwaymen's demands, which, as I have already said, in my opinion, are reasonable, and must be granted at not a distant future. From this point of view I specially welcome and appreciate the provision about the appointment of "suitable persons, independent of the Railway administration, to make regular inspections of labour conditions of railways, in order to furnish reliable and independent evidence of the manner, in which the provision of the Law are being carried out". In this respect I suggest two things:

(1) That the reports of these inspectors should be made available to the Members of the Legislature from time to time, in such manner, as may be regarded convenient, and

(2) That due facilities should be given to accredited representatives of the Unions also on their part to watch the administration of the rules.

I can realise that comparatively little can be done in this complicated business, through the letter of the Law or even rules and regulations. Much depends upon practical experience of details, and I hope that though the Railway Board may be kept back by such considerations, from making the full concessions demanded by their employees immediately, still it will at least give no reason for a well-founded apprehension, that it merely wants to save expense at the cost of equities due to the workers. (N. C. KELKAR.)

MINUTES OF DISSENT.

I sign the Report subject to certain reservations. In the proposed section 71-C, sub-section (1), I consider that the maximum limit of 48 hours should be fixed in case of all railway servants other than those whose employment is of an essentially intermittent character. In the Washington Conference India was permitted to have a 60-hour week on the ground that an 8-hour day in India would be less productive than an 8-hour day in other industrially advanced countries. Whatever arguments there may or may not be for a 60-hour week in industries which are to face foreign competition, the same do not hold good in case of the Indian railway system, which is practically a monopoly and has not to face competition from anywhere else. With regard to the objection that the adoption of a 48-hour week will involve "very heavy expenditure", no definite estimate has been placed before the Committee to warrant that conclusion, and I consider that the cost of the adoption of a 48-hour week for continuous workers will not be prohibitive.

Section 71-C, sub-section (2), should, in my judgment, be so modified as to impose a maximum limit of 60 hours a week in case of intermittent workers.

The proviso to sub-section (1) of section 71-D, excluding the railway servants whose work is of an essentially intermittent character from the right to a weekly day of rest, should be deleted. For it is manifestly unfair that railway servants whose maximum hours of work has been fixed at 84 should be denied the right to a weekly rest. (ABDUL MATIN CHAUDHURY.)

I am of opinion that in clause 71-C (1), the word "fortnight" be inserted in place of "sixty" and that in clause 71-C (2), the word "sixty" be inserted in place of "eighty-four." If I am not mistaken in the case of the running staff or the Postal Department, sorters whose employment is essentially intermittent, are not employed for more than 36 hours a week and those whose employment is not essentially intermittent, 8 hours a day, which, where Sundays are not allowed, works out to 56 hours a week and where Sundays are allowed, to 48 hours a week. In the Telegraph Department too, the hours of employment are not more than 8 a day with some relaxation on Sundays.

I am also of opinion that in the proviso to clause 71-C (3), for the words "exempted under clause (b)", the words "exempted under clause (a) or clause (b)" be substituted as, I think, so far as the workers are concerned, overtime is due to those exempted under clause (a) as much as to those exempted under clause (b). *An Act further to amend the Indian Railways Act, 1890,
for certain purposes.*

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Railways Act, 1890, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called 'THE INDIAN RAILWAYS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.'

Short title and Commencement.

(2) This section shall come into force at once; and the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, direct that the other provisions of this Act shall come into force in respect of any railway on such date as he may by the notification appoint.

2. After Chapter VI of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, the following Chapter shall be inserted, namely:—

Insertion of new Chapter
VI-A in Act
IX of 1890.

“CHAPTER VI-A.

Limitation of employment of railway servants.

71-A. In this Chapter, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

Definitions.

(a) the employment of a railway servant is said to be ‘essentially intermittent’ when it has been declared to be so by the authority empowered in this behalf, on the ground that it involves long periods of inaction; during which the railway servant is on duty but is not called upon to display either physical activity or sustained attention; and

(b) except in section 71-B, a ‘railway servant’ means a railway servant to whom the Chapter applies.

71-B. This Chapter applies only to such railway servants or classes of railway servants as the Governor-General in Council may, by rules made under section 71-E, prescribe;

Application of Chapter
VI-A.

71-C. (1) A railway servant, other than a railway servant whose employment is essentially intermittent, shall not be employed for more than sixty hours a week on the average in any month.

Limitation of hours of work.

(2) A railway servant whose employment is essentially intermittent shall not be employed for more than eighty-four hours in any week.

(3) Subject to rules made under section 71-E, temporary exemptions of railway servants from the provisions of sub-section (1) and sub-section (2) may be made—

(a) when such temporary exemptions are necessary to avoid serious interference with the ordinary working of the railway, in cases of accident, actual or threatened, or when urgent work is required to be done to the railway or to rolling-stock, or in any emergency which could not have been foreseen or prevented; and

(b) in cases of exceptional pressure of work not falling within the scope of clause (a):

Provided that a railway servant exempted under clause (b) shall be paid for overtime at not less than one and a quarter times his ordinary rate of pay.

Grant of periodical rest.

71-D. (1) A railway servant shall be granted, each week commencing on Sunday, a rest of not less than twenty-four consecutive hours:

Provided that this sub-section shall not apply to a railway servant whose employment is essentially intermittent, or to a railway servant to whom sub-section (2) applies.

(2) The Governor-General in Council may, by rules made under section 71-E, specify the railway servants or classes of railway servants to whom periods of rest may be granted on a scale less than that laid down in sub-section (1), and may prescribe the periods of rest to be granted to such railway servants.

(3) Subject to rules made under section 71-E, temporary exemptions from the grant of periods of rest may be made in the cases or circumstances specified in sub-section (3) of section 71-C:

Provided that a railway servant shall, as far as may be possible, be granted compensatory periods of rest for the periods he has foregone.

Power to make rules.

71-E. (1) The Governor-General in Council may make rules—

(a) prescribing the railway servants or classes of railway servants to whom this Chapter shall apply;

(b) prescribing the authorities who may declare that the employment of any railway servant or class of railway servants is essentially intermittent;

(c) specifying the railway servants or classes of railway servants to whom sub-section (2) of section 71-D shall apply;

(d) prescribing the authorities by whom exemptions under sub-section (3) of section 71-C or sub-section (3) of section 71-D may be made;

(e) providing for the delegation of their powers by the authorities prescribed under clause (d); and

(f) providing for any other matter which is to be provided for by rules or which the Governor-General in Council may deem to be requisite for carrying out the purposes of this Chapter.

(2) Such rules shall be subject to the provisions of section 143.

Railway servant to remain on duty.

71-F. Nothing in this Chapter or the rules made thereunder shall authorise a railway servant to leave his duty where due provision has been made for his relief, until he has been relieved.

Supervisors of Railway Labour

71-G. (1) The Governor-General in Council may appoint persons to be Supervisors of Railway Labour.

(2) The duties of Supervisors of Railway Labour shall be—

(a) to inspect railways in order to determine if the provisions of this Chapter and of the rules made thereunder are duly observed, and

(b) such other duties as the Governor-General in Council may prescribe.

(3) A Supervisor of Railway Labour shall be deemed to be an Inspector for the purposes of sections 5 and 6.

71-H. Any person under whose authority any railway servant is employed in contravention of any of the provisions of this Chapter or of the rules made thereunder shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees."

Penalty.

THE INDIAN FINANCE ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XV OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following are extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons annexed to the Finance Bill, 1930:—

"The object of this Bill is to continue certain provisions of the Indian Finance Act, 1929, which would otherwise cease to have effect from the 1st April, 1930; to levy an import duty on silver subject to a full drawback; to raise the import duties on sugar and cotton piece-goods; to raise the export duty and reduce the import duty on kerosene; to reduce the export duty on rice; to increase the rates of income-tax and super-tax in certain grades; and to enable Reparation receipts to be appropriated to revenue. The new measures have been explained at length in my budget speech. The following is a brief explanation of the individual provisions.

2. Clauses 3 and 5 provide for the continuance, for a further period of one year, of the rates of salt duty and postage prescribed by the Indian Finance Act, 1929, while clause 8 provides for the credit to revenue, till the 31st March, 1931, of interest on securities forming part of the Paper Currency Reserve.

3. Clause 4 provides for the following alterations in customs tariff:—

(i) Levy of an import duty of 4 annas an ounce on silver bullion and coin as specified in Schedule I, with a full drawback in the case of re-exports, which is provided by clause 2. This is expected to yield Rs. 1 crore in 1930-31.

(ii) Increase of the import duty on all kinds of sugar and sugar-candy, but not molasses, by Re. 1-8-0 per cwt. In the case of sugar below 8 Dutch Standard and sugar-candy, this will mean the levy of a composite duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem plus Rs. 1-8-0 per cwt. This is calculated to yield Rs. 1,80 lakhs in 1930-31.

(iii) Increase in the import duty on cotton piece-goods from 11 per cent. to 15 per cent. ad valorem, which is expected to bring in Rs. 1,25 lakhs next year.

(iv) Reduction in the import duty on kerosene from 2½ annas to 2¼ annas a gallon. This is coupled with the increase in the corresponding excise duty from 1 anna to 1½ annas a gallon which is provided for in clause 7. While the latter measure will yield an additional 50 lakhs, the former will cost Rs. 15 lakhs in 1930-31, but will help generally to keep down the price.

(v) Reduction in the export duty on rice from 3 annas to 2½ annas a maund which will cost Rs. 30 lakhs to Government next year but is designed to remove the disparity, which at present exists, between the Indian export duty and that imposed by Siam.

4. Clause 6 provides for the continuance for another year of the rates of income-tax and super-tax prescribed by the Indian Finance Act, 1929, with an increase of a pie in the rupee in rates of—

(i) income-tax on incomes of Rs. 15,000 and upwards, and

(ii) super-tax with the exception of companies' super-tax.

This addition is expected to yield a revenue of Rs. 70 lakhs in 1930-31.

5. Clause 9 seeks to repeal section 7 of the Indian Finance Act, 1926, which requires that Reparation receipts subject to certain reductions should be appropriated for the reduction or avoidance of public debt. The repeal will release the receipts for revenue purposes. The amount which will be so released in 1930-31 will be Rs. 32 lakhs.—(See Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

[28th March, 1930.]

An Act further to amend the Sea Customs Act, 1878, to fix the duty on salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, certain parts of British India, to vary certain duties leviable under the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, to fix maximum rates of postage under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, to fix rates of income-tax, to vary the excise duty on kerosene leviable under the Indian Finance Act, 1922, and further to amend the Indian Paper Currency Act, 1923, and the Indian Finance Act, 1926.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Sea Customs Act, 1878, to fix the duty on salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, certain parts of British India, to vary certain duties leviable under the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, to fix maximum rates of postage under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, to fix rates of income-tax, to vary the excise duty on kerosene leviable under the Indian Finance Act, 1922, and further to amend the Indian Paper Currency Act, 1923, and the Indian Finance Act, 1926; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY (AMENDMENT)
SUPPLEMENTARY ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XVI OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following are extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons annexed to the Bill:—

“Clause (o) of rule 1, Order XLIII of the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, gives a right of appeal from an order passed under rule 3 or rule 8 of Order XXXIV refusing to extend time for the payment of mortgage money. By section 4 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929, the provisions of rules 3 and 8 regarding the extension of time will appear in rules 2 and 7; and the references in clause (o) of rule 1, Order XLIII, should be corrected accordingly.

In rule 4 of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, a provision has been inserted by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929, making it clear that in the case of suits for sale a Court has power to extend the time for payment of the mortgage money. It is desirable that there should be a right of appeal against an order passed thereunder refusing an extension of time, as sub-rule (2) of rule 4 is identical in principle and almost identical in words with sub-rule (2) of rule 2 and sub-rule (2) of rule 7. Hence a reference to rule 4 is required in clause (o) of rule 1 of Order XLIII.”—(Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

[2nd April, 1930.]

An Act to amend the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929, for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. This Act may be called THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY (AMENDMENT) SUPPLEMENTARY ACT, 1930.

Short title.

Insertion of
new section
7-A in Act
XXI of 1929.

2. After section 7 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

Amendment
of rule 1 of Order XLIII,
Schedule I,
Act V of 1908.

“7-A. In clause (o) of rule 1 of Order XLIII of the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the words ‘under rule 3 or rule 8’ the words ‘under rule 2, rule 4 or rule 7’ shall be substituted.”

THE COTTON TEXTILE INDUSTRY (PROTECTION) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XVII OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following are extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons :—For several years the cotton textile industry though one of the oldest organized industries in India has been passing through a period of great difficulty. Since the war its internal organization has not been re-adjusted to an extent sufficient to enable to meet severe competition from other countries where organization has already taken place. The condition of the industry is, in fact, very much that contemplated by the Fiscal Commission when in paragraph 100 of their report they included in the category of industries to which protection might be granted an industry which, though not young, was suffering from some temporary deterioration or atrophy. From the evidence in the possession of Government it appears that during the last three years, and particularly in the last six months, the pressure of external competition has intensified, and that the cotton mill industry throughout India is depressed, though the extent of the depression varies at different centres. In Bombay Island, where in two successive years the mills have passed through prolonged and exhausting labour disputes, a stage has been reached when the continued existence of the industry is endangered. External competition is most severe in the class of plain grey goods which form a high proportion of the output of the Indian mills and particularly of those situated in Bombay Island. In these circumstances, emergency measures are called for in order to give the industry temporary shelter and time to reorganize itself and increase its efficiency. It appears further that the depression in the industry is due not to the competition of goods imported from the United Kingdom, but of goods imported from elsewhere.

2. In order to effect its object the Bill seeks to impose (a) a protective duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem on cotton piece-goods of all classes, and (b) a protective minimum specific duty of 3½ annas a pound on plain grey goods, these duties being applicable to goods not manufactured in the United Kingdom. Goods made in the United Kingdom will be subject only to the revenue duty. The specific minimum duty is required in order to afford adequate protection to the Indian mills in respect of that class of goods where external competition is most severe.

3. It is proposed that the protective duties should remain in force only for a period reasonably sufficient to enable the industry to reorganize itself. For this reason, the Bill fixes the 31st March, 1933, as the limit of the period within which the duties will operate. The 20 per cent. ad valorem duty will come into force as soon as the Bill becomes law, and the date from which the minimum specific duty will take effect will be fixed by notification. This is necessary in order that shippers may have time to mark consignments of plain grey goods for weight.

4. The Bill also takes the opportunity to extend for a further period of three years the operation of the Indian Tariff (Cotton Yarn Amendment) Act, 1927. That Act was passed to meet competition from yarn produced in Japan under industrial conditions which were unfair by reason of the absence of any restriction on the night work of women in the mills. With the passing of the Japanese Factory Law of 1929 the unfair element in Japanese competition has disappeared. Meanwhile the total imports of twist and yarn from China increased from 945,000 lbs. in 1926-27 to 12½ million lbs. in 1927-28 and to 11½ million lbs. in 1928-29, imports during the whole of the latter year having been subject to the specific minimum duty. The imports for the first nine months of the current financial year were 7½ million lbs. Until January of this year Chinese law placed no limit on the hours of work either of men or women, and no restriction on the employment of children. Information has very recently been received that on the 16th January, 1930, a law was promulgated in China which prohibits child labour and the night work of women, and limits the hours of work generally, but no evidence is forthcoming to show that any steps have been taken to make this law effective. In these circumstances, Chinese mills must still be regarded as possessing an unfair advantage justifying continuance of the minimum specific duty imposed in 1927."

[4th April, 1930.]

An Act further to amend the Indian Tariff Act, 1894.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, in order to protect the cotton textile industry in British India in respect of the manufacture of cotton piece-goods, and in order to continue for a further period the protection already given to that industry against competition in cotton yarn produced under industrial conditions which enable such yarn to be produced at a cost below that at which it can be produced in British India; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. This Act may be called THE COTTON TEXTILE INDUSTRY (PROTECTION) ACT, 1930.

Short title.

2. (1) After Item No. 156 of the Second Schedule to the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, the following heading and Item shall be inserted, namely:—

Amendment
of the Second
Schedule, Act
VIII of 1894.

“YARNS AND TEXTILE FABRICS.

156-A	COTTON PIECE-GOODS (other than ferts of not more than nine yards in length)— (a) plain grey, that is, not bleached or dyed in the piece, if imported in pieces which either are without woven headings or contain any length of more than nine yards which is not divided by transverse woven headings— (i) of British manufacture ..	Ad valorem.	15 per cent. or 3½ annas per pound, whichever is higher.
-------	--	--------------------	---

(ii) not of British manufacture ..	Ad valorem..	20 per cent. or 3 1/2 annas per pound, whichever is higher.
(b) others—
(i) of British manufacture ..	Ad valorem..	15 per cent.
(ii) not of British manufacture ..	Ad valorem..	20 per cent."

(2) The amendment made by sub-section (1) shall have effect only up to the 31st day of March, 1933.

(3) The words "or 3½ annas per pound, whichever is higher" appearing in the fourth column of Item No. 156-A of the said Second Schedule, as inserted by sub-section (1), shall not have effect until such date as the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint.

Amendment
of the Second
Schedule, Act
VIII of 1894.

3. (1) In item No. 44 of the Second Schedule to the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, after the figure and words "5 per cent." the figure and words "or 1½ annas per pound whichever is higher" shall be added.

(2) The amendment made by this section shall have effect only up to the 31st day of March, 1933.

THE SILVER (EXCISE DUTY) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XVIII OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following are extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons annexed to the Bill:—

The Indian Finance Bill introduced on the 28th February 1930 includes a proposal for the levy of a customs duty of four annas per ounce on silver bullion and coin. If this proposal is accepted, the effect will be to raise the internal price of silver, which will give a corresponding bounty to local producers of silver on so much of their output as is sold in India. This could be neglected when there was an import duty on silver bullion before, since the production of silver in India was then very small; but the position is now entirely different and one concern in Burma has an output of six to seven million ounces a year. It is therefore proposed to impose a countervailing excise duty on silver produced in India, power being taken to exempt any silver produced in India and exported out of India."—
(Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

[4th April, 1930.]

• An Act to provide for the imposition and collection of an excise duty on silver.

• WHEREAS it is expedient to impose an excise duty on silver and to provide for the collection thereof; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called THE SILVER (EXCISE DUTY) ACT, 1930. Short title and extent.
- (2) It extends to the whole of British India.
2. In this Act "silver works" means any place where silver is extracted from ore. Definition.
3. (1) There shall be collected at every silver works on all silver produced in such works, which is issued out of the premises of such works on and after the 17th day of March, 1930, a duty at the rate of four annas on each ounce. Imposition and collection of an excise duty on silver.
- (2) If any duty payable under sub-section (1) is not paid within the time fixed by a notice issued in accordance with any rules made in this behalf under this Act, it shall be deemed to be an arrear, and the authority to which such duty is payable may, in lieu thereof, recover any sum not exceeding double the amount of the duty unpaid which such authority may in its discretion think it reasonable to require.
- (3) Any arrear of duty, or any sum recoverable in lieu thereof under sub-section (2), shall be recoverable as an arrear of income-tax in any manner prescribed in section 46 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.
4. (1) No person shall issue any silver out of the premises of any silver works except in accordance with the provisions of rules made under section 6 regulating such issue, or, until such rules are made, in accordance with the general or special orders of the Local Government. Issue of silver from silver works.
- (2) Whoever contravenes any such rule or order shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or to a sum double the amount of the duty on any silver issued in contravention of such rule or order, whichever is greater.
5. The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare that any of the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, relating to the levy of and exemption from customs duties, drawback of duty, warehousing, offences and penalties, confiscation, and the procedure relating to offences and appeals shall, with such modifications and alterations as he may consider necessary or desirable to adapt them to the circumstances, be applicable in regard to like matters in respect of the duty on silver imposed by section 3. Application of the provisions of Act VIII of 1878 to the excise duty on silver.
6. (1) The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, make rules— Power to make rules.
- (a) imposing on owners of silver works the duty of furnishing returns and keeping records and books, prescribing the form of such returns, records and books and the particulars to be contained therein, and the manner in which the same are to be verified, and all such other conditions thereof as may be necessary;

- (b) providing for the regulation of the issue of silver out of the premises of silver works;
- (c) providing for the assessment of the duty, the issue of notices requiring payment, the authority to whom the duty shall be payable, and for the recovery of arrears;
- (d) providing for the inspection of silver works; and
- (e) generally, for carrying into effect the provisions of this Act.

(2) Such rules may provide that any breach thereof shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees:

Provided that the breach of any rule made under clause (b) of sub-section (1) shall be punishable with the penalty prescribed in sub-section (2) of section 4.

THE INDIAN COMPANIES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XIX OF 1930.

PRELIMINARY NOTE:—The following extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons would show the necessity for the passing of this amending Act:—

“One of the main objects in passing the Indian Companies Act, 1913, was to ensure that the accounts of companies are properly audited, and section 144 of the Act deals with the appointment and qualification of auditors. Under sub-sections (1) and (2) of this section, the Local Government is the statutory authority for the grant of certificates to persons entitling them to act as auditors of public companies and to make rules providing for the grant of such certificates. The proviso to sub-section (1) also empowers the Governor-General in Council to declare that the members of specified institutions or associations shall be entitled to be appointed and to act as auditors of companies throughout British India.

The existing arrangements were not intended to be more than temporary and transitional. It is doubtful whether the provisions of section 144 of the Indian Companies Act are in consonance with the classification of subjects under the existing constitution, and it is considered to be desirable that definite steps should now be taken to prepare a way for advance towards the ideal system of an autonomous association of accountants able to assume complete responsibility for the maintenance of the requisite standard of professional qualification, discipline and conduct of its members. Further, during the last few years a large increase has taken place not only in the number of joint stock companies in India, but also in the range of their activities, which frequently extend beyond the limits of a single province. Not only, therefore, is a high standard of professional qualification necessary but it is also necessary that this standard should be uniform throughout the country. With these objects in view the Government of India have caused the whole position to be re-examined and have prepared a comprehensive scheme, in consultation with Local Governments and commercial and other bodies interested. This scheme proposes to transfer the power to grant auditors' certificates and to make rules for the grant of such certificates from the Local Government to the Governor-General in Council, and provides for the appointment of an Indian Accountancy Board, consisting of persons representing the interests principally affected or having special knowledge of accountancy, to advise the Governor-General in Council on all matters concerning the grant of auditors' certificates and to assist him in maintaining the standards of qualification and conduct required of auditors. It also provides for the appointment of local accountancy boards at important centres for the purpose of advising the Indian Accountancy Board and the Governor-General in Council on any matters that may be referred to them.

END

The object of the Bill is to take the necessary power to give effect to this scheme. The more important changes which it is proposed to make in the law are:—

(1) the substitution in section 144 of the Governor-General in Council for the Local Government as the statutory authority for granting auditors' certificates and for making rules for the grant of such certificates; and

(2) the abolition of the power to allow members of specified societies to act as auditors without certificates."—(Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

The following are extracts from the Report of the Select Committee:—

Clause 2.—We have added to proposed section 144 (2), a provision that the rules should provide for renewal and cancellation of certificates. At the same time we have deleted the reference to conditions and restrictions from proposed section 144 (2-B) which as it stood might have been interpreted as authorising territorial restrictions which we consider undesirable.

We have also inserted a proviso to the effect that certificates shall not be withheld merely because the applicant is not a regularly practising accountant. We do not consider that an otherwise qualified accountant should be debarred from auditing accounts simply on the ground that accountancy is not his sole occupation.

We are agreed that the first members of the Central and Local Advisory Boards should be nominated by the Governor-General in Council for a fixed period. We consider, however, that, on reconstitution, the Boards should contain a progressively increasing elected element. We have accordingly made slight amendments in proposed section 144 (2-A) (e) and (f) in order to render this possible.

Clause 3.—We consider that, in addition to the temporary safeguard afforded by this clause to persons entitled under the existing law to audit accounts, they should be entitled, on payment of the usual fee, to enrolment in the proposed register of accountants and have provided accordingly. This amendment will not exempt such persons from liability to removal from the register for misconduct, etc.—(Report of the Select Committee.)

[4th April, 1930.]

An Act further to amend the Indian Companies Act, 1913, for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Companies Act, 1913, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN COMPANIES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Short title and commencement.

(2) It shall come into force on such date as the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint.

Amendment
of section 144,
Act VII of 1913.

2. In section 144 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913,—

(a) in sub-section (1),—

(i) for the words “Local Government” the words “Governor-General in Council” shall be substituted; and

(ii) for the proviso the following proviso shall be substituted, namely:—

“Provided that a firm whereof the partners all hold such certificates may be appointed by its firm-name to be auditor of a company, and may act in its firm-name.”; and

(b) for sub-section (2) the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

“(2) The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India and after previous publication, make rules providing for the grant, renewal or cancellation of such certificates and prescribing conditions and restrictions for such grant, renewal or cancellation:

Provided that nothing contained in such rules shall preclude any person from being granted a certificate merely by reason that he does not practise as a public accountant.

(2-A) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

(a) provide for the maintenance of a Register of Accountants entitled to apply for such certificates;

(b) prescribe the qualifications for enrolment on the Register and the fees therefor;

(c) provide for the examination of candidates for enrolment, and prescribe the fees to be paid by examinees;

(d) prescribe the circumstances in which the name of any person may be removed from or restored to the Register;

(e) provide for the establishment, constitution and procedure of an Indian Accountancy Board, consisting of persons representing the interests principally affected or having special knowledge of accountancy in India, to advise him on all matters of administration relating to accountancy, and to assist him in maintaining the standards of qualification and conduct of persons enrolled on the Register; and

- (f) provide for the establishment, constitution and procedure of local accountancy boards at such centres as the Governor-General in Council may select, to advise him and the Indian Accountancy Board on any matter that may be referred to them.

(2-B) The holder of a certificate granted under this section shall be entitled to be appointed and act as an auditor of companies throughout British India."

3. (1) All certificates granted by Local Governments before the commencement of this Act entitling the holders, and all declarations made before the commencement of this Act by the Governor-General in Council entitling the members of any specified institution or association, to be appointed and to act as auditors of companies throughout British India shall be deemed to be cancelled on the expiry of one year from the commencement of this Act:

Certificates granted before the commencement of this Act.

Provided that the Governor-General in Council may direct that any such certificate or declaration shall remain in force for a further period not exceeding one year:

Provided further that any person who—

- (a) was entitled immediately before the commencement of this Act by reason of any such certificate or declaration to be appointed and to act as an auditor of companies throughout British India, and
- (b) has at any time, after he became so entitled and before the commencement of this Act, resided in India, shall, if he possesses such qualifications as to good character and on payment of such fee as may be prescribed under clause (b) of sub-section (2-A) of section 144 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, be entitled to be enrolled on the Register of Accountants referred to in that sub-section.

(2) Persons holding restricted certificates granted by Local Governments before the commencement of this Act entitling them to act as auditors within a province may continue so to act, on such conditions as may be prescribed by the Governor-General in Council in rules made by notification in the Gazette of India and after previous publication.

THE DESTRUCTIVE INSECTS AND PESTS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XX OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following are extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons:—

The import into British India of any article or class of articles likely to cause infection to any crop is at present regulated by rules framed under the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1914. The term 'import' as defined in that Act means the bringing or taking by sea or land. It does not include bringing or taking by air. The introduction of regular air mail services has introduced a new method of import which was not contemplated when the Act was passed and has created a new risk. This risk is especially grave in the case of such pests as the Mediterranean fruit fly, owing to the short time that may elapse between the loading of the infested material and its delivery in India. The Mediterranean fruit fly is not yet known to occur in India but has invaded South Africa, Australia, New Zealand and Hawaii and has proved a most serious pest of fruit and vegetables in those countries. The amendment of the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1914, which is now proposed will enable steps to be taken to prevent the introduction through the medium of air transport of this and other pests, more especially fruit pests which have not so far been found in India."—(Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

[4th April, 1930.]

An Act to amend the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1914, for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1914, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

Amendment
of section 2,

Act II of 1914.

1. This Act may be called THE DESTRUCTIVE INSECTS AND PESTS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

2. In clause (b) of section 2 of the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1914, for the words "or land", the words "land or air" shall be substituted.

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XXI OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following Report of the First Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for certain purposes was presented to the Legislative Assembly on the 26th February 1929:—

We, the undersigned Members of the Select Committee to which the Papers Nos. I to VII. Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for certain purposes was referred, have considered the Bill and the papers noted in the margin, and have now the honour to submit this our Report, with the Bill as amended by us, annexed thereto.

The Committee met on the 3rd and 5th March 1928, and the 1st and 2nd February 1929. Our deliberations have resulted in considerable alterations of the details of the Bill although not, we think, in its general principles. These alterations we now propose to refer to clause by clause omitting reference to minor alterations of a purely drafting nature.

• Clause 3.—We have omitted the words "and assess it as if it were unregistered" as otiose. If the registration is cancelled, the firm can only be assessed as an unregistered firm, Clause 4.—This clause we have found to require very careful consideration, and we have expended a considerable amount of time in the discussion of it.

As regards sub-section (1) of the proposed new section 23-A, we agree, in the first place, with those criticisms which point out that there may be perfectly genuine firms of which one member only is competent to bind the firm by his act, while, on the other hand, we consider that the sub-section as drafted could easily be evaded by an unwritten agreement or understanding under which a deed of partnership giving such powers to all the partners could be rendered a practical nullity and the actual power placed in the hands of one partner only. We further agree that it is very important that, as is provided in the case of companies in the English Act, the real purpose of the sub-section should be clearly stated and its provisions confined to cases where a firm or association has been formed and is used really and principally in order that one or more of its partners may evade the incidence of income-tax. Finally, we have added an Explanation to make it clear that firms such as are common in India in which one man puts up the whole or the major portion of the capital and is the principal partner in possibly a dozen or more firms with working partners associated with him, are not necessarily to be deemed to have been formed for the purpose of evasion. We think that the sub-section as now redrafted is a reasonable solution of the objections which have been taken to the original proposal.

As regards sub-section (2) of the proposed new section 23-A, we are convinced that the criteria contained in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of the sub-section as originally proposed would fail to achieve the desired object. These clauses would not in fact have limited the operation of the sub-section to private companies only because, as many of the objectors have failed to observe, the conditions were to be alternative and not cumulative. On the other hand, it would have been perfectly easy for any person to form a public company having none of these attributes and yet actually under the control of a single person. As in the case of sub-section (1), we are also impressed with the importance of having the real purpose of the enactment clearly stated in the body of the sub-section. After exhaustive discussions, therefore, we have adopted a sub-section which follows fairly closely, with necessary modifications, section 21 of the English Finance Act, 1922, as amended and amplified by section 31 (3) of the English Finance Act, 1927. The most important feature of the sub-section as now drafted is perhaps the proviso that it is not to apply to a company which is a subsidiary company or in which the public is substantially interested, and for the purpose of fixing the meaning of the latter expression we have formed the view that the definitions in the English Act are as satisfactory as it is possible in all the circumstances to devise.

We have further added to the new section 23-A three sub-sections. Sub-section (3) provides that any firm, association or company must be given an opportunity of being heard before orders are passed under the section. Sub-section (4) provides in the case of a firm or association that the additional tax payable by a member may, in default of payment by him, be recovered from the firm or association, and in the case where the individual members of a company have become liable to additional tax in respect of undistributed profits, that the proportionate part of tax payable on such undistributed profits shall be recoverable only from the company. Sub-section (5) provides that where undistributed profits have been included in the total income of individual members of a company they shall not, if they are subsequently distributed, be taxable again in the hands of the individual.

Clause 5 of the Bill as amended (Clause 9 of the Bill as introduced).—We consider that the definite provision which the Bill is to make for the procedure in the matter of registration of firms would be more suitably inserted in the Income-tax Act as section 26-A rather than as section 39-A. As regards the subject-matter of the new section we have considered very carefully the provision originally made in sub-section (3) allowing an Income-tax Officer to refuse registration to any association of individuals which is in his opinion not a firm. We think, in the first place, that such a provision is unnecessary in view of the provisions of sub-section (1) of the new section 23-A which gives power to the Income-tax authorities to treat the members of a firm as individuals, ignoring the constitution of the firm as such, and of his undoubted power under the Act as it now stands to refuse registration to a concern which on the face of the deed of partnership is not a firm as defined in the Act. In addition to this we observe that there is undoubtedly a large body of opinion which holds that the sub-section would place in the hands of Income-tax Officers a power which, although it might not in actual practice be abused, is liable to be misconceived and thus to hamper and discourage the formation of perfectly genuine partnerships for business purposes. At the same time we realize that it should not be possible for persons to obtain registration of an enterprise as a registered firm which is in fact nothing more than a one-man concern and we think the object in view can be satisfactorily met by making provision for the verification of an application for registration and by imposing by an amendment of section 52 of the Act a penalty upon any one who makes a false verification. The result is a small amendment in sub-section (2) of the new section 26-A and of section 52 of the Act; and the omission of sub-section (3) of the new section.

Clause 6 (Clause 5 of the Bill as introduced).—We have agreed to this clause with one small drafting amendment.

Clause 7.—This clause is new. Clause 11 of the Bill as introduced provided a reference to the High Court on questions of fact as well as of law in cases where the income-tax authorities proceed against firms, associations and companies under the new section 23-A. Several of the High Courts have taken strong objection to this proposal. They point out that not only would this involve a great increase in the work of High Courts but also a new principle would be introduced into the law relating to the jurisdiction of High Courts by making it the arbiter of facts, a principle which might have serious repercussions in other branches of law. We are agreed that these objections are fatal to the original proposal and consider that the only possible alternative is to provide, as we do in this clause, for the reference of cases of this nature to Boards of Referees. The actual provisions governing the constitution and procedure of these Boards we propose to leave to rules, but as the matter is of great importance to the commercial community we desire to outline briefly the manner in which we think they should be constituted. We may here observe that the rules will, as in the case of other rules made under the Act, be made after previous publication. The outline of our proposals is as follows:—

(1) The members of each Board of Referees should be chosen from an All-India panel constituted and maintained by the Central Board of Revenue. It will be the duty of the Central Board of Revenue to appoint a number of persons from each province who are willing to serve on Boards of Referees and to appoint such number from each province as is proportionate to the size and commercial importance of the province.

(2) On receipt of an application by the Commissioner of Income-tax for the reference of a case to a Board of Referees he will appoint a Board consisting of three, four or five members according to the magnitude of the case and of the issues involved. He should be directed to avoid selection of persons likely to show bias either for or against the appellant and should carefully consider the risk of an appellant being compelled to disclose the details of his business to a trade rival. Apart from this, although there will not be separate panels for each province, the Commissioners would normally choose a panel from those residing in the neighbourhood so as to avoid inconvenience and loss of time in travelling.

(3) The names selected by the Commissioner should be communicated to the appellant within one week, and the appellant should then be given a reasonable time, say 15 days, within which he may object, without giving reasons, to the inclusion of any name and at the same time may name not less than five members of the panel to whom he will not object. The Commissioner will then proceed to substitute a fresh name for any name to which objection has been taken, but he should not be bound by the list of names submitted by the appellant. If he takes a name from the appellant's list no objection to that name should be allowed. As regards any other names, the appellant should be allowed one more opportunity to raise objections. Thereafter, that is to say, in the case where the appellant has twice objected to a panel as proposed to be constituted by the Commissioner, the final composition of the Board should be settled by the Central Board of Revenue.

(4) The date and place of meeting of a Board should be fixed by the Commissioner of Income-tax after consulting the members.

(5) The members should elect a Chairman from among the non-official members of the Board and thereafter the procedure will be directed and controlled by him.

(6) The decision of a Board should be the decision of the majority of members present and signing the same. All members who are present should sign but any member should have the right to record a dissenting minute. In the case of an equality of votes, the Chairman should have a casting vote and any decision which is signed by not less than half of the members should be deemed to be a valid decision. Provided these conditions are fulfilled, the absence of a member or his failure to sign the decision should not invalidate the proceedings.

(7) The scales of remuneration and allowances for members of Boards of Referees should be provided for in the rules.

Decisions of Boards of Referees are made final, subject to a reference (for which we provide in clause 10) to the High Court on points of law.

The only other point to which special reference is needed is the proviso to sub-section (3) of the proposed new section 33-A which enables the appellant to endeavour to obtain a decision in his favour from the Commissioner acting under his powers of revision and thus obviate the delay and possible inconvenience of a reference to a Board.

Clause 8.—This clause is, as already noticed, consequential in part upon the amendment which we have made in sub-section (2) of the proposed new section 26-A, and also contains a penalty for false verification of an appeal to a Board of Referees. (See sub-section (2) of new section 33-A.)

Clause 10.—We have already explained this clause in our remarks upon clause 7.

3. As we stated in the opening part of our Report, the Bill has not been essentially altered in principle, but the radical alterations in detail which we have made in clause 4 and the substitution of Boards of Referees as appellate tribunals in place of the High Courts undoubtedly raise questions which require the fullest consideration. We therefore, as required by sub-order (4) of Standing Order 41, record our opinion that the Bill has been so altered as to require republication.—(Report of First Select Committee.)

The following are extracts from the Report of the Second Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922:—

Clause (3).—We have amended this clause in order to provide that the registration of a firm shall not be cancelled until it has been served with a notice of the Income-tax Officer's intention and has had an opportunity to appear before him and show cause against the cancellation.

Clause (4).—In sub-section (1) of proposed section 23-A we have made a drafting amendment in order to bring the wording into line with the wording used in section 23, to which this new section will be supplementary. A similar amendment is made in sub-section (2).

We have amended sub-section (2) further, for two distinct purposes. The first insertion we have made expands the words relating to the "reasonable needs existing and contingent" of the business, and are designed to place it beyond doubt that accumulations made by a company as a matter of sound financial practice or in order to make provision for the development of its genuine business, shall not come within the scope of the sub-section.

The second insertion is intended to cover cases where companies of the kind contemplated in the sub-section do not accumulate their profits as such, but capitalise them and distribute them among their members as bonus shares, with intent to avoid payment of income-tax. This device would have defeated the purpose of the sub-section as it stood.

In Explanation (c) of proposed sub-section (2) we have made a small drafting amendment, in order to place it beyond doubt that the company will be entitled, if it can do so, to rebut the presumption set up by that Explanation.

In proposed sub-section (4), clause (ii), we have made an amendment to secure that the tax in these cases can be recovered from the member himself if the company conceals its assets or goes into liquidation and thus makes the remedy against itself ineffective.

We have also added a new clause (iii) which will apply the machinery for recovery contained in Chapter VI of the Act to sums to be recovered from associations under this new section.

Clause 5.—We have not amended this clause, as we have been assured that the intention of Government is that the rules to be made under sub-clause (2) will relate to procedure only, and will not confer upon Income-tax Officers any arbitrary power to refuse registration.

Clause 6.—While this Bill has been under discussion, the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1928, has been passed into law. This Act has amended section 26 so as to provide that where a change has occurred in the constitution of a firm, the assessments on the firm and on the members thereof shall be made as if the firm had been constituted throughout the previous year as it is constituted at the time of making the assessment. When this provision is applied to registered firms, it will be seen that the present draft of sub-section (2) of proposed section 28 is imperfect, as it has regard only to the deed of partnership registered at the time of making the assessment; whereas the profits may have been, or should have been, distributed, in whole or in part, in accordance with the registered instrument of the previous year. We have made two amendments to cover cases of this kind.

Clause 7.—The amendment in sub-section (1) of proposed section 33-A will have the effect of extending the period of limitation, and will give the intending appellant a complete month from the date on which he learns of the adverse order.

In sub-section (6) also we have made two amendments. The first deletes the provision which requires that the chairman of a Board must be a non-official. We contemplate that senior judicial officers may be members of these Boards, and it is possible that in some cases it might be desirable to have an experienced judge as chairman of the Board. We are assured that the rules to be made governing the procedure of Boards will provide that the Board may elect its own chairman. On this assurance, we think it preferable to leave the discretion of the Board unfettered, having particular regard to the fact that there can never be a majority of official members on any Board.

The second amendment will meet the varying conditions of the different provinces, for in some a judicial officer does not attain the rank of Subordinate Judge until he is on the point of retirement, while in others he is given the title of Subordinate Judge as soon as he is appointed to the Provincial Judicial Service. Our amendment secures that these persons shall be officers of the Judicial Services, with not less than ten years' judicial experience.

We have considered the remarks of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce in regard to the clause, to the effect that executive instructions should be issued to secure that there shall be no risk of an assessee having to disclose the details of his business to a trade rival who may be appointed as a member of the Board of Referees trying the assessee's appeal. We are of opinion that the danger will be avoided if the recommendations made under clause 7 in the Report of the First Select Committee on this Bill are carried out, and we propose no further action by the Legislature; but we take the opportunity of strongly endorsing those recommendations, which we consider essential to the proper working of the system of Boards of Referees.

New clause 8.—We have inserted a new clause 8 which is intended to make the machinery for recovery of tax apply to demands made under the new section 23-A. We have re-numbered the succeeding clauses.

Clause 11.—In this clause, as re-numbered, we have made a small drafting amendment.—(Report of Second Select Committee.)

[4th April, 1930.]

*An Act further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922,
for certain purposes.*

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for certain purposes hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

(2) It shall come into force on the 1st day of April, 1930.

2. In section 2 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act),—

(a) after clause (6) the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

“(6-A) ‘firm’, ‘partner’ and ‘partnership’ have the same meanings respectively as in the Indian Contract Act, 1872”; and

(b) for clause (14) the following shall be substituted, namely:—

“(14) ‘registered firm’ means a firm registered under the provisions of section 26-A;”

Short title and commencement.

Amendment
of section 2,
Act XI of 1922.

Amendment
of section 23,
Act XI of 1922.

3. In sub-section (4) of section 23 of the said Act,—

(a) after the word “judgment” the words “and, in the case of a registered firm, may cancel its registration” shall be added; and

(b) the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

“Provided that the registration of a firm shall not be cancelled until fourteen days have elapsed from the issue of a notice by the Income-tax Officer to the firm intimating his intention to cancel its registration”.

Insertion of
new section
23-A in Act
XI of 1922.

4. After section 23 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

Power to assess individual members of certain firms, associations and companies.

“23-A. (1) Where the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that any firm or other association of individuals carrying on any business, other than a Hindu undivided family or a company, is under the control of one member thereof, and that such firm or association has been formed or is being used for the purpose of evading or reducing the liability to tax of any member thereof, he may, with the previous approval of the Assistant Commissioner, pass an order that the sum payable as income-tax by the firm or association shall not be determined, and thereupon the share of each member in the profits and gains of the firm or association shall be included in his total income for the purpose of his assessment thereon.

Explanation.—A member of a firm or association who owns the whole or the major portion of the capital of the firm or association shall not by reason only of that fact be deemed to control the firm or association.

(2) Where the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that a company is under the control of not more than five of its members and that its profits and gains are allowed to accumulate beyond its reasonable needs, existing and contingent, having regard to the maintenance and development of its business, without being distributed to the members, or that a reasonable part of its profits and gains, having regard to the said needs, has not been distributed to its members in such manner as to render the amount distributed liable to be included in their total income, and that such accumulation or failure to distribute is for the purpose of preventing the imposition of tax upon any of the members in respect of their shares in the profits and gains so accumulated or not distributed, the Incometax Officer may, with the previous approval of the Assistant Commissioner, pass an order that the sum payable as income-tax by the company shall not be determined, and thereupon the proportionate share of each member in the profits and gains of the company, whether such profits and gains have been distributed to the members or not, shall be included in the total income of such member for the purpose of his assessment thereon:

Provided that this sub-section shall not apply to any company which is a subsidiary company or in which the public are substantially interested.

Explanation.—For the purpose of this sub-section,—

(a) a company shall be deemed to be a subsidiary company if, by reason of the beneficial ownership of shares therein, the control of the company is in the hands of a company not being a company to which the provisions of this sub-section apply or of two or more companies none of which is a company to which those provisions apply;

(b) a company shall be deemed to be a company in which the public are substantially interested if shares of the company (not being shares entitled to a fixed rate of dividend, whether with or without a further right to participate in profits) carrying not less than twenty-five per cent. of the voting power have been allotted unconditionally to, or acquired unconditionally by, and are at the end of the previous year beneficially held by, the public (not including a company to which the provisions of this sub-section apply), and if any such shares have in the course of such previous year been the subject of dealings in any stock exchange in British India or are in fact freely transferable by the holders to other members of the public;

(c) unless the contrary is proved, a company shall be deemed to be under the control of any persons where the majority of the voting power or shares is in the hands of those persons or of relatives or nominees of those persons;

(d) “nominee” means a person who may be required to exercise his voting power on the directions of, or holds shares directly or indirectly on behalf of, another person.

(3) The Assistant Commissioner shall not give his approval to any order proposed to be passed by the Income-tax Officer under this section until he has given the firm, association or company concerned an opportunity of being heard.

- (4) (i) Where any member of a firm or association of individuals makes default in the payment of tax on his share of profits and gains which has been included in his total income under the provisions of sub-section (1), such tax may be recovered from the firm or association, as the case may be.

- (ii) Where the proportionate share of any member of a company in the undistributed profits and gains of the company has been included in his total income under the provisions of sub-section (2), the tax payable in respect thereof shall be recoverable from the company and may be recovered from such member, if there are not sufficient funds in the hands of the company to pay the tax, or if the winding up of the company has commenced.

- (iii) Where tax is recoverable from a company, firm or other association under this sub-section, a notice of demand shall be served upon it in the prescribed form showing the sum so payable, and such company, firm or association shall be deemed to be the assessee in respect of such sum, for the purposes of Chapter VI.

- (5) Where tax has been paid in respect of any undistributed profits and gains of a company under this section, and such profits and gains are subsequently distributed in any year, the proportionate share therein of any member of the company shall be excluded in computing his total income of that year."

Insertion of
new section
26-A in Act
XI of 1922.

Procedure in registration of firms.

5. After section 26 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

"26-A. (1) Application may be made to the Income-tax Officer on behalf of any firm, constituted under an instrument of partnership specifying the individual shares of the partners, for registration for the purposes of this Act and of any other enactment for the time being in force relating to income-tax or super-tax.

- (2) The application shall be made by such person or persons, and at such times and shall contain such particulars and shall be in such form, and be verified in such manner, as may be prescribed; and it shall be dealt with by the Income-tax Officer in such manner as may be prescribed."

6. For section 28 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

Amendment
of section 28,
Act XI of 1922.

Penalty for concealment of income or improper distribution of profits.

“28. (1) If the Income-tax Officer, the Assistant Commissioner or the Commissioner, in the course of any proceedings under this Act, is satisfied that an assessee has concealed the particulars of his income or has deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of such income, and has thereby returned it below its real amount, he may direct that the assessee shall, in addition to the income-tax payable by him, pay by way of penalty a sum not exceeding the amount of the income-tax which would have been avoided if the income so returned by the assessee had been accepted as the correct income.

(2) If the Income-tax Officer, the Assistant Commissioner or the Commissioner, in the course of any proceedings under this Act, is satisfied that the profits of a registered firm have been distributed otherwise than in accordance with the shares of the partners as shown in the instrument of partnership registered under this Act governing such distribution, and that any partner has thereby returned his income below its real amount, he may direct that such partner shall, in addition to the income-tax payable by him, pay by way of penalty a sum not exceeding the amount of income-tax which has been avoided, or would have been avoided if the income returned by such partner had been accepted as his correct income; and no refund or other adjustment shall be claimable by any other partner by reason of such direction.

(3) No order shall be made under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), unless the assessee or partner, as the case may be, has been heard, or has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

(4) No prosecution for an offence against this Act shall be instituted in respect of the same facts on which a penalty has been imposed under this section.

(5) An Assistant Commissioner or a Commissioner, who has made an order under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), shall forthwith send a copy of the same to the Income-tax Officer.”

7. After section 33 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

Insertion of
new section
33-A in Act
XI of 1922.

Reference to Board of Referees;

“33-A. (1) Any person aggrieved by an order of an Income-tax Officer under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of section 23-A may, within thirty days of the date on which he was served with notice of such order, lodge an appeal in the office of the Commissioner.

(2) The appeal shall be in the prescribed form and shall be verified in the prescribed manner.

(3) The Commissioner shall refer such appeal, with a statement of his own opinion thereon, to a Board of Referees for decision; and the Board of Referees shall decide the appeal after hearing the appellant and any person deputed by the Commissioner:

Provided that, before making a reference to a Board of Referees, the Commissioner may, and at the request of the appellant shall, in exercise of his powers of revision under section 33, decide the matters in dispute, and thereupon the assessee may withdraw his appeal or proceed with it.

(4) The decision of the Board of Referees shall be forwarded to the Commissioner who shall transmit it to the Income-tax Officer who passed the original order, and shall also send copies to each Income-tax Officer who has made any assessment consequent upon such order; and where a decision reverses or modifies the order of the Income-tax Officer, fresh assessments shall be made in accordance therewith, or such consequential adjustments as may be required shall be made in any assessment already made.

(5) The decision of a Board of Referees shall not be subject to appeal to any Income-tax authority, and shall not be revised by the Commissioner in exercise of his powers under section 33.

(6) A Board of Referees shall consist of not less than three and not more than five persons, of whom not less than one-half shall be non-officials having business experience, and one shall be a judicial officer not inferior in rank to a Subordinate Judge or a Judge of a Small Cause Court who has held judicial office for a period of not less than ten years.

(7) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (6), the Central Board of Revenue may make rules regulating the formation, composition and procedure of Boards of Referees.”

8. In section 45 of the said Act,—

Amendment
of section 45,
Act XI of 1922.

- (a) after the words "notice of demand" the words and figures "under sub-section (4) of section 23-A or" shall be inserted; and
- (b) after the word and figures "section 30" the words and figures "or under section 33-A" shall be inserted.
9. In section 52 of the said Act, after the word and figures "section 22" the words and figures "or sub-section (2) of section 26-A" shall be inserted, and after the word and figures "section 32" the words and figures "or sub-section (2) of section 33-A" shall be inserted.

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX (SECOND AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XXII OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons would show the necessity for the passing of this Act:—

"This Bill is designed to bring together a number of minor amendments relating mostly to points of machinery and administration and not designed to affect the incidence of taxation except by granting relief in two cases of hardship, neither of which is of major importance in practice (see clauses 2 and 10). Detailed explanations are as set forth below:—

Clause 2.—This remedies a defect in the Act and expressly provides for the relief from double taxation of a member of an association of individuals other than a firm or company or Hindu undivided family.

Clause 3.—This is a drafting amendment intended to set right a mistake in drafting the original section, as a consequence of which it had become largely inoperative.

Clause 4.—This is also a drafting amendment intended to amplify the section and make its provisions quite clear and complete.

Clause 5.—This is necessitated by a ruling of the Calcutta High Court to the effect that, in the absence of any reference to section 196 of the Indian Penal Code in section 37 of the Indian Income-tax Act, no prosecution may be launched under section 196 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of false evidence used in Income-tax proceedings.

Clause 6.—Arrears of income-tax can be recovered under section 46 as arrears of land revenue. But in at least two provinces the Acts relating to the recovery of arrears of land-revenue do not permit the attachment of debts for the purpose of recovering the arrears. It is proposed, therefore, to restore to the Income-tax Officer the power which he possessed under the Act of 1886. If found necessary, executive instructions will be issued that the power proposed to be given shall be exercised by the Income-tax Officer only in those provinces in which it is not permissible, under the law relating to the recovery of arrears of land-revenue, to attach debts.

Clause 7.—The clause is intended to provide for the grant of refunds under section 48 through the High Commissioner in the United Kingdom. This means reversion to the practice which was discontinued in 1926. Complaints have been received of inconvenience to residents in the United Kingdom who have to apply for relief.

Clause 8.—The object of sub-clause (a) is to regularise a concession now given by executive orders. The object of sub-clause (b) is to provide for cases of hardship which sometimes occur.

Clause 9.—Proviso (a) to section 54, as it stands at present, might have the effect of seriously hampering or defeating a prosecution by the Crown in respect, for instance of falsified accounts or stolen documents. It also prevents the Income-tax Department from prosecuting offences under sections 182 and 193 of the Indian Penal Code. So long as the restriction is imposed that the prosecution under the Indian Penal Code can only be in respect of the statements, returns, accounts, documents, evidence, affidavits or depositions referred to in section 54 of the Income-tax Act, there is no reason why the prosecution should be limited to section 193 of the Indian Penal Code only, as at present.

Clause 10.—This is intended to provide for cases of hardship which occur occasionally.

Clause 11.—The object of this clause is to prohibit the appearance in Income-tax proceedings of certain undesirable persons who, calling themselves Income-tax experts, impose on assesses.

Clause 12.—The period of one month is being extended because it has been found in practice to be insufficient.

Clause 13.—This amendment is being made in accordance with a promise given in the Assembly. (Statement of Objects and Reasons.)

The following are extracts from the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922:—

Clause 3.—We have accepted this clause, but its examination has brought out the fact that there may be doubt if an order of an Income-tax Officer under section 25-A is appealable. It may be held that these orders could be reviewed in an appeal under section 30 against the resulting assessment, but we think it safer to take the opportunity now of securing beyond doubt that an appeal shall lie. We have done this by inserting a new clause 4, which amends section 30 in the sense indicated.

We have re-numbered clauses 4 and 5 accordingly.

Old clause 6.—This clause proposed to give powers to Income-tax Officers to attach and sell debts due to assesses. The Statement of Objects and Reasons mentioned that the intention of Government was to instruct Income-tax Officers not to use these powers in any province where the Collector of Land Revenue himself could exercise them. However, during our discussion doubt was raised whether these powers could be exercised by Collectors of Land Revenue in any province, and we do not feel sure of the precise scope of the proposal contained in the clause. We have accordingly deleted it and recommend that the matter should be further investigated, and brought up again in some future amending Bill, should there appear to be need for it.

Clause 8.—In sub-clause (a) we have added some words to make it clear that the person claiming a refund will have the option of choosing that one of the alternative periods of limitation now provided which better suits him.

In sub-clause (b) we have made provision whereby a specially empowered Assistant Commissioner will be able to admit claims for refund after the expiry of the period of limitation. We have done this for considerations of convenience in outlying areas like Sind.

Old clause 11.—This important clause related to restrictions to be imposed upon persons entitled to appear on behalf of others in Income-tax proceedings. Clearly the restrictions proposed went too far, and public opinion, on the whole, is strongly against them. We discussed at length various suggestions to achieve the object in view, namely, to exclude undesirables from practising before Income-tax Officers. We are agreed that some system of control, as by the licensing or registration of Income-tax Agents, is desirable, but we do not feel that we are in a position to formulate any definite scheme which would be certain to command general acceptance. In these circumstances, even if we could settle on a definite proposal, we should consider that it was necessary for it to be circulated for opinion. We therefore recommend that the various suggestions made in this Committee should be further considered by Government, and that definite proposals should be formulated thereon and circulated for opinion before legislation is undertaken on this important subject. Accordingly, we have deleted clause 11 and renumbered the remaining two clauses.

of section 50,
Act XI of 1922.

8. In section 50 of the said Act,—

(a) after the word “recovered” the words “or before the last day of the financial year commencing after the expiry of the previous year, as defined in clause (11) of section 2, in which the income arose on which the tax was recovered, whichever period may expire later” shall be added; and

(b) the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

“Provided that a claim to refund under section 49 may be admitted after the period of limitation herein prescribed, when the applicant satisfies the Commissioner, or an Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax specially empowered in this behalf by the Central Board of Revenue, that he had sufficient cause for not making the claim within such period."

9. In clause (a) of the first proviso to sub-section (2) of section 54 of the said Act, the words and figures "section 193 of" shall be omitted.

Amendment
of section 54,
Act XI of 1922.

10. Section 60 of the said Act shall be numbered as sub-section (1) of section 60, and the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

Amendment
of section 60,
Act XI of 1922.

"(2) Where, by reason of any portion of an assessee's salary being paid in arrears or in advance, his income is assessed at a rate higher than that at which it would otherwise have been assessed; the Governor-General in Council may grant such relief as he may think fit."

11. In sub-section (2) of section 66 of the said Act,—

Amendment
of section 66,
Act XI of 1922.

(a) for the words "within one month of the passing of an order under section 31 or section 32" the words "within sixty days of the date on which he is served with notice of an order under section 31 or section 32" shall be substituted;

(b) for the words "one month" in the second place where they occur, the words "sixty days" shall be substituted.

12. After section 67 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

Insertion of

67-A in Act
XI of 1922.
Computation of periods of limitation.

"67-A. In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal under this Act or for an application under section 66, the day on which the order complained of was made, and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of such order, shall be excluded."

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX (THIRD AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XXIII OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons would show the circumstances under which the Act was passed:—

It has been held by a High Court that bonus, commission or other remuneration paid by an employer to an employee cannot be treated as a business expense and deducted from the employer's income in assessing it to income-tax if the amount of such bonus is dependent on the amount of the profits.

2. At the same time such payments are assessable to income-tax in the hands of the recipients. They are thus liable to double taxation.

3. Under section 60 the Government of India have therefore exempted such payments from income-tax in the hands of the employee where they cannot legally be deducted in assessing the income of the employer, subject to certain conditions.

4. It has been pointed out, however, that apart from technicalities such payments, if they represent genuine remuneration of an employee for services rendered, are rightly to be regarded as business expenses, and that the refusal to allow their deduction as such may cause hardship.

5. It is therefore proposed to amend the law so as to permit the deduction of such payments from the employer's income as a business expense. The Bill provides for this amendment with the safeguards necessary to obviate any abuse.

[4th April, 1930.]

An Act further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX (THIRD AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Amendment
of section 10,
Act XI of 1922.

2. In sub-section (2) of section 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, after clause (viii), the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

“(viii-a) any sum paid to an employee as bonus or commission for services rendered, where such sum would not have been payable to him as profits or dividend if it had not been paid as bonus or commission:

Provided that the amount of the bonus or commission is of a reasonable amount with reference to—

- (a) the pay of the employee and the conditions of his service;
- (b) the profits of the business for the year in question; and
- (c) the general practice in similar businesses;”

THE INDIAN LAC CESS ACT, 1930.

ACT No. XXIV OF 1930.

[25th July, 1930.]

An Act to provide for the creation of a fund for the improvement and development of the cultivation, manufacture and marketing of Indian lac.

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the creation of a fund to be expended by a Committee specially constituted in this behalf for the improvement and development of the cultivation, manufacture and marketing of Indian lac; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN LAC CESS ACT, 1930.

Short title,
extent and commencement.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, except Aden.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Governor-General-in-Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint.

2. In this Act—

Definitions.

(a) "Collector" means a Custom-collector as defined in clause (c) of section 3 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878;

(b) "Committee" means the Indian Lac Cess Committee constituted under section 4;

(c) "lac" includes any form of manufactured or unmanufactured lac other than refuse lac;

(d) "lac cess" means the customs duty imposed by S. 3.

3. There shall be levied and collected on all lac and refuse lac produced in India and exported from any customs port to any port beyond the limits of British India or to Aden a cess at the rate of four annas per maund in the case of lac, and two annas per maund in the case of refuse lac, or at such lower rate as the Governor-General-in-Council may, on the recommendation of the Committee, by notification in the Gazette of India, prescribe.

Imposition of lac cess.

4. (1) The Governor-General-in-Council shall constitute a committee consisting of the following members to receive and expend the proceeds of the cess:—

Constitution of the Indian Lac Cess Committee.

(i) the Vice-Chairman of the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research, ex-officio;

(ii) the Inspector-General of Forests, ex-officio;

(iii) the Forest Entomologist, Dehra Dun, ex-officio;

(iv) the Imperial Entomologist, ex-officio;

(v) the Conservator of Forests, Bihar and Orissa, ex-officio;

- (vi) the Director of Agriculture, Bihar and Orissa, ex-officio;
- (vii) the Director of the Lac Research Institute, Nankum, ex-officio;
- (viii) three persons representing the shellac manufacturing industry, one to be nominated by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, one by the Calcutta Shellac Brokers' Association, and one by the Shellac Traders' Association, Mirzapur;
- (ix) one representative of the shellac export trade nominated by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce;
- (x) one representative of the brokers of lac and shellac in Calcutta nominated by the Calcutta Shellac Brokers' Association;
- (xi) five persons representing the lac cultivators' interests in Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, the United Provinces, the Central Provinces and Assam, one to be nominated by each of the Local Governments of those provinces:

Provided that, if, within the period prescribed in this behalf, or, in the case of first nominations under this Act, within a reasonable time, any authority or body fails to make any nomination which it is entitled to make under this section, the Governor-General-in-Council may himself nominate a member to fill the vacancy.

- (2) The Vice-Chairman of the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research shall be ex-officio President of the Committee.
- (3) The Secretary of the Committee shall be a person, not being a member of the Committee, appointed by the Governor-General-in-Council.
- (4) Where a nominated member dies, resigns, ceases to reside in British India or becomes incapable of acting, the Governor-General-in-Council may, on the recommendation of the authority or body which would have been entitled to make the nomination if it had been a first nomination under sub-section (1), or where such recommendation is not made within the prescribed period, then on his own initiative nominate a person to fill the vacancy.
- (5) No act done by the Committee shall be questioned on the ground merely of the existence of any vacancy in, or any defect in the constitution of, the Committee.

5. The Committee so constituted shall be a body corporate by the name of the Indian Lac Cess Committee, having perpetual succession and a common seal, with power to acquire and hold property both moveable and immoveable and to contract, and shall by the said name sue and be sued.

6. (1) At the close of each month or as soon thereafter as may be convenient, the Collector shall pay the proceeds of the lac cess, after deducting the expenses of collection (if any), to the Committee.

Application of the lac cess.

(2) The said proceeds and any other monies received by the Committee shall be applied to meeting the expenses of the Committee and the cost of such measures as it may, subject to the control of the Governor-General-in-Council, decide to undertake for the improvement and development of methods of cultivation, manufacture and marketing of Indian lac.

7. The Governor-General-in-Council may by notification in the Gazette of India, declare that, with effect from such date, as may be specified in the notification, the Committee shall be dissolved, and on the making of such declaration all funds and other property vested in the Committee shall vest in His Majesty and this Act shall be deemed to have been repealed.

Dissolution of the Committee

8. (1) The Governor-General-in-Council may, after consulting the Committee and after previous publication, make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

Power of Governor-
General-in-Council to make rules.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

- (a) prescribe the time within which nominations shall be made under section 4;
 - (b) prescribe the term of office of the members of the Committee;
 - (c) prescribe the circumstances in which and the authority by which any member may be removed;
 - (d) provide for the holding of a minimum number of meetings of the Committee during any year;
 - (e) provide for the maintenance by the Committee of a record of all business transacted and the submission of copies of such records to the Governor-General in Council;
 - (f) define the powers of the Committee and of the Director of the Lac Research Institute and of the Secretary to the Committee to enter into contracts which shall be binding on the Committee and the manner in which such contracts shall be executed;
- regulate the travelling allowances of members of the Committee and their remuneration, if any;
define the powers of the Committee and of the Director of the Lac Research Institute and of the Secretary to the Committee in respect of the appointment, promotion and dismissal of officers and servants of the Committee and in respect of the creation and abolition of appointments of such officers or servants;

- (i) regulate the grant of pay and leave to officers and servants of the Committee, and the payment of leave allowances to such officers and servants and the remuneration to be paid to any person appointed to act for any officer or servant to whom leave is granted;
- (j) regulate the payment of pensions, gratuities, compassionate allowances and travelling allowances to officers and servants of the Committee;
- (k) provide for the establishment and maintenance of a provident fund for the officers and servants of the Committee, and for the deduction of subscriptions to such provident fund from the pay and allowances of such officers and servants, other than Government servants whose services have been lent or transferred to the Committee;
- (l) regulate the preparation of budget estimates of the annual receipts and expenditure of the Committee and of supplementary estimates of expenditure not included in the budget estimates, and the manner in which such estimates shall be sanctioned and published;
- (m) define the powers of the Committee, the Standing Executive Sub-Committee (if any), the President of the Committee, the Director of the Lac Research Institute and the Secretary to the Committee, respectively, in regard to the expenditure of the fund of the Committee, whether provision has or has not been made in the budget estimates or by re-appropriation for such expenditure, and in regard to the re-appropriation of estimated savings in the budget estimates of expenditure;
- (n) regulate the maintenance of accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the Committee and provide for the audit and publication of such accounts;
- (o) prescribe the manner in which payments shall be made by or on behalf of the Committee, and the officers by whom orders for making deposits, investments or disposal of the funds of the Committee shall be signed;
- (p) determine the custody in which the cash of the Committee shall be kept, and the banks at which surplus monies at the Committee may be deposited at interest, and the conditions on which such monies may be otherwise invested.

- (q) prescribe the preparation of a statement showing the sums allotted to the provincial Departments of Forests or of Agriculture or to institutions or authorities not under the direct control of the Committee for expenditure on schemes relating to the cultivation, manufacture or marketing of lac, the actual expenditure incurred, the outstanding liabilities if any, and the disposal of unexpended balances at the end of the year; and
- (r) regulate the assessment, levy and payment of the lac cess.

9. The Committee may, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General-in-Council, make rules consistent with this Act and with the rules made under section 8 to provide for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

Power of the Committee to make rules.

- (a) the appointment of a Standing Executive Sub-Committee and the delegation thereto of any powers exercisable under this Act by the Committee;
- (b) the method of appointment, removal and replacement and the term of office of members of the Standing Executive Sub-Committee and the filling of vacancies therein;
- (c) the appointment of the dates, times and places for meetings of the Committee and the Standing Executive Sub-Committee, and the regulation of the procedure to be observed at such meetings;
- (d) the determination of the circumstances in which security may be demanded from officers and servants of the Committee, and the amount and nature of such security in each case;
- (e) the determination of the times at which, and the circumstances in which, payments may be made out of the provident fund and the conditions on which such payments shall relieve the fund from further liability;
- (f) the contribution to be paid from the funds of the Committee to the provident fund; generally, all matters incidental to the provident fund and the investment thereof;
- (g) the defining of the powers and duties of the Secretary of the Committee.
- (h) rules made under section 8 or section 9 shall be the Gazette of India.

Publication of rules.

Indian Lac Cess Act, 1921, is hereby repealed.

Repeal.

Dissolution of the Indian Lac Association for Research.

12. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Societies Registration Act, 1860, the Indian Lac Association for Research is hereby dissolved, and all monies and properties vested in it are hereby transferred to the Committee, subject to the payment of any outstanding claims incurred by the said Association under the Indian Lac Cess Act, 1921.

having been appointed a councillor" shall be substituted; and

(ii) in sub-section (2), after the words "elected or appointed a councillor" the words "or having become an ex officio councillor" shall be inserted.

3. In section 5 of the said Act for the words "who has become an ex officio member of a local board" the words "who has become an ex officio councillor of a municipal council or an ex officio member of a local board" shall be substituted.

Amendment
of section 5,
Madras Act
II of 1922.

4. After section 5 of the said Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

Insertion of
new section
5-A in Madras
Act II of 1922.

"5-A. Notwithstanding anything contained in section 5, the chairman of a municipal council or the president of a local board, who has not made the oath or affirmation as a councillor or as a member of the local board, as the case may be, shall be entitled to act as such chairman or president:

Saving in the case of chairmen and presidents.

Provided that he makes the oath or affirmation and takes his seat at the meeting of the council or board which he attends within two months after he is elected or appointed as, or becomes entitled to exercise the functions of, the chairman or president, as the case may be."

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section—

(i) 'chairman' includes a vice-chairman exercising the functions of the chairman under sub-section (6) of section 12 of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920;

(ii) 'president' includes—

(a) the vice-president of a district or taluk board exercising the functions of the president of the board under sub-section (1) of section 18 of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920,

(b) the president of the district headquarters taluk board exercising the functions of the president of the district board under sub-section (2) of the same section, and

(c) the temporary president of a taluk or union board appointed under sub-section (3) or sub-section (4) of the same section.

THE MADRAS TOWN-PLANNING (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT NO. II OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE.—The necessity for the passing of this Act has been explained as follows in the Statement of Objects and Reasons :—

"The necessity for amending the Madras Town-Planning Act, 1920, was felt within a few years after the Act was passed. Serious difficulties were experienced in working the Act in connexion with the Mambalam Town-Planning Scheme. The scheme was prepared by the Madras City and Suburban Town-Planning Trust, which was constituted under the Act, and had, after the preliminary stages had been gone through, to be transferred to the Corporation of Madras for execution mainly for the reason that the Trust was not in a position to finance the scheme. The experience of the Madras Town-Planning Trust showed that the functioning of such a body was greatly handicapped for want of adequate financing provisions in the Act. There was no provision in the Act for equipping the Trust with necessary funds for executing any scheme prepared by it. The absence of any provision in the Act for transferring the execution of a scheme at any stage of its making or execution from the Trust to a local authority or from a local authority to a Trust also caused great inconvenience and trouble. On account of the difficulties about finance and the agency of execution, "The Mylapore Eastern Section Town-Planning Scheme" prepared by the Trust had to be dropped and several other schemes of the Trust had to be held in abeyance. With a view to obviate these difficulties, which were actually experienced in connexion with the operations of the Madras City and Suburban Town-Planning Trust Bill No. 5 of 1924 to amend the Madras Town-Planning Act, 1920, was introduced by the Government.

While Bill No. 5 of 1924 was pending consideration before the Select Committee to which it had been referred by the Legislative Council, it was felt that the Madras Town-Planning Act, 1920, stood in need of amendments in directions other than those dealt with by the Bill. As the Bill was primarily designed to overcome the difficulties in connexion with the Mambalam Town-Planning Scheme and as the scheme had been by that time transferred to the Corporation of Madras, the preferable course seemed to be to abandon the Bill in favour of a comprehensive amending Bill and accordingly Bill No. 5 of 1924 was not proceeded with further.

The existing Act implies a distinction between "town planning" and "town improvement" which is unnecessary and caused inconvenience in practice. The Act provides for construction of houses for the poorer and working classes only but does not include comprehensive housing schemes within its scope. Notwithstanding the compulsory provision contained in section 8 of the Act, most of the municipal councils falling within its purview failed to submit schemes within the prescribed time. Inadequate delays occurred in the correspondence between one local body and another.

the preparation of schemes and the procedure relating to it was complicated. There is no provision in the Act that the execution of a scheme should commence immediately after it was sanctioned; nor is power reserved for enabling the execution of different parts of a scheme at different times. A scheme becomes final when sanctioned by the Local Government even before the arbitrator has completed functioning. The Act imposes an inconvenient restriction by fixing a maximum period of six months from the date of the publication of a notification under section 14 for preferring claims for betterment contribution. Every decision of the arbitrator under the Act is final. These are some of the features which call for amendment in addition to the defects already adverted to which led to the introduction of Bill No. 5 of 1924. The object of the present Bill is to remedy these drawbacks and deficiencies.

The main changes introduced in the Act by this Bill are—

- (1) the definition of "town-planning" so as to include "town improvement";
- (2) provision that a scheme may provide that it or any portions thereof may be enforced or carried out by other responsible authorities specified therein;
- (3) provision for a comprehensive "housing" programme (advance for house building);
- (4) the preparation of general town-planning schemes for all lands in all municipalities and in their vicinity without any population limit;
- (5) simplification of procedure in the matter of preparing schemes and the prevention of delays in the correspondence between one local body and another in regard to it;
- (6) the execution of sanctioned schemes to be commenced forthwith and provision for execution of different parts of a scheme at different times;
- (7) scheme not becoming final until the arbitrator has completed functioning;
- (8) Government to have power to revoke or vary schemes suo motu after publication, etc.;
- (9) provision of minimum period of time instead of maximum period for preferring claims to betterment contribution;
- (10) provision of a right of appeal to the Government from the decision of the arbitrator;
- (11) compulsory contribution to trusts from municipal revenues; and
- (12) provision for transfer of scheme from one authority to another at any stage.

No special reference is necessary in this place to the other changes proposed in the Bill. The appended Notes on Clauses explain in detail the more important provisions of the Bill"—Fort St. George Gazette, Part IV, dated 17th September, 1929.

34. In sub-section (1) of section 54 of the said Act, the words "subject to the condition of previous publication" shall be omitted.

Amendment of section 54, Madras Act VII of 1920.

35. After section 54 of the said Act, the following chapter shall be inserted, namely :—

Insertion of new chapter X in Madras Act VII of 1920.

" CHAPTER X.

TRANSFER OF PROCEEDINGS.

55. (1) The Local Government may, by notification and from a date to be specified in such notification, transfer the proceedings commenced under this Act in respect of any land by any authority having jurisdiction to any other authority having jurisdiction over such land.

Transfer of proceedings from one authority to another.

(2) Before issuing a notification under sub-section (1) the Local Government shall communicate to the authorities affected the grounds on which they propose to make the transfer, fix a reasonable period for them to show cause against the proposal and consider their objections, if any.

(3) The authority to whom a transfer of proceedings is made under sub-section (1) may continue such proceedings from the stage which they had reached on the date specified in the notification.

(4) When making a transfer of proceedings under sub-section (1), the Local Government may direct the authority to whom the transfer is made to reimburse the authority from whom the transfer is made the net expenditure which the last mentioned authority may, up to the date of such transfer, have incurred on such proceedings.

(5) From the date specified in the notification under sub-section (1) all rights and assets which, for the purposes of the proceedings transferred by such notification, are vested in, and all obligations and liabilities which for the same purposes are enforceable against the authority from whom the transfer is made, shall vest in or be enforceable against the authority to whom the transfer is made."

THE MADRAS GAMING ACT.

(ACT NO. III OF 1930.)

PREFATORY NOTE.—The following is the Statement of Objects and Reasons attached to the Bill :—

"The Madras City Police (Amendment) Act, 1929, was designed to deal with bucket shops in the City of Madras. There is increasing evidence of the fact that bucket shops are springing up outside the municipal limits. In order to deal with them effectively and to consolidate the law on gaming and keeping common gaming-houses throughout the province, this Bill extends to the Presidency, with the exception of Madras City, those provisions of the Madras City Police Act, 1888, as amended by the Madras City Police (Amendment) Act, 1929, which deal with bucket shops. It also combines, in the same Bill, the provisions of the Madras City Police Act, 1888, and the Towns Nuisances Act, 1889, which relate to gaming and the keeping of a common gaming house."

21st March, 1930.]

An Act to provide for the punishment of gaming and the keeping of common gaming-houses in the Presidency of Madras.

Preamble. WHEREAS it is expedient to make provision for the punishment of gaming and the keeping of common gaming-houses in the Presidency of Madras; And whereas the previous sanction of the Governor-General has been obtained to the passing of this Act; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title. 1. This Act may be called THE MADRAS GAMING ACT, 1930.

Extent. 2. This Act extends to the whole of the Presidency of Madras with the exception of the City of Madras as defined in the Madras City Police Act, 1888.

Definitions. 3. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context,—

"Common gaming-house." "Common gaming-house" means any enclosure, room or place in which cards, dice, tables or other instruments of gaming are kept or used for the profit or gain of the person owning, occupying, using or keeping such enclosure, room or place, whether by way of charge for the use of instruments of gaming or of the enclosure, room or place, or otherwise howsoever;

"Gaming." "Gaming" does not include a lottery, but includes wagering or betting on a horse-race except when such wagering or betting takes place,—

- (i) on the date on which such race is to be run; and
- (ii) in a place or places within the race enclosure which the authority controlling such race has with the sanction of the Local Government set apart for the purpose.

"Instruments of gaming." "Instruments of gaming" include an article used as a subject or means of, or for the purpose of carrying on or facilitating, or in connexion with gaming and any books, lists, tickets, forms or other documents used or intended to be used as a register or record or evidence of gaming.

Penalty for opening, etc., any enclosure, etc., for gaming on a horse race. 4. (i) Whoever opens, keeps or uses, or permits to be opened, kept or used any enclosure, room or place for the purpose of gaming on a horse race shall be liable on conviction, to imprisonment not exceeding three months or for every day on which such enclosure, room or place is so opened, kept or used to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees or to both.

(ii) Whoever is found gaming on a horse race shall be liable, on conviction, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in this Act, to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees or to imprisonment not exceeding one month.

5. If any salaried Magistrate not inferior to a Magistrate of the second class or any Police Officer not below the rank of a Deputy Superintendent of Police has reason to believe that any place is used as a common gaming-house, he may by his warrant give authority to any Police officer, not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector, to enter with such assistance as may be found necessary, by night or by day, any such place, and to arrest all persons found therein and to seize all instruments of gaming and all moneys and securities for money and articles of value reasonably suspected to have been used or intended to be used for the purpose of gaming which are found therein, and to search all parts of such place and also the persons found therein.

Power to grant warrant to enter a common gaming-house.

6. Any cards, dice, gaming table or cloth, board or other instruments of gaming found in any place entered or searched under the provisions of the last preceding section, or on any person found therein shall be evidence that such place is used as a common gaming-house, and that the persons found therein were there present for the purpose of gaming, although no play was actually seen by the Police Officer or any of his assistants.

Cards, dice, etc., found in search under last section to be evidence that place is a common gaming-house.

7. It shall not be necessary, in order to convict any person of keeping a common gaming-house or of being concerned in the management of any common gaming-house, to prove that any person found playing at any game was playing for any money, wager, bet or stake.

Proof of playing for stakes unnecessary.

8. Whoever opens, keeps or uses, or permits to be used any common gaming-house, or conducts or assists in conducting the business of any common gaming-house or advances or furnishes money for gaming therein, shall be liable on conviction to fine not exceeding five hundred rupees or to imprisonment not exceeding three months, or to both.

Penalty for opening, etc., a common gaming-house.

9. Whoever is found gaming or present for the purpose of gaming in a common gaming-house shall on conviction be liable to fine not exceeding two hundred rupees or to imprisonment not exceeding one month; and any person found in any common gaming-house during any gaming or playing therein shall be presumed, until the contrary be proved, to have been there for the purpose of gaming.

Penalty for being found gaming in a common gaming-house.

10. On conviction of any person for keeping a common gaming-house, or being present therein for the purpose of gaming, all the instruments of gaming found therein may be destroyed by the order of the Magistrate, and such Magistrate may order all or any of the other articles seized, or the proceeds thereof, to be forfeited.

Instruments of gaming may be ordered to be destroyed on conviction.

11. Nothing in sections 5 to 10 of this Act shall be held to apply to games of mere skill wherever played.

Saving of games of skill.

12. Whoever is found gaming with cards, dice, counters, money or other instruments of gaming in any public street, place or thoroughfare or publicly fighting cocks, shall be liable on conviction to fine not exceeding fifty rupees or to imprisonment not exceeding one month; and such instruments of gaming and money shall be forfeited.

Penalty for gaming in public street, etc.

Police may arrest without warrant on view of offence.

Repeal.

13. Any Police Officer may arrest without a warrant any person committing in his view any offence made punishable by this Act.

14. Clause (10) and the last paragraph of section 6 and sections 6, 7 and 9 of the Towns Nuisances Act, 1889, are hereby repealed.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT NO. IV OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE :—Statement of Objects and Reasons.—Clause 3.—Religious institutions which do not ordinarily come under the scope of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act on account of their income being below the minimum laid down in section 4 are in a very neglected and mismanaged condition. As it is, such cases have to be dealt with by special application of the Act under the proviso to that section. The Act should apply to all institutions irrespective of income. Wherever the levy of contributions will work as a hardship on temples or maths with low incomes, exemption from section 69 of the Act may be given or the Board may fix a suitable rate in exercise of its discretionary power under that section.

2. Definition of 'Excepted temple'.—Clause 4.—There are numerous difficulties in the way of deciding whether a temple is excepted or not by the test provided in the present definition of an excepted temple. Further, there are instances of temples whose peculiar conditions justify exceptional treatment though they fall under the category of non-excepted temples by applying the existing definition. The present complicated definition is replaced by a simple one by which all temples, the trusteeship whereof has been wholly hereditary or has been specially provided for by the founder and temples which for special reasons the Local Government want to treat as excepted temples, will come under that category.

3. Clause 5.—Several matters including complaints about mismanagement come up before the Board both on the administrative and judicial sides of its work. Very often temporary arrangements have to be made for the management of the affairs of temples or maths pending disposal of the matters under investigation and action has to be taken under section 18. To make it clear that the Board can do so under it, the addition of an explanation is proposed.

4. Clauses 6, 7 and 8.—The Board has the power of general superintendence under section 18. But there are no clear provisions empowering it to control the actions of temple committees or modify them when the latter go wrong. Temple committees are composed of honorary members, and sometimes they may not devote sufficient attention, or may be swayed by factions. Temple committees may thus fail to take proper action, and experience has also shown that some of them have been erratic in their resolutions. To ensure the proper working of committees and their co-operation with the Board, and in order to co-ordinate their activities, the Board should be able to revise or cancel their resolutions and to give directions for taking action, which they fail to take. The amendments proposed to recast section 34, to modify section 35 and to insert a new section after the latter section are, therefore, quite necessary.

5. Clauses 9 and 10.—Doubts are sometimes raised whether specific endowments are also liable to pay the contribution leviable under section 69, though the intention is indicated by the second paragraph of section 70. It is deemed preferable to make the point quite clear. Further, the general trustees of temples and maths may be relieved of the liability to pay contributions in respect of specific endowments. The trustees of the latter must be made solely responsible therefor. Great delay and inconvenience are experienced in the matter of the levy of contributions owing to the absence of provisions for the speedy recovery of the same from recalcitrant trustees. The Revenue Department must be authorized to recover arrear contribution, on behalf of the Board and temple committees as if they were arrears of land revenue instead of applications having to be filed in district courts. This very provision will operate as a preventive and the actual number of cases of non-payment necessitating coercive action will be few and far between. For these reasons, certain amendments have been proposed to sections 69 and 70.

6. Clause 11.—Parties coming up before the Board are not able to get orders as to costs at the conclusion of the cases enquired into by it. It is but fair that provision should be inserted to govern cases where the Board feels that the ends of equity and of justice require the awarding of costs in connexion with its proceedings.

7. Clause 12.—The present section 78 does not provide for non-hereditary trustees appointed by the Board seeking the help of courts to recover possession of temple properties. The modification of the section as suggested will remove the desideratum felt in experience.

8. Clause 13.—Presidents of the Board and committees must have the power to authorize their officers to certify copies furnished under section 82 of the Act and an amendment is proposed for that purpose.

9. Clause 14.—Doubts have been raised as to whether disputes as to the private character of temples can be dealt with by the Board under section 84 as it is. The proposed amendment is intended to make the meaning and object of the legislature clear, such doubts having been based on the existence of the definition of 'temple' and 'math' as meaning a public temple and a public math.

*An Act to amend the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. This Act may be called "THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930."

2. In this Act, the words "the said Act" shall mean the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926.

3. Section 4 of the said Act shall be omitted.

4. In section 9 of the said Act, the following shall be substituted for clause (5):—

"(5) 'Excepted temple' means and includes a temple, the right of succession to the office of trustee or the offices of all the trustees (where there are more trustees than one) whereof has been hereditary, or the succession to the trusteeship whereof has been specially provided for by the founder."

5. At the end of section 18 of the said Act, the following shall be added as an explanation:—

"Explanation.—The general powers of superintendence of the Board shall include the power to pass such interim orders as it deems necessary in the interests of the proper maintenance of a math or temple or the administration of a religious endowment."

6. The following shall be substituted for section 34 of the said Act:—

(3) (a) The Board shall have the power of staying, for reasons to be recorded by it, the execution of any of the resolutions of the committee and remitting the same to the committee for reconsideration.

(b) If the committee upon such reconsideration confirm the said resolutions, the Board may, whenever it deems such step necessary in the interests of the temple affected or the proper management of the affairs of the committee, modify or cancel the said resolutions."

7. In section 35 of the said Act, for the word and figure "section 18" the words and figures "sections 18, 34 and 35-A" shall be substituted.

8. The following new section shall be inserted after section 35 of the said Act:—

"35-A. Where the Board is satisfied that any committee has failed to perform the duties entrusted to it under this Act, the Board may, after giving reasonable notice to the committee and considering the representations it may make, undertake and perform all or any of such duties so left unperformed, the expenses if any involved therein being met from the funds of the committee concerned."

9. The following new section shall be inserted after section 74 of the said Act:—

THE MADRAS SUPPRESSION OF IMMORAL TRAFFIC ACT, 1930.

ACT NO. V OF 1930

PREFATORY NOTE:—"The existing provisions of Law dealing with prostitution are to be found in sections 52 and 71(xx) of the Madras City Police Act. In effect they enable the police to deal with brothels and with soliciting in public in the Madras city to a very limited extent by punishing the offenders. This enactment was passed nearly forty years ago. The rapid growth of urban population in recent times, with its inevitable result of permanent congregation of large numbers of unmarried men in towns has introduced a new situation which requires to be differently dealt with. An outstanding feature of that situation has been an increase in prostitution. While modern conceptions of the sanctity and worth of human life revolt against the corruption of youthful and innocent minds and the degradation involved in bringing up young girls to a life of prostitution, the vice, strangely enough, instead of being confined to individual instances of professional or accidental prostitution is tending to become commercialized. It is difficult to say with exactness how many brothels there are in a city like Madras. But there are brothels, that they are growing in numbers, that they are being replenished by fresh recruits and that they are becoming a nuisance to the neighbourhood are facts which are thrusting themselves more and more on the public attention. Brothels are becoming paying business proportionable to maintaining a regular staff of importers, procurers, managers and landlords.

2. An attempt is made in this Act to deal with commercialized vice. Power is taken for the suppression of brothels, for the rescue, protection and custody of young girls, and for punishing the men and women who participate in this vice for gain. Power is given to the police officers to enter premises and effect arrests in certain contingencies. The Local Government is empowered to frame rules for carrying out the provisions of this Act in detail.

3. A word has to be added about the scope of the Act. It is felt that it would be advisable to confine its operation at present to the city of Madras, and authorize the Government to extend it to mofussil towns on the application of local bodies concerned.

[28th March, 1930.]

An Act for the Suppression of Brothels and Immoral Traffic.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to make better provision for the suppression of brothels and of traffic in women and girls and for other purposes of a like nature in the Madras Presidency; And whereas the previous sanction of the Governor-General, required by sub-section (3) of section 80-A of the Government of India Act, has been obtained; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. (a) This Act may be called "THE MADRAS SUPPRESSION OF IMMORAL TRAFFIC ACT, 1930."

Commence-
ment.

(b) It shall come into force on such date as the Local Government may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, direct.

Extent.

2. This Act shall apply to the whole of the Presidency of Madras.

Repeal.

3. Clause (XX) of section 71 of the Madras City Police Act, 1888, is hereby repealed.

Definitions.

4. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) "Brothel" means any house, room, or place which the occupier or person in charge thereof habitually allows to be used by any other person for the purpose of prostitution.

(b) "Commissioner of Police" means the Commissioner of Police for the City of Madras as appointed under section 5 of the Madras City Police Act of 1888.

(c) "Magistrate" means a salaried Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, inclusive of the Commissioner of Police.

(d) "Prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under section 16.

(e) "Prostitution" means promiscuous sexual intercourse for hire.

(f) "Superintendent of Police" means a District Superintendent of Police appointed under the Madras District Police Act, 1859, or any person appointed by the Local Government to perform the duties of the Superintendent of Police for the purposes of this Act.

Punishment for keeping a brothel or allowing premises to be used as a brothel.

5. (1) Any person who keeps or manages or acts or assists in the management of a brothel shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both.

(2) Any person who,

(a) being the tenant, lessee, occupier, or person in charge of any premises, knowingly permits such premises or any part thereof to be used as a brothel; or

(b) being the lessor or landlord of any premises, or the agent of such lessor or landlord, lets the same, or any part thereof, to any person convicted under sub-section (1) or clause (a) of this sub-section with the knowledge that such premises or some part thereof are or is to be used as a brothel, or is wilfully a party to the use of such premises, or any part thereof, as a brothel ; shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees or with both.

"(3) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, the owner or lessor of any house, room or place, in respect of which the lessee, tenant, or occupier thereof has been convicted under clause (a) of sub-section (2) shall be entitled forthwith to determine such lease, tenancy or occupation."

6. (i) Where a Magistrate has reason to believe from a report made to him by a police officer, or otherwise, that a girl apparently under the age of 18 years is living, or is carrying on, or is being made to carry on the business of prostitution in a brothel, disorderly house, or place of assignation, he may issue an order to a police officer not below the rank of an Inspector specially authorized in writing in this behalf by the Commissioner of Police, or by the Superintendent of Police, to enter into such brothel, disorderly house or place of assignation and to remove therefrom such girl ; and thereupon such police officer shall have the power to enter into such brothel, disorderly house or place of assignation, and shall be entitled to remove such girl forthwith from such brothel, disorderly house or place of assignation.

Removal and disposal of minor girls from brothels, etc.

(ii) A girl who has been so removed shall be brought before a Juvenile Court constituted under section 36 of the Madras Children Act, 1920, and the Court shall cause an inquiry to be made in the manner provided in sub-section (3) of section 29 of that Act, and, if satisfied that the girl is under 18 years of age and that she should be dealt with as therein provided, may make an order that such girl be placed until she attains the age of 21 years or for any shorter period in a rescue home or in such other custody as the Court for reasons to be stated in writing shall consider suitable, provided that such custody shall not be that of a person or body of a different religious persuasion from that of the girl.

(iii) For the determination of the question whether a girl produced before a court under the provisions of this section is under 18 years of age, the provisions of section 37 of the Madras Children Act, 1920, shall be applied.

7. When a girl has been removed from a brothel or disorderly house or place of assignation under the provisions of sub-section (i) of section 6, the police officer carrying out the removal shall, until such girl can be brought before the court, cause her to be detained in a rescue home or in such other suitable custody (other than a police station or jail) as may be prescribed in this behalf by the Local Government, provided however that such custody shall not be that of a person or body of a different religious persuasion from that of the girl.

Intermediate custody of girl removed from brothel, etc.

8. When an order that a girl be placed in suitable custody has been passed under sub-section (ii) of section 6, the provisions of the Madras Children Act, 1920, shall, subject to such notifications as the Government may prescribe by rules made under section 16 and notwithstanding her age, thereafter apply to the case of such girl during the period of the said order as if she were a child or young person dealt with under section 29 of the Madras Children Act, 1920.

Subsequent treatment of girl committed to suitable custody under section 6 (ii)

Importing woman or girl for prostitution.

9. Any person who takes or attempts to take or causes to be taken from one place to another any woman or girl with a view to her carrying on or being brought up to carry on the business of prostitution or causes or induces any woman or girl to carry on the business of prostitution shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both.

Detention for prostitution in brothel or with intent.

10. (i) Any person who detains any woman or girl against her will

(a) in any house, room or place in which the business of prostitution is carried on, or

(b) in or upon any premises with intent that she may have sexual intercourse with any man other than her lawful husband, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both.

(ii) A person shall be presumed to detain a woman or girl who is in any house, room or place in which the business of prostitution is carried on, or in or upon any premises for the purpose of sexual intercourse with a man other than her lawful husband, if such person, with intent to compel or induce her to remain there,

(a) withholds from her any jewellery, wearing apparel or other property belonging to her or

(b) threatens her with legal proceedings if she takes away with her any jewellery or wearing apparel lent or supplied to her by or by the direction of such person.

(iii) Notwithstanding any law to the contrary, such a woman or girl shall not be liable to be proceeded against civilly or criminally for taking away or being found in possession of any jewel, wearing apparel, money or other property alleged to have been lent or supplied to, or to have been pledged by such woman or girl by or to the person by whom she has been detained.

Procuration.

11. Any person who induces a woman or girl to go from any place with intent that she may, for the purposes of prostitution, become the inmate of or frequent a brothel, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both.

Soliciting for purposes of prostitution.

12. Whoever,

(1) in any street or public place, solicits any person for the purpose of prostitution, in such manner as to cause obstruction, annoyance or danger to the residents or passengers, or to offend against public decency, or

(2) frequents such street or public place, for the purpose of prostitution or of solicitation, so as to constitute a nuisance, or to offend against public decency, shall be punished, with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Arrest
without warrant.

13. Any Police officer (not below the rank of Inspector) on complaint, and any Police officer authorized in this behalf by the Commissioner of Police or the Superintendent of Police by special order, may arrest without a warrant any person committing in his view any offences punishable under sections 9, 10, 11 and 12 if the name and address of such person be unknown to such Police officer and cannot be ascertained by him then and there, or if he has reason to suspect that a false name and address has been given.

14. THE MADRAS STATE AID TO INDUSTRIES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT NO. VI OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following extract from the Statement of Objects and Reasons explain the reason for the passing of this Act:—"Under section 9 of the State Aid to Industries Act, 1922, no loan can be granted of an amount exceeding 50 per cent. of the net value of the assets of the industrial business or enterprise after deducting the existing encumbrances. There is reason to believe that this limitation reduces the usefulness of the Act and it has been suggested that this restriction might be removed. The main objection in fixing the proportion of the amount of the loan admissible under the Act to a percentage of the net value of the assets of the industrial business is to discourage applications from persons who have shown no proof of serious effort on their part by contributing some capital of their own to the enterprise. But past experience has shown that the proportion of 50 per cent. now fixed is unnecessarily high and has stood in the way of a more extended use being made by intending promoters of industrial enterprises of the facilities provided by the Act. At the same time it is not considered advisable that the present restriction should be removed in entirety and the applicant encouraged to rely for all the money required for a new enterprise on Government help. It is always a satisfactory course for any one who wishes to start a business or industry to find some capital of his own before he approaches Government with a request for State help to supplement his resources. It is proposed to amend the provisions of section 9 with a view to making it possible for aid being granted to applicants of an amount of loan equal to the net value of the assets of the industrial business or enterprise."

[17th April, 1930.]

An Act further to amend the Madras State Aid to Industries Act, 1922, for a certain purpose.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Madras State Aid to Industries Act, 1922, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE MADRAS STATE AID TO INDUSTRIES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Amendment of section 9, Madras Act V of 1923.

2. In section 9 of the Madras State Aid to Industries Act, 1922, the following words shall be added at the end, namely: "Provided, however, that a loan of an amount not exceeding Rs. 40,000 may be granted even if it exceeds 50 per cent. of the value of the assets as above ascertained."

MADRAS VILLAGE-OFFICES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT NO. VII OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE:—The following extract from the Statement of Objects and Reasons explain the necessity for the passing of this Act:—"Sub-section (5) of section 10 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act, 1895, and section 13 of the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act, 1894, have been interpreted by the Revenue officers, as precluding the registration of a second minor as heir to a minor registered as heir to a previous holder of a village office if that registered minor vacates the office by death or forfeiture of the right to appointment by remaining disqualified for three years after attaining majority. This is perhaps based on the assumption that the provision in sub-section (5) that the vacancy shall be filled up as provided in sub-sections (2) and (3) removes the case from the operation of sub-section (5) and that the vacancy to be filled up is not that caused by the death or disqualification of the registered heir but the original vacancy which led to the minor's registration as heir. In this view even adult heirs are excluded if they were not in existence at the time of occurrence of the original vacancy.

Section 6 of the Act which relates to appointments made at the time of the revision of village establishments makes no express provision for the registration of minors.

Owing to the doubt raised as to the wording of sub-section (5) of section 10 and the defect in section 6, the interests of minor heirs of village offices have been seriously prejudiced and offices are passing from the families of the hereditary holders to those of strangers, much to the detriment of the harmonious working of village establishments. It is therefore proposed to amend the concerned provisions in Act III of 1895 and the corresponding provisions in Act II of 1894."

[10th May, 1930.]

An Act to amend the Madras Proprietary Estates' Village-service Act, 1894, and the Madras Hereditary Village-Offices Act, 1895.

Preamble.

WHEREAS doubts have been entertained as to the intention and meaning of some of the provisions of the Madras Proprietary Estates' Village-service Act, 1894, and the Madras Hereditary Village-Offices Act, 1895; And whereas it is expedient to remove those doubts; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE MADRAS VILLAGE-OFFICES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

2. In the Madras Proprietary Estates' Village-service Act, 1894—

(i) for the last sentence of section 13, the following sentences shall be substituted, namely :—

Amendment of Madras
Act II of 1894.

“If the person registered as heir under this section remains disqualified under sub-section (1) of section 10 for three years after attaining majority, he shall be deemed to have forfeited his right to the office. On such forfeiture or on his death, the vacancy shall be filled up in accordance with the provisions of this Act, as if he was the last holder of the office”; and

(ii) in section 15, after sub-section (3), the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely :—

“(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), no person shall be deemed to be ineligible for selection under sub-section (1) or retention under sub-section (2), by reason only of his being a minor. If a minor is selected under sub-section (1) or retained under sub-section (2), he shall be registered as the holder of the office and thereafter the procedure laid down in section 13 shall be adopted.”

3. In the Madras Hereditary Village-Offices Act, 1895—

(i) after sub-section (2) of section 6, the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely :—

Amendment of Madras
1895.

“(3) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), no person shall be deemed to be ineligible for selection under sub-section (1) or retention under sub-section (2) by reason only of his being a minor. If a minor is selected under sub-section (1) or retained under sub-section (2), he shall be registered as the holder of the office and thereafter the procedure laid down in sub-section (5) of section 10 shall be adopted”;

(ii) for the last sentence of sub-section (5) of section 10, the following sentences shall be substituted, namely :—

“If the person registered as heir under this sub-section remains disqualified under sub-section (1) for three years after attaining majority, he shall be deemed to have forfeited his right to the office. On such forfeiture or on his death the vacancy shall be filled up in accordance with the provisions of this section as if he was the last holder of the office”; and

(iii) for the last sentence of sub-section (4) of section 11, the following sentences shall be substituted, namely :—

“If the person registered as heir under this sub-section, on attaining majority, proves to be disqualified under clause (c) of sub-section (1), he shall be deemed to have forfeited his right to the office. On such forfeiture or on his death the vacancy shall be filled up in accordance with the provisions of this section as if he was the last holder of the office.”

THE ANDHRA UNIVERSITY (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

ACT NO. VIII OF 1930.

PREFATORY NOTE :—The following extracts from the Statement of Objects and Reasons explain the necessity for the passing of this Amending Act :—“It is considered necessary to strengthen the financial administration of the Andhra University by the constitution of a Statutory Finance Committee consisting of the Vice-Chancellor, Secretary to the Government of Madras in charge of Finance, one member appointed by the Syndicate and one member nominated by the Chancellor from among his nominees to the Syndicate. Power is reserved to the Finance Committee to scrutinize the financial estimates, accounts and items of expenditure of the University. The views of the Finance Committee will be taken into consideration before final decisions are taken by the authorities concerned. The Syndicate is also enlarged by the inclusion of the Secretary to the Government in charge of Finance as an ex-officio member and by the increase in the number of members to be nominated by the Chancellor from two to three.

It is also proposed to amend the Andhra University Act, 1925, so as to provide for payment to the University from provincial funds of (1) a non-recurring grant of twenty-seven lakhs to be credited to the Permanent General Capital Fund or the Foundation Fund of the University, (2) an annual block grant of not less than one and a half lakhs of rupees for the general expenditure of the University, and (3) a non-recurring grant of not less than seven and a half lakhs of rupees for buildings and equipment of the University payable on such conditions as may be agreed upon between them and the University.

As a result of the passing of the Andhra University (Amendment) Act, 1929 (Madras Act VI of 1929), the Ceded districts and Chittoor have ceased to form part of the University area but the members of municipal councils, taluk boards and district boards of these districts continue to have the right to send in their representatives on the Senate. It is considered desirable that (a) the non-official members of the Legislative Council who are residents of these districts, (b) headmasters of the secondary schools in these districts, and (c) landholders of these districts should be allowed to have representation on the Senate by enlarging the scope of the respective electorates under clauses (3), (4) and (6) of class III of section 15 of the Act.

The Bill gives effect to the proposals referred to above."

[10th May, 1930.]

An Act further to amend the Andhra University Act, 1925.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Andhra University Act, 1925, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE ANDHRA UNIVERSITY (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1930.

Amendment of section 15, Madras Act II of 1926.

2. In section 15 of the Andhra University Act, 1925 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), under the head "Class III—Other Members"—

(i) in clause (3), for the words "of the University area" the words "or any of the districts of Ganjam, Vizagapatam, West Godavari, East Godavari, Kistna, Guntur, Nellore, Bellary, Anantapur, Cuddapah, Kurnool and Chittoor" shall be substituted;

(ii) in clause (4), for the words "in the University area" the words "in the districts of Ganjam, Vizagapatam, West Godavari, East Godavari, Kistna, Guntur, Nellore, Bellary, Anantapur, Cuddapah, Kurnool and Chittoor" shall be substituted;

(iii) in sub clause (a) of clause (5), the words "other than the districts of Bellary, Anantapur, Cuddapah, Kurnool and Chittoor." shall be omitted; and

(iv) in clause (6), for the words "of the University area" the words "of any of the districts of Ganjam, Vizagapatam, West Godavari, East Godavari, Kistna, Guntur, Nellore, Bellary, Anantapur, Cuddapah, Kurnool and Chittoor" shall be substituted.

3. In section 18 of the said Act—

(1) for the head “Class I—Ex-officio Member

“The Director of Public Instruction” the head “Class I—Ex-officio Members

(1) the Director of Public Instruction

(2) the Financial Secretary to the Local Government”; and

(2) in clause (3) of “Class II—Other Members” for the words “two persons” the words “three persons” shall be substituted.

4. After section 19 of the said Act, the following sections shall be inserted, namely:—

“19-A. There shall be constituted a Finance Committee which shall consist of the following persons, namely:—

(1) the Vice-Chancellor;

(2) the Financial Secretary to the Local Government;

(3) One member appointed by the Syndicate from among its members, provided that no one who is nominated to the Syndicate by the Chancellor shall be eligible for appointment under this clause; and

(4) one member nominated by the Chancellor from among the three persons nominated by him to the Syndicate.

19-B. The financial estimates of the University, its accounts and all proposals involving expenditure for which no provision has been made in the budget or involving expenditure in excess of the amount provided in the budget of the year shall be referred to the Finance Committee for scrutiny and opinion before they are taken up for final consideration by the Syndicate:

Provided that the Vice-Chancellor may, in cases of emergency, for reasons to be recorded in writing, incur any expenditure for which no provision has been made in the budget or which is in excess of the amount provided in the budget without such previous reference to the Finance Committee.”

5. In section 37 of the said Act—

(i) the word “and” occurring at the end of clause (1) shall be omitted; and

(ii) at the end of clause (2) the following shall be inserted, namely:— “and

(3) an annual block grant of not less than one and a half lakhs of rupees made by the Local Government for the general expenditure of the University each year.”

6. After section 37 of the said Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

“37-A. (1) The University shall have a fund called the Foundation Fund.

Amendment of section 37, Madras Act II of 1926.

Insertion of new sections 37-A, 37-B and 37-C in Madras Act II of 1926.

Foundation Fund.

(2) The Foundation Fund shall consist of :

(a) the sum of twenty-seven lakhs of rupees which shall be given to it by the Local Government ;

(b) any contributions to this fund which may be made by the Local Government, the Government of India, any local or other public body, or others ;

(c) any contributions to this fund which may be made by the University ; and

(d) the sum of three lakhs and eighty-five thousand rupees in securities and cash which stands to the credit of the Foundation Fund of the University.

(3) The Foundation Fund shall be invested, and be kept invested, in securities, issued or guaranteed by the Government of India, or by Local Governments in British India, and such investments shall not be varied without the consent of the Chancellor.

(4) The corpus of the Foundation Fund shall be kept intact but the interest thereon may be utilized for the purposes of the University.

Constitution of other funds, etc.

37-B. The University shall have such other funds and maintain such accounts as the senate may determine.

Contribution by Government to the University for buildings and equipment.

37-C. The Local Government shall, subject to such conditions as may be agreed upon between them and the University, give for the buildings and equipment of the University a sum of seven and a half lakhs of rupees to which they may add such further sums as they may deem fit from time to time."

THE SEVVALPATTI IMPARTIBLE ESTATE ACT, 1930.

" 87. (1) When any building whether ordinarily let or occupied by the owner himself has been vacant and unlet for thirty or more consecutive days in any half-year, the chairman shall remit so much not exceeding one-half of such portion of the tax as relates to the building only as is proportionate to the number of days during which the building was vacant and unlet in the half-year.

Vacancy
remission.

(2) Every demand for remission under sub-section (1) shall be made during the half-year in respect of which the remission is sought or in the following half-year and not afterwards.

(3) (a) No demand for such remission shall be entertained unless the owner of the building or his agent has previously thereto given notice to the chairman of the building being vacant and unlet and the period in respect of which the remission is made shall be calculated from the date of delivery of such notice.

(b) Every such notice shall expire with the half-year during which it is so delivered and shall have no effect thereafter."

68. For sections 89 and 90 of the said Act, the following sections shall be substituted, namely :—

Substitution of new section for sections 89
and 90,
Madras Act
V of 1920.

" 89. (1) (a) If any building in a municipality is constructed or reconstructed, the owner shall give notice thereof to the chairman within fifteen days from the date of completion or occupation of the building whichever is earlier.

Owner's obligation to give notice of construction, reconstruction or demolition of building.

(b) If such date falls within the last two months of a half-year, the owner shall, subject to notice being given under clause (a), be entitled to a remission of the whole of the tax or enhanced tax, as the case may be, payable in respect of the building only for that half-year.

(c) If such date falls within the first four months of a half-year, the owner shall, subject to notice being given under clause (a), be entitled to a remission of so much not exceeding a half of the tax or enhanced tax, as the case may be, payable in respect of the building only, for that half-year, as is proportionate to the number of days in that half-year preceding such date.

(2) (a) If any building in a municipality is demolished or destroyed, the owner shall, until notice thereof is given to the chairman, be liable for the payment of the property-tax which would have been leviable had the building not been demolished or destroyed.

(b) If such notice is given within the first two months of a half-year, the owner shall be entitled to a remission of the whole of the tax payable in respect of the building only, for that half-year.

(c) If such notice is given within the last four months of a half-year, the owner shall be entitled to a remission of so much not exceeding a half of the tax payable in respect of the building only, for that half-year, as is proportionate to the number of days in that half-year preceding the demolition or destruction as the case may be.

Remission of tax in areas included or excluded in the middle of a half-year.

90. (1) If any area is included within a municipality the owner of every building or land in such area shall—

(a) if the date of such inclusion falls within the last two months of a half-year, not be liable to pay any property tax in respect thereof for that half-year; and

(b) if such date falls within the first four months of a half-year, be entitled to a remission of so much not exceeding a half of the property tax payable in respect thereof for that half-year, as is proportionate to the number of days in that half-year preceding such date.

(2) If any area is excluded from a municipality the owner of every building or land in such area shall be entitled—

(a) if the date of such exclusion falls within the first two months of a half-year, to a remission of the whole of the property tax payable in respect thereof for that half-year; and

(b) if such date falls within the last four months of a half-year, to a remission of so much not exceeding a half of the property-tax payable in respect thereof for that half-year, as is proportionate to the number of days in that half-year preceding such date.

(3) No remission shall be granted under sub-section (2) in respect of any building or land unless an application for such remission is made to the chairman within three months from the date of the exclusion of the area in which the building or land is situated."

Amendment of section 91, Madras Act V of 1920.

69. In sub-section (1) of section 91 of the said Act—

For second-class tickets.	0	4	0	0	2	0
For intermediate class tickets.	0	3	0	0	1	6
For third-class tickets.	0	2	0	0	1	0

Provided that the rates leviable on season tickets, if any, shall be determined by the municipal council in consultation with the railway administrations concerned but shall not for a period of one month or any less period exceed six times the rates given in column (2) of the above table.

(5) The Local Government may make rules not inconsistent with this Act for regulating—

- (i) the collection of the tax,
- (ii) the payment thereof to the council concerned,
- (iii) the deduction of any expenses incurred by railway administrations in the collection thereof, and
- (iv) the decision of disputes—

(a) between municipal councils and between municipal councils and other local authorities, and

(b) with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, between municipal councils and railway administrations, in matters connected with the levy, collection or apportionment of the tax."

89. To section 117 of the said Act, the following sentence shall be added, namely :—

Substitution of new section for section 368, Madras Act V of 1920.

"368. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, when a municipality is constituted for the first time, the Local Government may appoint a special officer to exercise the powers, discharge the duties and perform the functions of the municipal council and its chairman.

Special provision in the case of newly constituted and reconstituted municipal councils.

(2) The special officer shall cause arrangements for election to be made so that the newly elected councillors may come into office on a day within six months from the date of publication of the notification under sub-section (3) of section 4 declaring the area to be a municipality.

(3) The special officer shall exercise the powers, discharge the duties and perform the functions of the municipal council until the council has been constituted, and of the chairman until a chairman has been elected by the council.

(4) As soon as may be after the constitution of the council, a meeting of the council shall be held on a day and at a time fixed by the special officer for the election of its chairman. If at such meeting no chairman is elected, a fresh election shall be held on such day and at such time as may be fixed by the special officer.

(5) The term of office of the councillors or of the councillors elected in their places at casual vacancies shall expire at the end of three years if the day referred to in sub-section (2) is the first day of November and in other cases at the end of three years from the first day of November immediately preceding such day.

(6) The provisions of sub-sections (1) to (5) shall apply, save as otherwise provided in this Act and so far as may be, to all cases of reconstitution of municipal councils.

(7) Where the number of seats on a municipal council is increased by or in consequence of a notification under sub-section (1) of section 7, the councillors elected for the additional seats or the councillors elected in their places at casual vacancies shall hold office until the date on which the councillors elected to the original seats at the ordinary elections immediately preceding will vacate office."

147. After section 368 of the said Act, the following section shall be added, namely :—

Insertion of Adjudication of disputes between local authorities.

"369. (1) When a dispute exists between a council and one or more than one, other local authority in regard to any matters arising under the provisions of this or any other Act and the Local Government are of opinion that the local authorities concerned are unable to settle it amicably among themselves, the Local Government may take cognizance of the dispute, and

(a) decide it themselves, or

(b) refer it for inquiry and report to an arbitrator or a board of arbitrators, or to a joint committee constituted under section 26 for the purpose.

(2) The report referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1) shall be submitted to the Local Government who shall decide the dispute in such manner as they deem fit.

(3) The decision of the Local Government under clause (a) of sub-section (1) or under sub-section (2) as the case may be, shall be final and binding on each of the disputing local authorities."

Amendment
of Schedule
III, Madras Act V of 1920.

148. In Schedule III to the said Act—

(i) to rule 1, the following proviso and Explanation shall be added, namely :—

"Provided that no meeting shall be held on a public holiday.

Explanation.—The expression 'public holiday' includes Sundays and any other day declared by the Local Government by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, to be a public holiday ;"

(ii) for rules 2 and 3, the following rules shall be substituted, namely :—

"2. (1) No meeting shall be held unless notice of the day and time when the meeting is to be held and of the business to be transacted thereat has been given at least three clear days before the day of the meeting.

(2) In cases of urgency, the chairman may convene a meeting on giving shorter notice than that specified in sub-rule (1).

3. (1) The chairman shall, on the requisition in writing of not less than one-third of the members then on the council, convene a meeting of the council, provided that the requisition specifies the day (not being a public holiday as defined in the Explanation to rule 1) when and the purpose for which the meeting is to be held. The requisition shall be delivered at the municipal office during office hours to the chairman, secretary, manager or any other person who may then be in charge of the office at least ten clear days before the day of the meeting.

(2) If the chairman fails within forty-eight hours from the delivery of such requisition to call a meeting on the day specified therein or within three days thereafter, the meeting may be called by the members who signed the requisition on giving the notice provided for in sub-rule (1) of rule 2 to the other members of the council";

(iii) in rule 5, after the words 'shall have', the words 'and exercise' shall be inserted;

(iv) in rule 8, the words 'the votes of' shall be omitted;

(v) in rule 9, for the words 'chairman or the member who presided at such meeting', the words 'presiding member' shall be substituted; and

(vi) rule 13 shall be omitted.

149. For rules 2 to 4 of Schedule IV to the said Act (hereinafter referred to as the said Schedule IV), and the heading occurring before the said rules, the following heading and rules shall be substituted, namely:—

"Provisions common to taxes in general."

2. (1) The chairman shall prepare and keep assessment books in such form as may be prescribed showing the persons and property liable to taxation under this Act.

(2) The assessment books and where detailed particulars relating to any assessment are kept in separate records, the portion thereof containing such particulars shall be open at all reasonable times and without charge to inspection by any person who pays any tax to the municipality or his authorized agent and such person or agent shall be entitled to take extracts free of charge, from the said books and records.

(3) The account books of the council shall be open without charge to inspection by any person who pays any tax to the municipality or his authorized agent on a day or days in each month to be fixed by the council.

3. The chairman shall, save as otherwise provided in this Act, determine the tax to which each property or person is liable:

Provided that in the case of taxes payable by the chairman the original assessment shall be made by the revenue divisional officer or if the revenue divisional officer is also the chairman, by the council.

4. (1) If at any time it appears to the council that any person or property has been inadequately assessed or inadvertently or improperly omitted from the assessment books relating to any tax, or that there is any clerical or arithmetical error in the said books, it may direct the chairman to amend the said books in such manner as it deems just or necessary:

Provided that no such direction shall be given where it involves an increase in the assessment, unless the person concerned shall have been afforded a reasonable opportunity to show cause to the council why the assessment books should not be amended as proposed.

(2) Such amendment shall be deemed to have taken effect on the earliest date, either in the current half-year or in the two half-years immediately preceding it, on which the circumstances justifying the amendment existed.

150. For rules 6 to 12 of the said Schedule IV, the following rules shall be substituted, namely:—

6. The value of any land or building for purposes of the property tax shall be determined by the chairman:

Provided that the value of any land or building the tax for which is payable by the chairman shall be determined by the revenue divisional officer or, if the revenue divisional officer is also the chairman, by the council.

7. The chairman shall enter the annual or capital value of all lands and buildings determined by him and the tax payable thereon in assessment books to be kept for the purpose at the municipal office. Such books shall record the following particulars, in so far as they can be ascertained, with regard to each assessable item:—

- (a) the name of the owner;
- (b) the name of the occupier;
- (c) the designation, if any, of the item;
- (d) the name of the ward and street, if any, in which it is situated, and any survey or other number which it bears;
- (e) the annual or capital value, as the case may be; and
- (f) the amount of the tax payable.

8. (1) The assessment books shall be completely revised by the chairman once in every five years.

(2) The chairman may amend the assessment books at any time between one general revision and another by inserting therein or removing therefrom any property or by altering the valuation of any property or the amount of tax. Such amendment shall be deemed to have taken effect on the first day of the half-year in which it is made:

Provided that when the amendment is made in any half-year after the demand notice for that half-year has been issued, it shall have effect only from the succeeding half-year.

9. When assessment books have been prepared for the first time and whenever a general revision of such books has been completed, the chairman shall give public notice stating that revision petitions will be considered if they reach the municipal office within a period of sixty days from the date of such notice in the case of the Government, a railway administration or a company and of thirty days from the said date in other cases. The notice shall be affixed to the notice-board of the municipal office and on the same day be published in the municipality by beat of drum.

10. In every case in which, between one general revision and another, the chairman assesses any property for the first time or increases the assessment on any property otherwise than in consequence of a general enhancement of the rate at which the property tax is leviable, the chairman shall intimate by a special notice to the owner or occupier of such property that a petition for revising the assessment will be considered if it reaches the municipal office within sixty days from the date of service of such notice in the case of the Government, a railway administration or a company and within thirty days from the said date in other cases.

11. Any person may, at any time, not being less than thirty days before the end of a half-year, move the chairman by revision petition to reduce the tax to which he is liable for the forthcoming half-year on the ground that the annual or capital value of the property in respect of which the tax is imposed has decreased since the assessment of the property was last made or revised.

12. No petition under rule 9, 10, or 11 shall be disposed of unless the petitioner has been given a reasonable opportunity to appear either in person or by authorized agent and to represent his case."

151. In rule 13 of the said Schedule IV, after the words 'within fifteen days' in the first place where they occur, the words 'after the date of receipt of such intimation' shall be inserted.

Amendment of rule 13 of Schedule IV, Madras Act V of 1920.

152. For rules 14 to 19 of the said Schedule IV and the headings relating to rules 16 to 19 of the said rules, the following shall be substituted, namely:—

Substitution of new rules for rules 14 to 19 of Schedule IV, Madras Act V of 1920.

" 14. (1) On the establishment of a municipality assessments shall have effect from the date specified in the notification under section 80.

(2) A general revision shall be deemed to have taken effect on the first day of the half-year following that in which the notice under rule 9 is published.

(3) Any corrections in the assessment books made by the chairman under rule 13 or 27 shall be deemed to have effect on the first day of the half-year to which the assessment which was sought to be revised or which was appealed against relates.

Explanation.—The levy of a new class of property tax or an enhancement in the rate at which any class of property tax is leviable is no amendment or revision within the meaning of this rule, and shall have effect from the date fixed for the levy or enhancement.

15. The first payment of tax shall, save as provided in rule 13, be made within thirty days of the date or day specified in rule 14.

Assessment of the profession tax.

16. (1) The classes into which companies and persons shall, for the purposes of assessment to the profession tax, be divided, and the maximum half-yearly tax leviable on each class shall be as follows:—

Class.	Half-yearly income.		Maximum half-yearly tax.
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	A.
I More than	21,000		275	0
II "	18,000	but not more than ..	21,000	225 0
III "	12,000	"	18,000	150 0
IV "	9,000	"	12,000	85 0
V "	6,000	"	9,000	55 0
VI "	4,200	"	6,000	28 0
VII "	3,000	"	4,200	20 0
VIII "	1,800	"	3,000	10 0
IX "	1,200	"	1,800	6 0
X "	600	"	1,200	3 0
XI "	300	"	600	1 8
XII "	150	"	300	0 8

(2) The council shall determine the tax leviable on each class subject to the maximum specified in sub-rule (1):

Provided that the proportion which the tax on any class bears to the minimum income of that class shall in no case be smaller than the proportion which the tax on any lower class bears to the minimum income of such lower class.

(3) The council may exempt any one or more of the classes in sub-rule (1) from liability to profession tax, but no class shall be exempted from liability when any lower class is liable to tax.

17. A company or person shall be deemed to have transacted business and a person shall be deemed to have exercised a profession, art, or calling, or held an appointment within a municipality if such company or person has an office or place of employment within such municipality.

18. (1) Where a company or person transacts business in any half-year exclusively in the area of a single municipality, the income of such company or person from the transaction of such business shall, for the purpose of levying profession tax under this Act during the half-year, be deemed to be—

(a) where income-tax is assessed on such company or person under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the year comprising the half-year, one-half of the amount at which the profits and gains of such business are computed under section 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the purpose of assessing the income-tax; and

(b) where the amount of the said profits and gains is not ascertainable or where such company or person is not assessed to income-tax, such percentage as the Local Government may, subject to the approval of the Legislative Council, prescribe, of the turnover of the business transacted in the area of the municipality during the half-year or where this is also unascertainable, during the corresponding half-year of the previous year.

(2) Where a company or person transacts business partly in the area of a municipality and partly outside such area, the income of such company or person from the transaction of business in the area of the municipality shall, for the purpose of levying profession-tax under this Act, be deemed to be the percentage prescribed under clause (b) of sub-rule (1) of the turnover of the business transacted in such area during the half-year or the corresponding half-year of the previous year, as the case may be.

(3) For the purposes of clause (b) of sub-rule (1) and sub-rule (2), the turnover of business in any municipality means the aggregate money value of the goods produced, manufactured, purchased or sold or of any other business transacted in such municipality.

Explanation.—In determining the turnover of business under this sub-rule—

(a) where the delivery of any goods on account of any purchase made by any company or person and the delivery on account of the sale thereof by the same company or person are both effected in the Presidency of Madras, only the latter transaction shall be taken into account;

(b) where the delivery of any goods on account of any purchase made by any company or person is effected in any place outside the said Presidency and the delivery on account of the sale thereof by the same company or person is effected in any place in the said Presidency, the latter transaction shall be taken into account; and

(c) where the delivery of any goods on account of any purchase made by any company or person is effected in any place in the said Presidency and the delivery on account of the sale thereof by the same company or person is effected in any place outside the said Presidency, the former transaction shall be taken into account.

19. (1) If, in the opinion of the chairman, profession tax is due from any company or person for any half-year, he shall serve a notice on such company or person either in that half-year or in the succeeding half-year requiring the company or person to furnish within such period, not being less than thirty days as may be specified in the notice, a return in the prescribed form showing the income on the basis of which, according to such company or person, it or he is liable to be assessed to profession tax for the half-year in question. Thereupon it shall be open to such company or person to submit a return showing the income derived by it or him during the half-year for which profession tax is claimed or for the corresponding half-year of the previous year and produce any evidence on which the company or person may rely in support of the return made.

(2) If a return is made as required under sub-rule (1) and the chairman is satisfied that it is correct and complete, he shall levy the profession tax from such company or person on the basis of such return.

Explanation.—In cases not falling under clause (b) of sub-rule (1) or under sub-rule (2) of rule 18, if the company or person produces the notice of demand of income-tax served on it or him under section 29 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the year comprising the half-year in question, the chairman shall be bound to take one-half of the income mentioned in such notice of demand as the income derived from the sources on which profession tax is leviable under this Act, as the income on the said sources for the purposes of levying profession tax.

(3) If no return is made as required under sub-rule (1) or if the chairman is satisfied that any return so made is incorrect or incomplete, the chairman shall assign to the company or person the class in the scale appropriate to the half-yearly income of such company or person as estimated by him.

(4) The chairman may, when classifying any company or person under sub-rule (3), do so on general considerations with reference to the nature and reputed value of the business transacted, the size and rental of residential and business premises, the quantity and number of articles dealt with, the number of persons employed and the income-tax paid to Government.

(5) The chairman shall not be entitled to call for the accounts of any company or person."

153. In rule 20 of the said Schedule IV—

(i) for the heading 'Half-yearly instalment' of the second column of the items under sub-rule (1), the heading 'Maximum half-yearly tax' shall be substituted;

(ii) for sub-rule (2), the following sub-rule shall be substituted, namely:—

"(2) If, within the half-year, a person replaces any carriage or animal by another carriage or animal falling under the same class in the table given in sub-rule (1), the said person, in case the replacement was due to the destruction of the carriage or the death of the animal and if he had possession, custody or control of the carriage or animal so replaced at the time of its destruction or death, shall not be liable to more than one payment of tax in the same municipality and the amount of such payment shall be regulated by the aggregate number of days for which he has kept such carriages and animals during the half-year"; and

(iii) sub-rule (3) shall be omitted,

159. (1) In rule 28 of the said Schedule IV, for the words 'the adjudication of an appeal by the council', the words 'when such an appeal is made, the adjudication of the council thereon' shall be substituted.

(2) To the same rule, the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

"Provided that where any assessment or demand is not in accordance with the assessment books, nothing in this rule shall be deemed to prohibit a fresh assessment or demand of the tax being made in accordance therewith."

160. After rule 28 of the said Schedule IV, the following rule shall be inserted, namely:—

"28-A. (1) The powers of the council under rules 4, 23 and 24, shall, during any period in respect of which the Local Government may, by notification, so direct, be exercised by a special officer appointed by them. And thereupon the council shall cease to exercise the said powers during the said period and rules 4 and 23 to 28 shall have effect as if for the word 'council' wherever it occurs in those rules and for the word 'chairman' in clause (b) of rule 26, the words 'special officer appointed by the Local Government in this behalf' were substituted.

(2) A special officer appointed under sub-rule (1) shall have all such powers of the council and of the chairman as are necessary for the purpose of exercising his powers under the said sub-rule and he shall be entitled to the same protection as the council or chairman, as the case may be, is entitled.

(3) The special officer shall be paid out of the municipal fund such salary and allowances as the Local Government may, in consultation with the council, fix. If a Government servant is appointed special officer, the council shall also pay the Local Government such contribution towards the pension and leave allowances of such servant as may be payable under the regulations in force for the time being of the branch of Government service to which he belongs."

161. In rule 29 of the said Schedule IV—

(i) for sub-rule (1), the following sub-rule shall be substituted, namely:—

"(1) Where any tax not being a tax in respect of which a notice has to be served under section 95, 102 or 108 or in respect of which a direction has to be given under rule 13 is due from any person, the chairman shall serve upon such person a bill for the sum due before he proceeds to enforce the provisions of rule 30";

(ii) in sub-rule (2), for the words 'Such bill', the words and figures 'A notice under section 95, 102 or 108 and a bill under sub-rule (1)' shall be substituted; and

(4) Every notification issued under clause (a) or sub-clause (ii) of clause (b) of sub-section (2) or under clause (a) or sub-clause (ii) of clause (b) of sub-section (3) shall contain a statement of the reasons therefor and shall be laid on the table of the Legislative Council.

Villages.

(5) (1) The Local Government may, by notification published in the prescribed manner, declare any part of a revenue taluk to be a village for the purposes of this Act and specify the name of the village.

(2) The Local Government may, by notification published in the prescribed manner—

(a) exclude from a village any local area comprised therein, or

(b) include in a village any local area in the vicinity thereof and in the same revenue taluk, or

(c) cancel a notification issued under sub-section (1), or

(d) alter the name of the village as notified under sub-section

(1).

(3) Before issuing a notification under sub-section (2), the Local Government shall give the panchayat or panchayats which will be affected by the issue of such notification a reasonable opportunity for showing cause against the proposal and shall consider the explanations and objections, if any, of such panchayat or panchayats."

5. In section 6 of the said Act—

(i) in sub-section (1), for the words 'for each union, a union board' the words 'for each village, a panchayat' shall be substituted ;

(ii) for the proviso to sub-section (2) the following provisos shall be substituted namely :—

"Provided that where there is no taluk board in any part of a district, the district board shall exercise the powers, discharge the duties, perform the functions and be credited with the receipts and debited with the charges of the taluk board, and the president of the district board shall exercise the powers, discharge the duties and perform the functions of the president of the taluk board, in such part of the district :

Provided further that where there is no panchayat in any part of a taluk, the taluk board shall exercise the powers, discharge the duties, perform the functions and be credited with the receipts and debited with the charges of the panchayat, and the president of the taluk board shall exercise the powers, discharge the duties and perform the functions of the president of the panchayat, in such part of the taluk ;

(iii) in sub-section (3)—

(a) for the words 'by the name of the local area for which it shall have been established be a body corporate', the words 'be a body corporate by the name of the district or revenue taluk or the name of the taluk or village which is specified in the notification under section 4 or 5 as the case may be' shall be substituted ; and

(a) Muslims,

(b) Indian Christians,

(c) Adi-Dravidas, or

(d) Women and determine the number of such seats.

(3) In any panchayat, the Local Government may, in their discretion, by notification published in the prescribed manner, from time to time, reserve seats for Adi-Dravidas and determine the number of such seats.

(4) The total number of seats reserved in any local board under sub-section (1), (2) or (3) shall not exceed one-fourth of the strength fixed for the local board under section 10.

(5) No seat shall be reserved in any district board for any of the communities mentioned in clauses (a) to (e) of sub-section (1), or in any taluk board for any of the communities mentioned in clauses (a) to (c) of sub-section (2), if at the last census, such community constituted more than one-half of the total population of the district or taluk, as the case may be.

(6) In reserving seats in any local board for any community, the Local Government shall have due regard to its number and importance.

(7) Nothing contained in sub-sections (1) to (3) shall be deemed to prevent members of any community or women for whom seats have been reserved in any local board, from standing for election to the non-reserved seats in the local board.

8. For section 10 of the said Act, the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

“10. (1) The Local Government shall, by notification, declare the total number of members of every local board.

(2) Subject to the approval of the Local Government, any local board may, by resolution supported by not less than three-fourths of the members present at a meeting specially convened in that behalf, alter the total number of its members as notified under sub-section (1).

(3) The notification referred to in sub-section (1) and the resolution referred to in sub-section (2) shall be published in the prescribed manner.”

9. For section 11 of the said Act, the following sections shall be substituted, namely:—

“11. (1) Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, the term of office of the members of a local board shall be three years beginning and expiring at noon on the first day of November.

of members of local boards.

Provided that the Local Government may, for sufficient cause, direct or permit the holding of any ordinary election after the end of September.

(3) A member of a local board elected at an ordinary election held after the occurrence of a vacancy, shall enter upon office forthwith but shall hold office only so long as he would have been entitled to hold office, if he had been elected before the occurrence of the vacancy.

(4) A casual vacancy in the office of a member of a local board shall be filled at a casual election which shall be fixed by the prescribed authority to take place as soon as may be after the occurrence of the vacancy :

Provided that no casual election shall be held to fill a vacancy occurring within three months before the ordinary date of retirement and that such vacancy shall be filled at the next ordinary election.

(5) A member of a local board elected at a casual vacancy shall enter upon office forthwith, but shall hold office only so long as the member in whose place he is elected, would have been entitled to hold office if the vacancy had not occurred.

11-A. If at an ordinary or casual election to a local board held under section 11 no member is elected, a fresh election shall be held on such day as the prescribed authority may fix.

(2) If, at such fresh election, no member is elected, the local board may, in the manner prescribed, elect a qualified person to fill the vacancy.

(3) The term of office of a member of a local board elected under this section shall expire at the time at which it would have expired if he had been elected at the ordinary or casual election, as the case may be."

10. For section 12 of the said Act, the following sections shall be substituted, namely :—

12. Every local board shall elect one of its members to be its president, and another member to be its vice-president.

12-A. If at an election held under section 12, no president or vice-president is elected, a fresh election shall be held."

11. Sections 13 and 14 of the said Act shall be omitted.

22-A in Madras Act
XIV of 1920.

Exercise of president's functions during vacancy in office.

(b) When the office of president of a taluk board or panchayat is vacant and there is either a vacancy in the office of vice-president or the vice-president has been continuously absent from jurisdiction for more than fifteen days or is incapacitated, a member of the taluk board appointed by the president of the district board or a member of the panchayat appointed by the president of the taluk board, as the case may be, shall convene a meeting for the election of a president and until a new president or vice-president is elected and assumes office or the vice-president returns to jurisdiction or recovers from his incapacity, as the case may be, the member so appointed shall exercise the functions of the president of the taluk board or panchayat.

(3) The meeting for the election of a president referred to in sub-section (2) shall be convened only after giving a notice to the members of not less than fifteen clear days in the case of district and taluk boards and of not less than five clear days in the case of panchayats.

(4) The person appointed to exercise the functions of the president of a taluk board or panchayat under clause (b) of sub-section (2), shall, for the period during which he exercises such functions, be styled 'temporary president' of the taluk board or panchayat, as the case may be.

Explanation.—A new president or vice-president shall be deemed to have assumed office on his being declared elected as such."

19. For sections 23 and 24 of the said Act, the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

Substitution of new section for sections
23 and 24,
Madras
Act XIV of 1920.

" 23. (1) The president of a local board may, by an order in writing, delegate any of his functions to the vice president:

Provided that he shall not delegate any functions which the board expressly forbids him to delegate.

(2) If the president of a local board has been continuously absent from jurisdiction for more than fifteen days or is incapacitated, his functions except those of promoting, withholding promotion from, reducing, removing or dismissing any officer or servant of the board shall, during such absence or incapacity, devolve on the vice-president:

Provided that where the absence from jurisdiction of the president is within the Presidency of Madras and is on business connected with the board, the president's functions shall not, except to the extent, if any, to which functions have been delegated by him under sub-section (1), devolve on the vice-president.

(3) If the vice-president also has been continuously absent from jurisdiction for more than fifteen days or is incapacitated, or if the office of vice-president is vacant, the president may, by an order in writing, delegate any of his functions to any member of the board who shall be styled president-delegate during the period of delegation:

Provided that

(i) when an order of delegation made under this sub-section is in force, no further order of delegation of any functions shall be made in favour of any other than the member in whose favour the order in force was made;

Delegation and devolution of functions by president.

(ii) no delegation under this sub-section shall be made for any period exceeding in the aggregate ninety days in any year without the special sanction of the board ; and

(iii) every order made under this sub-section shall be communicated to the board at its next meeting and when made by the president of a taluk board or panchayat shall also be communicated forthwith to the president of the district board or of the taluk board, as the case may be.

(4) Subject to any restrictions that the local board may impose, the president of a local board may, by an order in writing, delegate any of his executive functions, to any member, officer or servant of the board or to any officer of Government and in the case of the president of a taluk board or panchayat subject also to the consent of the president of the district board, to any officer or servant of the district board."

Amendment

president or vice-president of local board.

"43. (1) The Local Government may, by notification, remove any president or vice-president of a local board who, in their opinion, wilfully omits or refuses to carry out or disobeys the provisions of this Act or any rules, by-laws, regulations or lawful orders issued thereunder or abuses the powers vested in him.

(2) The Local Government shall, when they propose to take action under subsection (1), give the president or vice-president concerned an opportunity for explanation and the notification issued under the said sub-section shall contain a statement of the reasons of the Local Government for the action taken.

Motion of no confidence in president or vice-president of local board.

"44. (1) A motion expressing want of confidence in the president or in the vice-president of a local board may be made by any member of the board, subject to the following restrictions, namely:—

(a) Leave of the board to make the motion shall be asked for before the business entered in the agenda for the day is taken up.

(b) The member asking for leave shall at the time of asking for leave hand to the person presiding a written notice of the motion which he proposes to make.

(2) The person presiding shall then read the motion to the board and request those members who are in favour of the leave being granted to rise in their places. If less than one-third of the sanctioned strength of the board rise accordingly, the person presiding shall inform the member that he has not the leave of the board. If not less than one-third of the sanctioned strength of the board rise, the person presiding shall intimate that leave is granted and that the motion will be taken on such day and time as he may appoint. The day appointed shall not—

(a) in the case of a district or taluk board, be less than ten clear days nor more than fifteen clear days, and

(b) in the case of a panchayat, be less than six clear days nor more than fifteen clear days, from the day on which leave is asked.

(3) No debate on any motion under this section shall be adjourned. Such debate, if not earlier concluded, shall automatically terminate on the expiry of three hours from the time appointed for its commencement. Upon the conclusion of the debate or upon the expiry of the said period of three hours, as the case may be, the motion shall be put to the vote of the board.

(4) (a) If the motion is carried with the support of not less than two-thirds of the sanctioned strength of the board, the president or vice-president, as the case may be, shall forthwith be deemed to have vacated his office.

(b) If the motion is carried, but not by such a majority as aforesaid, and if after an interval of not less than one month, another motion expressing want of confidence in the same president or vice-president, made under sub-section (1) is carried by the board, he shall forthwith be deemed to have vacated his office."

Amendment
of section 45,
Madras Act
XIV of 1920.

37. In section 45 of the said Act—

(i) for sub-section (1), the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

"(1) If, in the opinion of the Local Government, a local board is not competent to perform or persistently makes default in performing the duties imposed on it by law or exceeds or abuses its powers, they may, by notification published in the prescribed manner, direct that the board be dissolved and immediately reconstituted. The notification shall specify the time within which the board shall be reconstituted :

Provided that, for the purpose of completing the elections to a local board which has been dissolved, the Local Government may in their discretion, from time to time, extend the time fixed by them under this sub-section for its reconstitution.

(1-A) Before publishing a notification under sub-section (1), the Local Government shall communicate to the local board concerned and to the district board in the case of a taluk board and to the district and taluk boards in the case of a panchayat, the grounds on which they propose to do so, fix a reasonable period for the board or boards to show cause against the proposal and consider the explanations and objections, if any, of such board or boards” ;

(ii) in sub-section (2), for the words “ all members of the local board ” the words “ all the members of the local board including its president and vice-president ” for the word ‘ vacate ’ the words ‘ be deemed to have vacated ’ and for the words ‘ fresh appointment shall be made and elections held ’ the words ‘ fresh elections shall be held ’ shall be substituted ;

(iii) after sub-section (2), the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely :—

“(2-A) The term of office of the elected members of the reconstituted local board or of the members elected in their places at casual vacancies, shall expire at the end of three years, if it is reconstituted on the first day of November in any year and in other cases at the end of three years from the first day of November immediately preceding the date of its reconstitution” ; and

(iv) in sub-section (3), for the word ‘ performed ’ the word ‘ discharged ’ and for the words ‘ by such persons ’ the words ‘ by such person or persons ’ shall be substituted.

38. After section 45 of the said Act, the following sections shall be inserted, namely :—

“ 45-A. (1) For all or any of the reasons specified in sub-section (1) of section 45, the Local Government may, by notification published in the prescribed manner, instead of dissolving a panchayat and reconstituting it, supersede it for a specified period not exceeding one year :

Provided that the Local Government shall not supersede a portion only of the panchayat.

(2) Before publishing a notification under sub-section (1), the Local Government shall follow the procedure laid down in sub-section (1-A) of section 45.

(3) The supersession of a panchayat shall, if no other date and time are fixed in the said notification, take effect from noon on the date of publication thereof and thereupon all the members of the panchayat, including its president and vice-president, shall forthwith be deemed to have vacated their offices.

(4) On or before the expiry of the period of supersession notified under sub-section (1), the Local Government may, by notification published in the prescribed manner and for reasons to be stated therein, postpone the reconstitution of the panchayat for a further period not exceeding six months or, notwithstanding anything contained in this when payable.

90. For section 101 of the said Act, the following section shall be substituted, namely :—

Substitution of new section for section 101,
Madras Act
XIV of 1920.

" 101. (1) When any house has been vacant for sixty or more consecutive days in any half-year, the president of the panchayat shall remit so much, not exceeding one-half of the amount of the tax, as is proportionate to the number of days during which the house was vacant in the half-year.

Vacancy
remission.

(2) Every demand for remission under sub-section (1) shall be made during the half-year in respect of which the remission is sought or in the following half-year and not afterwards.

(3) (a) No demand for such remission shall be entertained unless the owner of the house or his agent has previously thereto given notice to the president of the house being vacant and the period in respect of which the remission is made shall be calculated from the date of delivery of such notice.

(b) Every such notice shall expire with the half-year during which it is so delivered and shall have no effect thereafter."

91. After section 101 of the said Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely :—

Insertion of new section 101-A in Madras Act XIV of 1920.

Obligation of transferor and transferee to give notice of transfer.

" 101-A. (1) Whenever the title of any person, primarily liable to the payment of house-tax on any house, to or over such house is transferred, the person whose title is transferred and the person to whom the same shall be transferred, shall within three months after the execution of the instrument of transfer or after its registration if it be registered, or after the transfer is effected if no instrument be executed, give notice of such transfer to the president of the panchayat.

(2) In the event of the death of any person primarily liable as aforesaid, the person to whom the title of the deceased shall be transferred, as heir or otherwise, shall give written notice of such transfer to the president within one year from the death of the deceased.

(3) The notice to be given under this section shall be in such form as the president may direct and the transferee or the person to whom the title passes, as the case may be, shall, if so required, be bound to produce before the president any documents evidencing the transfer or succession.

(4) Every person who makes a transfer as aforesaid without giving such notice to the president shall, in addition to any other liability which he incurs through such neglect, continue liable for the payment of house-tax assessed on the house transferred until he gives notice or until the transfer shall have been recorded in the village registers, but nothing in this section shall be held to affect the liability of the transferee for the payment of the said tax."

Substitution of new section for section 102, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

Owner's obligation to give notice of construction, reconstruction or demolition of building:

92. For section 102 of the said Act, the following section shall be substituted, namely :—

"102. (1) (a) If any house in a village is constructed or reconstructed, the owner shall give notice thereof to the president of the panchayat within fifteen days from the date of completion or occupation of the house, whichever is earlier

(b) If such date falls within the last two months of a half-year, the owner shall, subject to notice being given under clause (a), be entitled to a remission of the whole of the tax or enhanced tax, as the case may be, payable in respect of the house for that half-year.

(c) If such date falls within the first four months of a half-year, the owner shall, subject to notice being given under clause (a), be entitled to a remission of so much not exceeding a half of the tax or enhanced tax, if the case may be, payable in respect of the house for that half-year as is proportionate to the number of days in that half-year preceding such date.

(2) (a) If any house in a village is demolished or destroyed, the owner shall, until notice thereof is given to the president, be liable at his discretion for the payment of the tax which would have been payable had the house not been demolished or destroyed.

(b) If such notice is given within the first two months of a half-year, the owner shall be entitled to a remission of the whole of the tax payable in respect of the house for that half-year.

(c) If such notice is given within the last four months of a half-year, the owner shall be entitled to a remission of so much not exceeding a half of the tax payable in respect of the house for that half-year as is proportionate to the number of days in that half-year preceding the demolition or destruction as the case may be."

93. After section 102 of the said Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

Insertion of new section 102-A in Madras Act XIV of 1920.

"102-A. (1) If any area is included within a village the owner of every house in such area shall—

Remission of tax in areas included or excluded in the middle of a half-year.

(a) if the date of such inclusion falls within the last two months of a half-year, not be liable to pay any house-tax in respect thereof for that half year; and

(b) if such date falls within the first four months of a half-year, be entitled to a remission of so much not exceeding a half of the house-tax payable in respect thereof for that half-year as is proportionate to the number of days in that half-year preceding such date.

(2) If any area is excluded from a village the owner of every house in such area shall be entitled—

(a) if the date of such exclusion falls within the first two months of a half-year, to a remission of the whole of the house-tax payable in respect thereof for that half-year; and

(b) if such date falls within the last four months of a half-year, to a remission of so much not exceeding a half of the house-tax payable in respect thereof for that half-year as is proportionate to the number of days in that half-year preceding such date.

(3) No remission shall be granted under sub-section (2) in respect of any house unless an application for such remission is made to the president within three months from the date of the exclusion of the area in which the house is situated."

94. In section 103 of the said Act—

(i) in the first sentence—

(a) for the words 'union board' the word 'panchayat' and for the words 'in union' the words 'in the village' shall be substituted; and

(b) the words 'or occupier' shall be omitted; and

section 166,
Madras
Act XIV of 1920.

Licensing of motor vehicles plying for hire and motor lorries.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, the president of a district board may grant a licence for a motor vehicle to be used for hire partly within the limits of the district and partly within the limits of any municipality attached thereto for this purpose by the Local Government by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette. When such licence is granted, the district board shall pay to the municipal council concerned such proportion of the fee received for the grant of such licence as the Local Government may, by general or special order, determine.

(3) The district board may, with the previous approval of the Local Government, make regulations determining the rates of fares for passengers and of freight for goods carried in such vehicles and specifying the other conditions on which licences under sub-sections (1) and (2) may be granted.

(4) Every licence granted under sub-section (1) or (2) shall expire at the end of the year in which it is granted.

(5) (a) Any person aggrieved by an order passed under sub-section (1) or (2) may appeal against such order to the district board.

(b) The period of limitation for such appeal shall be—

(i) where the appeal is fifteen days from the date of communication of the order to the applicant; and

(ii) where the appeal is thirty days from the date of publication of the order on the notice board of the district board.

(6) The Local Government may, either generally or in any particular case, make such order or give such directions as they may deem fit in respect of licences governed by sub-section (2)."

145. In sections 168 and 169 of the said Act, for the words 'taluk board' wherever they occur, the word 'panchayat' shall be substituted.

146. Section 170 of the said Act shall be omitted.

147. For section 171 of the said Act, the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

"171. (1) No person shall open a new private market or continue to keep open a private market unless he obtains from the panchayat a licence to do so.

(2) Application for such licence shall be made by the owner of the place in respect of which the licence is sought not less than six weeks before such place is opened as a market or before the commencement of the year for which the licence is sought, as the case may be.

(3) The panchayat shall, as regards private markets already lawfully established, and may at its discretion as regards new private markets, grant the licence applied for, subject to such regulations as to

202. In rule 5 of the said Schedule IV—

Amendment of rule 5 of Schedule IV, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

(i) in sub-rule (1), for the words ‘A local board’ the words ‘The president of a panchayat’ shall be substituted and the words ‘the companies tax’ shall be omitted;

(ii) in sub-rule (2)—

(a) after the words ‘assessment books’ the words ‘and where detailed particulars relating to any assessment are kept in separate records the portion thereof containing such particulars’ shall be inserted; and

(b) for the words ‘any taxpayer’ the words ‘any person who pays any tax to the panchayat and such person or agent shall be entitled to take extracts, free of charge, from the said books and records’ shall be substituted.

(iii) in sub-rule (3), for the words 'any taxpayer' the words 'any person who pays any tax to the local board or his authorized agent' shall be substituted; and

(iv) for sub-rule (4), the following sub-rule shall be substituted, namely:—

"(4) (a) If at any time it appears to the panchayat that any company or person or any property has been inadequately assessed or inadvertently or improperly omitted from the assessment books relating to any tax, or that there is any clerical or arithmetical error in the said books, it may direct the president to amend the said books in such manner as it deems just or necessary:

Provided that no such direction shall be given, where it involves an increase in the assessment, unless the company or person concerned shall have been afforded a reasonable opportunity to show cause why the assessment books should not be amended as proposed.

(b) Such amendment shall be deemed to have taken effect on the earliest date either in the current half-year or in the two half-years immediately preceding it on which the circumstances justifying the amendment existed."

203. For rule 6 of the said Schedule IV, the following rule shall be substituted, namely:—

"6. The president shall, save as otherwise provided in this Act, determine the tax to which each company, person or property is liable:

Provided that in the case of taxes payable by the president, the assessment shall be made by the panchayat."

204. Rule 8 of the said Schedule IV and the heading thereof shall be omitted.

205. For rules 9, 10 and 11 of the said Schedule IV and the heading thereof, the following heading and rules shall be substituted, namely:—

"Assessment of the profession tax."

"9. (1) The classes into which companies and persons shall, for the purposes of assessment to the profession tax, be divided and the maximum half-yearly tax leviable on each class shall be as follows:—

Class.	Half-yearly income.		Maximum half-yearly tax.
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	A.
I More than	21,000		275	0
II	18,000	but not more than 21,000	225	0

VI	4,200		28	0
VII	3,000		20	0
VIII	1,800		10	0
IX	1,200		6	0
X	600		3	0
XI	300		1	8
XII	150		0	8

Substitution of new rule for rule 6, of Schedule IV, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

Repeal of rule 8 of Schedule IV, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

Substitution of new rules for rules 9, 10 and 11 of Schedule IV, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

(2) The district board shall determine the tax leviable on each class subject to the maximum specified in sub-rule (1):

Provided that the proportion which the tax on any class bears to the minimum income of that class shall in no case be smaller than the proportion which the tax on any lower class bears to the minimum income of such lower class.

(3) The district board may exempt any one or more of the classes in sub-rule (1) from liability to profession tax, but no class shall be exempted from liability when any lower class is liable to tax.

10. A company or person shall be deemed to have transacted business or exercised a profession, art, or calling or held an appointment within a local area if such company or person has an office or place of employment within such local area.

11. (1) Where a company or person transacts business in any half-year exclusively in the area of a single local board, the income of such company or person from the transaction of such business shall, for the purpose of levying profession tax under this Act during the half-year, be deemed to be—

(a) where income-tax is assessed on such company or person under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the year comprising the half-year, one-half of the amount at which the profits and gains of such business are computed under section 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the purpose of assessing the income-tax; and

(b) where the amount of the said profits and gains is not ascertainable, or where such company or person is not assessed to income-tax, such percentage as the Local Government may, subject to the approval of the Legislative Council, prescribe, of the turnover of the business transacted in the area of the local board during the half-year or where this is also unascertainable, during the corresponding half-year of the previous year.

(2) Where a company or person transacts business partly in the area of a local board and partly outside such area, the income of such company or person from the transaction of business in the area of the local board shall, for the purpose of levying profession tax under this Act, be deemed to be the percentage referred to in clause (b) of sub-rule (1) of the turnover of the business transacted in such area during the half-year or the corresponding half-year of the previous year, as the case may be.

(3) For the purposes of clause (b) of sub-rule (1) and sub-rule (2), the turnover of business in any local area means the aggregate money value of the goods produced, manufactured, purchased or sold or of any other business transacted in such local area.

Explanation.—In determining the turnover of business under this sub-rule—

(a) where the delivery of any goods on account of any purchase made by any company or person and the delivery on account of the sale thereof by the same company or person are both effected in the Presidency of Madras, only the latter transaction shall be taken into account;

(b) where the delivery of any goods on account of any purchase made by any company or person is effected in any place outside the said Presidency and the delivery on account of the sale thereof by the same company or person is effected in any place in the said Presidency, the latter transaction shall be taken into account; and

(c) where the delivery of any goods on account of any purchase made by any company or person is effected in any place in the said Presidency and the delivery on account of the sale thereof by the same company or person is effected in any place outside the said Presidency, the former transaction shall be taken into account.

11-A. (1) If, in the opinion of the president of the panchayat, profession tax is due from any company or person for any half-year, he shall serve a notice on such company or person either in that half-year or in the succeeding half-year requiring the company or person to furnish within such period, not being less than thirty days as may be specified in the notice, a return in the prescribed form showing the income on the basis of which, according to such company or person, it or he is liable to be assessed, to profession tax for the half-year in question. Thereupon it shall be open to such company or person to submit a return showing the income derived by it or him during the half-year for which profession tax is claimed or for the corresponding half-year of the previous year and produce any evidence on which the company or person may rely in support of the return made.

(2) If a return is made as required under sub-rule (1) and the president is satisfied that it is correct and complete, he shall levy the profession tax from such company or person on the basis of such return.

Explanation.—In cases not falling under clause (b) of sub-rule (1) or under sub-rule (2) of rule 11, if the company or person produces the notice of demand of income-tax served on it or him under section 29 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the year comprising the half-year in question, the president shall be bound to take one-half of the income mentioned in such notice of demand as the income derived from the sources on which profession tax is leviable under this Act, as the income on the said sources for the purposes of levying profession tax.

(3) If no return is made as required under sub-rule (1) or if the president is satisfied that any return so made is incorrect or incomplete, the president shall assign to the company or person the class in the scale appropriate to the half yearly income of such company or person as estimated by him.

(4) The president may, when classifying any company or person under sub-rule (3), do so on general considerations with reference to the nature and reputed value of the business transacted, the size and rental of residential and business premises, the quantity and number of articles dealt with, the number of persons employed and the income-tax paid to Government.

(5) The president shall not be entitled to call for the accounts of any company or person."

206. In the heading to rules 12 to 25 of the said Schedule IV, for the words 'tax on houses' the word 'house-tax' shall be substituted.

207. In rule 12 of the said Schedule IV, for the words 'union board' the word 'panchayat' and for the words 'on any principle other than that of valuation' the words 'on any other principle' shall be substituted.

Amendment of rule 12 of Schedule IV, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

208. In rule 13 of the said Schedule IV, after the words 'district board' the words 'or the Local Government' shall be inserted; and for the words 'rates of assessment under section 77', the words 'rates of tax under sections 75 and 77', for the word 'unions' the word 'villages' and for the words 'union board' the word 'panchayat' shall be substituted.

Amendment of rule 13 of Schedule IV, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

Amendment of rule 14 of Schedule IV, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

210. For rules 15 and 16 of the said Schedule IV, the following rules shall be substituted, namely:—

Substitution of new rules for rules 15 and 16 of Schedule IV, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

"15. When a proportionate rate has been adopted by the district board or the Local Government the panchayat may group the houses in the village in classes to simplify the calculation and collection of the tax. When a progressive rate has been adopted by the district board or the Local Government, it or they shall prescribe principles of classification (as that a certain sum, which shall be tax-free, shall be deducted from the assessment of each house, or that the progression shall be from a certain percentage in the lowest to a certain percentage in the highest class), but shall leave it to the panchayat to settle the precise number and limits of each class. The panchayat shall not in either case so arrange the classes as to affect substantially the principle of taxation, whether proportionate or progressive, adopted by the district board or the Local Government and the number of classes shall in no case be less than six.

"16. The panchayat may by resolution exempt any house in a village from the house-tax—

(i) if the value of the house does not exceed a sum specified in the resolution, such sum not being greater than two hundred and forty rupees if the tax is assessed on capital value or twelve rupees if the tax is assessed on annual value; and

(ii) (a) if the owner of the house does not own any other house in the village or

(b) if the aggregate capital or annual value of all the houses in the village owned by him does not exceed two hundred and forty rupees or twelve rupees, as the case may be."

211. For rule 18 of the said Schedule IV, the following rule shall be substituted, namely:—

Substitution of new rule for rule 18 of Schedule IV, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

"18. (1) In the case of

(i) any Government or railway building or

(ii) any building of a class not ordinarily let, the gross annual rent of which cannot, in the opinion of the president of the panchayat, be estimated, the capital value of the building shall be deemed to be the total of the estimated value of the land and the estimated present cost of erecting the building after deducting for depreciation a reasonable amount which shall in no case be less than ten per centum of such cost and its annual value shall be deemed to be six per centum of such total.

(2) Machinery and furniture shall be excluded from valuations under sub-rule (1)."

Amendment
of rule 19 of

"Using a motor vehicle for hire or a motor lorry, without licence or contrary to licence"; and

(iii) in the item relating to section 187, sub-section (1), in the third column for the words 'without a licence' the words 'without licence or contrary to licence' shall be substituted.

Amendment
of Schedule
IX, Madras Act XIV of 1920.

245. Schedule X to the said Act shall be omitted.

246. In first giving effect to the provisions of the said Act as amended by this Act, the said provisions shall be read subject to the rules in the Schedule.

THE SCHEDULE.

Transitional Provisions.

1. Every district board constituted under the said Act shall be deemed to be a district board constituted under the said Act as amended by this Act.

2. Every taluk board constituted under the said Act shall be deemed to be a taluk board constituted under the said Act as amended by this Act.

3. (1) Every local area which at the commencement of this Act is a union under the said Act or a village under the Madras Village Panchayat Act, 1920, shall be deemed to be a village under the said Act as amended by this Act.

(2) Every union board constituted under the said Act and every panchayat constituted under the Madras Village Panchayat Act, 1920, shall be deemed to be a panchayat constituted under the said Act as amended by this Act.

4. The number of members constituting the strength of every local board or panchayat existing on the date of the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to be the number of members declared by notification under section 10 of the said Act as amended by this Act:

Provided that where the strength of a union board or panchayat has been fixed at seven, the Local Government shall appoint an eighth member thereto as soon as this Act comes into force.

5. (1) All property, all rights of whatever kind used, enjoyed or possessed by, and all interests of whatever kind owned by or vested in or held in trust by, or for, any district, taluk or union board constituted under the said Act or any panchayat constituted under the Madras Village Panchayat Act, 1920, as well as all liabilities legally subsisting against such board or panchayat shall, on and from the date of the commencement of this Act and subject to such directions as the Local Government may, by general or special order, give in this behalf, pass to the district board, taluk board or panchayat concerned.

(2) All proceedings taken by any such district, taluk or union board under the said Act or by a panchayat under the Madras Village Panchayat Act, 1920, as the case may be, may in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of the said Act as amended by this Act, be continued under the said Act as so amended, by the district board, taluk board or panchayat concerned.

(3) Any remedy by way of application, suit or appeal which is provided by the said Act as amended by this Act shall be available in respect of proceedings under the said Act or under the Madras Village Panchayat Act, 1920, pending on the date of the commencement of this Act, as if the proceedings in respect of which the remedy is sought had been instituted after the commencement of this Act.

(4) If any dispute arises as to the local board to which any property, right, interest or liability is to pass under sub-rule (1), or by which any proceeding is to be continued under sub-rule (2), or to or against which any remedy is to be available under sub-rule (3), the question shall be referred to the Local Government whose decision shall be final.

6. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the said Act or in this Act—

(a) (i) the members of every district or taluk board holding office on the date of the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to have been elected members of the district or taluk board constituted under the said Act as amended by this Act and their term of office shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 54 and sections 56, 57 and 59 of the said Act as amended by this Act, extend to or expire on such date as the Local Government may fix and the Local Government shall cause elections to be held so that the newly elected members of the district or taluk board may come into office on the date fixed for the retirement of the old members; and

(ii) the members of every union board or panchayat holding office on the date of the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to have been elected members of the panchayat constituted under the said Act as amended by this Act, and their term of office shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 54 and sections 56, Schedule.

57 and 59 of the said Act as amended by this Act, extend to, or expire on, such date as the Local Government may fix and the Local Government shall cause elections to be held so that the newly elected members of the panchayat may come into office on the date fixed for the retirement of the old members;

(b) the Local Government may, from time to time, postpone any date fixed by them under clause (a) and fix another date in lieu thereof;

(c) the president and vice-president of the district board or taluk board and the president of the union board or panchayat holding office on the date of the commencement of this Act shall, subject to the provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2) of section 15, section 43 and section 44 of the said Act as amended by this Act hold office as president or vice-president of the district board, the taluk board or the panchayat, as the case may be, up to, or vacate office on, the date fixed under clause (a) or (b);

(d) a meeting of the newly elected members of the district board, taluk board or panchayat shall be held on or as soon as may be after the said date, on a day and at a time fixed by the Local Government or such other authority as may be empowered by them in this behalf, for the election of the president and vice-president of the local board;

(e) the term of office of the newly elected members of the district board, taluk board or panchayat or of the members elected in their places at casual vacancies shall expire at the end of three years, if the date fixed under clause (a) or (b) is the first day of November and in other cases at the end of three years from the first day of November immediately preceding such date; and

(f) any date fixed under sub-clause (a) or (b) shall not be later than one year from the date of the commencement of this Act.

(2) (a) Any vacancy in the office of president or vice-president of a local board which is in existence on the date of the commencement of this Act or which occurs before the date fixed under clause (a) or (b) of sub-rule (1) shall be filled by election by the local board.

(b) Any vacancy in the office of an appointed member of a local board shall be filled by appointment by the Local Government and in that of an elected member of a local board by election under the provisions of the said Act or of the Madras Village Panchayat Act, 1920, as the case may be, as amended by sections 47, 48, 50 and 51 of this Act.

(c) Any person elected or appointed as president, vice-president or member of a local board under clause (a) or (b) of this sub-rule shall hold office only up to the date fixed under clause (a) or (b) of sub-rule (1).

Explanation.—The office of president, vice-president, or member of a local board to which no person had at any time prior to the commencement of this Act been elected or appointed including the office of vice-president of a panchayat created by this Act shall be deemed to be vacant on the date of the commencement of this Act within the meaning of this sub-rule.

7. Any action taken by any authorities before the commencement of this Act for taking which action new authorities are substituted by, or under, the said Act as amended by this Act, shall, unless inconsistent therewith, be deemed to have been taken by such new authorities, unless and until superseded by action taken by them.

8. Subject to the provisions of section 7 of the said Act as amended by this Act the Local Government may, by notification published in the prescribed manner, fix the strength of any district board, taluk board or panchayat constituted under the said Act as amended by this Act at such number as they may think fit, with effect from the date fixed under clause (a) or (b) of sub-rule (1) of rule 6.

9. The land-cess levied under section 78 of the said Act as amended by this Act for the fasli year in which this Act is brought into force shall be distributed among district boards, taluk boards, panchayats and the committees constituted under section 114-A of the said Act as amended by this Act in such manner as the Local Government may, by general or special order, direct.

10. Any tax which was being levied by any panchayat on the date of the commencement of this Act under clause (a) or (b) of sub-section (1) of section 26 of the Madras Village Panchayat Act, 1920, shall continue to be levied for the year in which this Act is brought into force and for such further period, if any, as the Local Government may, by general or special order, declare to be necessary and may be recovered in the manner provided for the recovery of taxes in the rules in Schedule IV to the said Act as amended by this Act.

11. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in rule 3 of Schedule V to the said Act as amended by this Act, the Local Government may, as soon as may be after the passing of this Act, classify roads, choultries, hospitals and dispensaries, libraries, markets and fairs and festivals in the manner mentioned in the said rule 3 and such classification shall come into effect on the date of the commencement of this Act.

(2) Any classification made under this rule may, after the commencement of this Act, be altered under the said rule 3.

12. If any difficulty arises as to the first constitution or reconstitution of any local board after the commencement of this Act or otherwise in first giving effect to the provisions of this Act or of the said Act as amended by this Act, the Local Government, as occasion may require, may by order do anything which appears to them necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty.

THE MALABAR TENANCY ACT, 1930.

ACT NO. XIV OF 1930.

[18th November, 1930.]

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is necessary and expedient to define, declare, alter and amend, to the extent, in the manner, and for the purposes herein-after appearing, the law relating to landlord and tenant in the district of Malabar;

AND WHEREAS the previous sanction of the Governor-General has been obtained to the passing of this Act; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

PRELIMINARY.

Short title.

1. (1) This Act may be called "THE MALABAR TENANCY ACT, 1929."

Local extent.

(2) It extends to the whole of the district of Malabar.

Commencement.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Local Government may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, appoint:

Provided that in all suits for eviction instituted after the 30th July 1929 and pending in the court of first instance on the date when this Act comes into force, which would have been governed by the provisions of this Act had it been in force at the time of their institution, the rights and obligations of the parties concerned shall be regulated by the provisions of this Act.

Exemptions.

2. Nothing in this Act shall apply to

(1) lands transferred by a landlord for selling timber or for fugitive cultivation or for planting tea, coffee, rubber, cinchona or any other special crop prescribed by a rule made by the Local Government, or the erection of any building for the purpose of or ancillary to, the cultivation of such crop, or the preparation of the same for the market;

Provided that no rule under this clause shall affect any land in respect of which any cultivating verumpattamdar has a right of fixity of tenure under this Act or any customary verumpattamdar, kanamdar or kuzhikanamdar has a right of renewal under this Act, so long as such rights subsist; or

(2) lands on which pepper is the principal crop, or

(3) any building owned by a landlord including a house, shop or warehouse, and the site thereof, together with the garden or land appurtenant thereto.

CHAPTER I.—DEFINITIONS.

Definitions.

3. In this Act, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) 'Agricultural year' means the year commencing with the 15th March in any calendar year and ending with the 14th March of the following calendar year, or the year between such other dates as the Collector may specify in that behalf, by notification in the District Gazette, for the whole or any part of the district of Malabar;

'Agricultural year.'

(b) 'Court' means the Civil Court having jurisdiction under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, to entertain a suit for the possession of the holding or part thereof to which any legal proceeding under this Act relates;

'Court.'

(c) 'Cultivate', with its grammatical variations, means cultivate either solely by one's own labour or with the help of the labour of the members of one's tarwad or family, or of hired labourers or both, or direct or supervise cultivation by such members or hired labourers, jointly or separately, provided that such members or hired labourers have not agreed to pay or take any fixed proportion of the produce of the land they cultivate as compensation for being allowed to cultivate it or as remuneration for cultivating it;

'Cultivate.'

(d) 'Dry land' means a land which is neither a 'wet land' nor a 'garden land';

'Dry land.'

(e) 'Eviction' means the recovery of possession of land from a tenant and includes the redemption of a kanam;

(g) 'Garden land' means any land used principally for growing fruit-bearing trees;

'Garden land.'

(h) 'Holding' means a parcel or parcels of land held under a single engagement by a tenant from a landlord and shall include any portion of a holding as above defined, which the landlord and the tenant may agree to treat as a separate holding;

'Holding.'

(i) (1) the word 'improvement' shall have the same meaning as it has in the Improvements Act;

'Improvement.'

(2) 'Improvements Act' means the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act, 1899;

'Improvements Act.'

(j) 'Intermediary' means any person who, not being a janmi, has an interest in land, and is entitled, by reason of such interest, to possession thereof, but has transferred such possession to others;

'Intermediary.'

(k) 'Janmi' means a person entitled to the absolute proprietorship of land and includes a trustee in respect thereof;

'Janmi.'

(l) 'Kanam' means the transfer for consideration in money or in kind or in both by a landlord of an interest in specific immovable property to another (called the 'kanamdar') for the latter's enjoyment, the incidents of which transfer include

'Kanam.'

(1) a right in the transferee to hold the said property liable for the consideration paid by him or due to him which consideration is called 'kanartham';

(2) the liability of the transferor to pay to the transferee interest on the kanartham;

(3) the payment of 'michavaram' by the transferee;

(4) the right of the transferee to enjoy the said property for twelve years or any other period; and

(5) the liability of the transferee to pay a renewal fee to the transferor, if the transferee is permitted to enjoy the said property for a further period after the termination of the original period;

'Kudiyiruppu.' (m) (1) 'Kudiyiruppu' means and includes the site of any residential building, the site or sites of other buildings appurtenant thereto, such other lands as are necessary for the convenient enjoyment of such residential building, and the easements attached thereto;

'Separate kudiyiruppu.' (2) 'Separate kudiyiruppu' means a kudiyiruppu which is the sole property comprised in a holding;

'Separable kudiyiruppu.' (3) 'Separable kudiyiruppu' means a kudiyiruppu which is included with other property in a holding and which is not necessary for the convenient enjoyment, as usual, of any other part of the holding;

'Kuzhikanam.' (n) 'Kuzhikanam' means and includes a transfer by a landlord to another (called the kuzhikanamdar) of garden lands or of other lands or of both, with the fruit-bearing trees, if any, standing thereon at the time of the transfer, for the enjoyment of those trees and for the purpose of planting such fruit-bearing trees thereon, the incidents of which transfer include (1) the right of the transferee to enjoy the lands for twelve years or for any other period, and (2) the liability of the transferee to pay a renewal fee to the transferor, if the transferee is permitted to enjoy the said lands for a further period after the termination of the original period;

'Landlord.' (o) 'Landlord' means a person under whom a tenant holds and to whom he is liable to pay rent or michavaram, and includes a janmi;

'Melcharth.' (p) 'Melcharth' means the transfer by the landlord of part of his interest in any land held by his tenant by which the transferee is entitled to evict such tenant;

'Michavaram.' (q) 'Michavaram' means whatever is agreed by a kanamdar in a kanam deed to be paid periodically, in money or in kind or in both, to or on behalf of the janmi;

'Pay.' (r) 'Pay', with its grammatical variations, includes deliver;

'Prescribed.' (s) 'Prescribed' means prescribed by rules made under this Act;

'Rent.' (u) 'Rent' means whatever is lawfully payable in money or in kind or in both, to a person entitled to the use or occupation of a land, by another, permitted by the person so entitled, to have the use or occupation of the said land, for any purpose, on the understanding, express or implied, that the person so permitted would pay consideration for such use or occupation;

'Tenant.' (v) 'Tenant' means any person who has paid or has agreed to pay rent, or other consideration, for his being allowed by another, to enjoy the land of the latter, and includes an intermediary, a kanamdar, a kuzhikanamdar, and a verumpattamdar of any description;

'Verumpattamdar.' (w) (1) 'Verumpattamdar' means a tenant other than a kanamdar or kuzhikanamdar of a holding, for agricultural purposes, which includes wet lands, and may or may not include other lands;

'Cultivating verumpattamdar.' (2) 'Cultivating verumpattamdar' in respect of a holding means any verumpattamdar who, not being a janmi, intermediary or customary verumpattamdar of that holding has, expressly or impliedly, contracted to cultivate the lands in that holding, either as a tenant-at-will or during a fixed term, and actually cultivates the same;

(3) 'Customary verumpattamdar' means any verumpattamdar who is entitled by custom of the locality in which the land is situate to possession of the said land for a definite period of years and for whose continuance thereon after the termination of that period, for a further period, a renewal fee has to be paid to the landlord as an incident of the tenure; and

(x) 'Wet land' means land which is adapted for the cultivation of paddy.

'Customary verumpattamdar.'

'Wet land.'

CHAPTER II—FAIR RENTS.

4. In this Chapter—

(a) 'seed required' means the quantity of seed customarily deemed to be required, and

(b) 'gross produce' in respect of wet lands means the produce obtained after paying the expenses of reaping.

Interpretation clause.

5. Fair rent in the case of dry lands converted into wet by the tenant's labour shall be—

(a) for a period of twenty years from the year in which the first wet crop is raised on the land, one-fifth of the difference between the annual gross paddy produce of the land and three times the seed required for the said land for an agricultural year; and

(b) after the expiration of the said period of twenty years, one-fifth of the difference between the annual gross paddy produce of the land and two and a half times the seed required for the said land for an agricultural year.

Fair rent of dry lands converted into wet by tenant's labour.

6. In the case of wet lands not falling under the previous section, fair rent shall be two-thirds of the difference between one-third of the gross paddy produce of the land for the three years immediately previous to the date on which fair rent is to be ascertained and two and a half times the seed required for the said land for an agricultural year:

Provided that

(i) if, in any particular year, no crop at all is raised, or only a dry crop is raised on a land registered in the registers of the Government as a single-crop land, the produce shall be deemed to be the estimated produce of a single paddy crop; and

(ii) in the case of lands registered as double-crop lands in the said registers, account shall be taken as though two paddy crops have been harvested, irrespective of the number and the kind of the crops raised, and of the fact that no crop whatever is raised in any particular year on such lands.

Fair rent of other wet lands:

7. (1) In the case of garden lands, fair rent shall be a share, ascertained under sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) of this section, of one-third of the gross produce for the three years immediately previous to the date on which fair rent is to be ascertained.

Fair rent of garden lands.

(2) As regards coconut trees in respect of which the landlord is bound to pay compensation under the Improvements Act in case of eviction, the share shall be one-fifth of the said one-third, of only the nuts included in such produce and, as regards trees in respect of which he is not bound to pay such compensation the share shall be two-fifths of the said one-third:

Provided that where a coconut tree has been let for tapping, its produce of nuts for the purposes of this sub-section during the said three years shall be deemed to be the same as the produce of nuts during the three years of a tree of a similar description and with similar advantages in the neighbourhood which has not been let for tapping ;

(3) As regards areca trees and pepper vines where pepper is not the principal crop on the land in respect of which the landlord is bound to pay compensation under the Improvements Act in case of eviction, the share shall be one-sixth of the said one-third of only the nuts and pepper included in such produce, and as regards trees and pepper vines in respect of which he is not bound to pay such compensation, the share shall be one-third of the said one-third ;

(4) Nothing shall be payable (i) for the minor produce of coconut or areca trees such as leaves, fibre, etc., whether such compensation is payable or not in respect of the said trees, or (ii) for the produce of other classes of fruit-bearing trees such as jack, mango, tamarind, palmyra and cashewnut.

8. Fair rent in the case of dry lands shall be three times the assessment payable in respect thereof per annum.

9. (a) In the case of lands situated within the limits of any municipality and not built or planted upon, or on which no crop is grown, the fair rent shall be the rent paid or agreed to be paid in respect of similar lands, of the same extent, in the neighbourhood ;

(b) In the case of other lands situated within the said limits, the fair rent shall be the fair rent determined under sections 5 to 8, or the fair rent determined under sub-section (a) of this section, whichever is higher.

CHAPTER III.—CULTIVATING VERUMPATTAMDARS.

10. Notwithstanding any contract to the contrary entered into whether before or after the coming into force of this Act, every cultivating verumpattamdar shall have fixity of tenure in respect of his holding as hereinafter provided, and shall not be evicted therefrom except as provided in this Act.

11. Any cultivating verumpattamdar or his immediate landlord may apply to the court in the form prescribed for fixing the extent of the holding, the fair rent in respect of it, the instalments, if any, in which it shall be payable and the date or dates when the fair rent or the instalments thereof shall be payable.

12. On the receipt of an application under section 11, the court shall issue notice to all the parties concerned and after enquiry determine by an order—

(i) the extent of the holding ;

(ii) the fair rent that is payable in respect of it ;

(iii) the instalments, if any, in which the fair rent shall be payable ; and

(iv) the date or dates on which the said rent or instalments shall be payable.

13. (1) A landlord may, at any time, by notice in writing, call upon his cultivating verumpattamdar, at the latter's option

(a) to pay one year's fair rent of the holding in advance, or

(b) to furnish security for the said fair rent, or Fair rent of dry lands.

Fair rent of lands within municipal limits.

Cultivating verumpattamdar's right to fixity of tenure.

Application to court for fixing extent of holding, fair rent, etc.

Procedure on receipt of the application.

Landlord's right to advance of one year's fair rent or security for such fair rent.

(c) to pay a portion of the said fair rent in advance and furnish security for the balance.

(2) If, within a period of six months from the date of the service of notice upon him under sub-section (1), the cultivating verumpattamdar fails to pay the advance or furnish the security demanded by the landlord, the landlord may apply to the court, in the form prescribed, for an order to direct the cultivating verumpattamdar, at the latter's option—

(a) to pay one year's fair rent of the holding in advance, or

(b) to furnish security for the said fair rent, or

(c) to pay a portion of the said fair rent in advance and furnish security for the balance.

(3) On the receipt of an application under sub-section (2), the court shall issue notice to the cultivating verumpattamdar and, if satisfied after inquiry that the tenant has not complied with any of the provisions of sub-section (2), order the cultivating verumpattamdar, at the latter's option—

(a) to pay one year's fair rent of the holding in advance, or

(b) to furnish security for the said fair rent, or

(c) to pay a portion of the said fair rent in advance and furnish security for the balance, within such date as the court may fix.

(4) Where the cultivating verumpattamdar has already paid a portion of one year's fair rent of the holding in advance, or furnished security for a portion of the said fair rent, the provisions of sub-sections (1) to (3) shall apply in respect of the balance of such fair rent.

(5) Any advance of fair rent paid by a cultivating verumpattamdar to his landlord, whether before or after a demand under sub-section (1) or deposited by him for such payment under clause (c) of sub-section (4) of section 15, shall bear interest at six per cent. per annum from the date of payment or from the date of service of notice of such deposit through court, as the case may be.

14. No suit for eviction of a cultivating verumpattamdar from his holding shall lie at the instance of his landlord except on the following grounds :—

(1) that the tenant has wilfully denied the title of the landlord before the date of such suit;

Explanation.—A denial of the landlord's title under a bona fide mistake of fact is not wilful within the meaning of this clause;

(2) that the tenant has intentionally and wilfully committed such acts of waste as are calculated to impair materially and permanently the value or utility of the holding for agricultural purposes;

(3) that the tenant has not paid, within three months after the due date, the whole or any portion of the rent due in respect of the holding;

(4) that the tenant has collusively allowed a stranger to encroach on the holding or part thereof adversely to the interests of the landlord;

(5) that, at the end of an agricultural year, the landlord requires the holding bona fide for his own cultivation or for that of any member of his family or tarwad or tavazhi who has proprietary and beneficial interest therein :

(6) that, at the end of an agricultural year, the landlord requires the holding or part thereof bona fide for building purposes for himself or any member of his family or tarwad or tavazhi who has a proprietary and beneficial interest therein ;

(7) that the tenant has not complied with the order of the court under sub-section (3) of section 13 :

Provided that in cases falling under clauses (4) and (6) where only a part of the holding has been encroached upon or is required, as the case may be, the eviction shall be from such part of the holding only.

Explanation.—In the case of a landlord governed by a law other than the Marumakkattayam law, the wife or husband and the children of the landlord shall be deemed to be members of the landlord's family having a proprietary and beneficial interest in the holding.

Tenant's right to sue for restoration of possession of land in certain cases.

15. (1) In any case in which eviction has been obtained on the ground specified in clause (5) of section 14, subject to the provisions of section 43, if the landlord who has obtained such eviction transfers any of the lands to any person on any kind of lease or mortgage with possession or on kanam, kuzhikanam or verumpattam within six years of such eviction, the cultivating verumpattamdar shall be entitled to sue for the restoration to him of the possession of all the lands from which he was evicted and to hold them with all the rights and subject to all the liabilities of a cultivating verumpattamdar.

(2) In any case in which eviction has been obtained on the ground specified in clause (6) of section 14, the cultivating verumpattamdar shall be entitled to the right of suit conferred by sub-section (1) not only under the circumstances mentioned therein but also if the building for constructing which the eviction was obtained is not erected on the lands within six years of the eviction.

(3) In any suit in which eviction is claimed on the ground specified in clause (3) of section 14, if the tenant deposits in court, for payment to the plaintiff in the suit, (i) the amount of rent due with interest thereon at the contract rate, if any, (ii) interest on the principal amount of the rent due at twelve per cent. per annum from the date of suit up to the date of deposit, and (iii) the costs of the plaintiff up to that date, the court shall dismiss the suit.

(4) In any suit in which eviction is claimed on the ground specified in clause (7) of section 14, if the tenant—

(i) (a) deposits in court for payment to the plaintiff in the suit one year's fair rent of the holding in advance or furnishes security for the same or deposits in court for such payment a portion of such fair rent and furnishes security for the remainder, or

(b) where he has already paid a portion of the said fair rent or furnished security for a portion thereof, deposits in court for payment to the plaintiff the balance of the said fair rent or furnishes security for such balance or deposits in court for such payment a portion of such balance and furnishes security for the remainder ; and

(ii) deposits in court for payment to the plaintiff the costs of the latter up to the date of deposit ; the court shall dismiss the suit.

CHAPTER IV.—RENEWALS.

16. A customary verumpattamdar shall, on the expiry of the verumpattam lease under which he holds, be entitled to claim and his immediate landlord shall be bound to grant a renewal, enuring for a period of twelve years, of the same, on payment to him, as renewal fee, of three times the balance of the annual fair rent of the lands covered by the verumpattam lease after deducting both the annual rent payable under the previous lease and the annual Government revenue in cases where the revenue is payable by such customary verumpattamdar.

Customary verumpattamdar's right to claim renewal and the renewal fee to be paid by him.

17. (a) A kanamdar shall, on the expiry of the kanam under which he holds, be entitled to claim and his immediate landlord shall be bound to grant a renewal, enuring for a period of twelve years, of the same on payment, as renewal fee, of two and one-fourth times the balance of the annual fair rent of the lands covered by the kanam after deducting (1) the annual revenue payable on the kanam property to the Government, if payable by the kanamdar under the kanam deed, (2) the annual interest on the kanartham, and (3) the annual michavaram payable under the previous kanam.

Kanamdar's right to claim renewal and the renewal fee to be paid by him.

(b) When neither the rate of interest nor the amount of interest per annum nor the sum total of the annual revenue payable on the kanam property to Government by the kanamdar, and the amount of interest per annum, is specified in the kanam deed, interest shall, for the purposes of sub-section (a), be calculated—

(1) In North Malabar—at five per cent. per annum, and

(2) In other places—at twelve per cent. per annum when the kanartham does not exceed one thousand rupees; at nine per cent. per annum subject to a minimum of one hundred and twenty rupees per annum when it exceeds one thousand rupees but does not exceed three thousand rupees; and at six per cent. per annum subject to a minimum of two hundred and seventy rupees if it exceeds three thousand rupees:

Provided that, when any usage governing kanam transactions fixes a rate of interest lower than what is provided for in this sub-section, the interest shall be calculated at such rate.

(c) Nothing in this section shall apply to a kanam

(i) where the kanartham exceeds in South Malabar, sixty per cent. and in North Malabar, forty per cent., of the value of the janmi's rights in the holding, or

(ii) where all the lands covered by the kanam are dry lands.

Explanation I—For the purpose of sub-sections (b) and (c), 'North Malabar' means the taluks of Chirakkal, Kottayam, Kurumbranad and Wynaad; and 'South Malabar' means the other taluks in the district of Malabar.

Explanation II—For the purpose of sub-section (c), the janmi's rights in the holding shall be valued at twenty times the excess of the annual fair rent of the holding over the annual revenue payable thereon to Government—

(1) in the case of a kanam existing on the date of the commencement of this Act, on such date and

(2) in the case of a kanam created after the commencement of this Act, on the date of the kanam.

Cultivating kuzhikanamdar's right to claim renewal and the renewal fee to be paid by him.

18. (1) A cultivating kuzhikanamdar shall, on the expiry of the kuzhikanam under which he holds, be entitled to claim and his immediate landlord shall be bound to grant a renewal, enuring for a period of twelve years, of the same, on payment, as renewal fee, of the total of one-fourth of the annual gross produce of the fruit-bearing trees and pepper vines where pepper is not the principal crop in the holding, belonging to the cultivating kuzhikanamdar and one-half of the annual gross produce of the other fruit-bearing trees and pepper vines where pepper is not the principal crop in the holding.

Intermediary's right to claim renewal of kuzhikanam and the renewal fee to be paid by him.

(2) Any intermediary of the kuzhikanam shall, on the expiry of the kuzhikanam under which he holds, be entitled to claim and his immediate landlord shall be bound to grant a renewal, enuring for twelve years, of the same, on payment, as renewal fee, of the total of one-fourth of the annual gross produce of the fruit-bearing trees and pepper vines where pepper is not the principal crop in the holding, belonging to the intermediary and all the tenants below him including the cultivating kuzhikanamdar and one-half of the annual gross produce of the other fruit-bearing trees and pepper vines where pepper is not the principal crop in the holding.

Explanation.—For the purpose of this section, the annual gross produce shall be deemed to be equivalent to a third of the total nuts, fruits and pepper produced during the immediately preceding three years, and where a coconut tree has been let for tapping its produce of nuts for the purposes of this section shall be deemed to be the same as the produce of nuts of a tree of a similar description and with similar advantages in the neighbourhood which has not been so let.

Time within which renewal fee is payable.

19. Subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, the renewal fee fixed under sections 16 to 18 shall be payable as follows :—

(a) In case the tenant is not a cultivating kuzhikanamdar, two-thirds of the renewal fee in the year next after the termination of the expiring transaction and one-third in the next following year,

(b) in case he is a cultivating kuzhikanamdar, one-third of the renewal fee in the year next after the termination of the expiring kuzhikanam and the rest in five equal consecutive annual instalments in the years following the said year.

Grounds for eviction of customary verumpattamdar, kuzhikanamdar or kanamdar.

20. No suit for eviction of a customary verumpattamdar, kuzhikanamdar or kanamdar shall lie at the instance of his landlord except on the following grounds :—

(1) that the tenant has wilfully denied the title of the landlord before the date of such suit.

Explanation.—A denial of the landlord's title under a bona fide mistake of fact is not wilful within the meaning of this clause;

(2) that the tenant has intentionally and wilfully committed such acts of waste as are calculated to impair materially and permanently the value or utility of the holding for agricultural purposes;

(3) that the period of the verumpattam, kuzhikanam or kanam, as the case may be, has expired and no renewal has been obtained;

(4) that the tenant has collusively allowed a stranger to encroach on the holding or part thereof adversely to the interests of the landlord;

(5) that the period of the verumpattam, kanam or kuzhikanam, as the case may be, has expired and there has been no renewal and the landlord requires the holding bona fide for his own cultivation or for that of any member of his family or tarwad or tavazhi who has a proprietary and beneficial interest therein ;

(6) that the period of the verumpattam, kanam or kuzhikanam, as the case may be, has expired and there has been no renewal and the landlord requires the holding or part thereof bona fide for building purposes for himself or any member of his family or tarwad or tavazhi who has a proprietary and beneficial interest therein :

Provided that in cases falling under clauses (4) and (6) where only a part of the holding has been encroached upon or is required, as the case may be, the eviction shall be from such part of the holding only.

Explanation.—In the case of a landlord governed by a law other than the Marumakkattayam law, the wife or husband and the children of the landlord shall be deemed to be members of the landlord's family having a proprietary and beneficial interest in the holding.

21. (1) In any case in which eviction is obtained on the ground specified in clause (5) of section 20, subject to the provisions of section 43 if the landlord who obtains such eviction transfers any of the lands to any person on any kind of lease or mortgage with possession or on kanam, kuzhikanam or verumpattam within six years of such eviction, the tenant shall be entitled to sue for the restoration to him of the possession of all the lands from which he was evicted and to hold them with all the rights and subject to all the liabilities of a tenant.

Tenant's right to sue for restoration of possession of land in certain cases.

(2) In any case in which eviction has been obtained on the ground specified in clause (6) of section 20, the tenant shall be entitled to the right of suit conferred by sub-section (1) not only under the circumstances mentioned therein but also if the building for constructing which the eviction was obtained is not erected on the lands within six years of such eviction.

22. (1) Notwithstanding any contract to the contrary (whether made before or after the commencement of this Act), a customary verumpattamdar, kanamdar or kuzhikanamdar shall be entitled to apply to the court in the form prescribed for the execution of a renewal deed.

Tenant's right to apply to court for execution of renewal deed.

(2) On the receipt of an application under sub-section (1) notice thereof shall be sent to the landlord from whom such renewal is claimed, fixing a date for the trial of the application.

23. (a) On the date fixed under sub-section (2) of section 22 the court shall call upon the said landlord to state in writing whether he desires to evict the tenant on any of the grounds referred to in section 20 except ground (3) and take the holding ; and if the landlord expresses his intention to do so the application shall be dismissed.

Dismissal of application if landlord desires to evict the tenant on certain grounds.

(b) If the landlord sues to evict the tenant on ground (3) referred to in section 20, the tenant shall be entitled to make an application or a fresh application under sub-section (1) of section 22 and the suit shall abide and follow the result of such application.

24. If the application is not dismissed under sub-section (a) of section 23, the court shall Procedure on application under section 22.

(1) determine

(a) the amount to be paid as renewal fee under sections 16, 17 or 18,

Order to deposit renewal fee,
etc.

(b) the amount of each instalment under section 19, and
(c) the date on which each instalment was or will become due ;
and

(2) make an order for the deposit, within a time to be fixed in the said order, of

(a) the instalment or instalments due on or before the date of the order,

(b) interest at 12 per cent. per annum on each such instalment from the date on which it became due or from the date of the commencement of this Act, whichever is later, and

(c) all arrears of rent with interest thereon at the contract rate, if any, found due up to the date of the order if the landlord claims that any arrears of rent are due :

Provided that no such interest on a renewal fee or a portion thereof shall be payable if the landlord has refused a valid tender of the renewal fee payable under section 19 or if an application under sub-section (1) of section 22 has been dismissed under section 23 (a).

Effect of failure to deposit renewal fee,
etc.

25. (1) If the deposit ordered under clause (ii) of section 24 is not made within the time fixed thereunder, the court shall dismiss the application, and such dismissal shall bar any subsequent application under section 22 by the tenant or those claiming under him.

(2). If the said deposit is made within the time fixed, the court shall Execution of renewal deed

by court.

(i) execute a renewal deed containing such terms as it determines to be the terms of the expiring transaction and as are in accordance with law,

(ii) pass, where necessary, an order directing the person entitled to the renewal deed to pay the landlord a further instalment or instalments of the renewal fee in accordance with section 19 with interest at six per cent per annum on each instalment from the due date to the date of payment, and

(iii) make such order as to costs of the proceedings before it as it may deem fit.

Legal effect of renewal deed executed
by court.

(3) A renewal deed executed by the court under sub-section (2) shall have the same effect as if it was executed by the landlord himself, and shall entitle the tenant to enjoy the holding for twelve years from the date of the termination of the previous lease, kanam or kuzhikanam.

Effect of renewal on the rights of landlord's landlord.

26. (1) In case there are one or more intermediaries between the janmi and the tenant in actual possession of the holding and a renewal has been granted by an intermediary (hereinafter referred to in this section as the grantor) after this Act comes into force or by the court on his behalf under sub-section (2) of section 25, if the grantor on his own part does not obtain renewal for any reason, the person to whom such renewal has been granted (hereinafter referred to as the grantee) shall be deemed to have contracted with the intermediary or the janmi who is the landlord next above the grantor, for the period of the renewal given to the grantee, on the terms on which the grantee had contracted with the grantor or on the terms on which the grantor had contracted with such next landlord, at such landlord's choice, and there shall be deemed to be privity of contract between the grantee and such landlord subject to the right of the janmi or the landlord to evict the tenant on the grounds specified in section 20 other than the ground of non-payment of renewal fee.

(2) The intermediary or the janmi who is the landlord next above the grantor shall be entitled to sue the grantor for the proportionate share of any renewal fee which he might have obtained from the grantee for the period between the termination of such grantee's interest in the land and that of the period for which he had given renewal.

Illustration.—A, a janmi, grants a kuzhikanam to B in 1928. B grants a sub-kuzhikanam to C in 1932. In 1940 B gets a renewal from A and in 1944 he grants a renewal to C. In 1952 B does not take a renewal. C shall be deemed to have contracted with A on the terms of his own renewal of 1944 or, on the terms of B's renewal of 1940 at A's option, and A will not be entitled to evict C till 1956.

If, in the above illustration, B had taken a renewal fee of Rs. 120 from C when granting the renewal in 1944, B shall be liable to pay A one-third of Rs. 120 for the period between 1952, when his interest ends and 1956 up to which C is entitled to stay on the land.

27. Where in respect of any customary verumpattam, kanam, or kuzhikanam holding for which a renewal deed has been executed under the provisions of this chapter, if (a) no application is filed under subsection (1) of section 22 or (b) within six months after the termination of the period for which the said renewal deed endures and of every period of twelve years succeeding such period, the tenant does not secure a renewal on such terms as may be agreed to between him and the landlord, he may be deemed at the option of such landlord to have agreed to a renewal on the terms of the said deed for twelve years from the date of the termination of each of the said periods, and the said landlord shall be entitled to sue the said tenant for the renewal fee specified in sections 16, 17 or 18.

Right of landlord to sue for renewal fee in certain cases.

CHAPTER V.—RENTS.

28. Every cultivating verumpattamdar shall be bound to pay to his immediate landlord, fair rent as fixed under section 12.

Provided that in the case of a cultivating verumpattamdar's holding existing at the date on which this Act comes into force, the rent payable on such holding shall be deemed to be fair rent for a period of twelve years from such date, unless the rent fixed under section 12 has been taken into account for the purpose of calculating the renewal fee under Chapter IV and there has been a renewal, in which case, such rent shall be payable by the cultivating verumpattamdar from the date of renewal.

Cultivating verumpattamdar's liability to pay fair rent.

29. (1) As between any landlord and a cultivating verumpattamdar, the latter shall be liable for (a) the revenue payable to the Government as also the local cesses, on any land on which no rent is payable under this Act; and (b) any special charges leviable by the Government for special or additional crops raised on the wet lands.

Liability for revenue as between landlord and cultivating verumpattamdar.

(2) In the case of lands (within the limits of a municipality) in respect of which the landlord has obtained fair rent as ascertained under section 9, he shall bear the tax levied by the municipality for such land to the extent such rent is higher than what is payable therefor under sections 5 to 8; but otherwise the landlord and the tenant shall bear such tax in equal shares.

Liability for municipal tax.

rent.

30. (1) At any time after the expiry of twenty years from the date of an order fixing the fair rent in respect of a holding or from the date of the last confirmation or revision of such order under this section, the cultivating verumpattamdar or his immediate landlord shall be entitled to apply, in the form prescribed, to the court for the revision of such order so far as the fair rent is concerned.

(2) On the receipt of such an application, the court shall, after notice to the landlord or the cultivating verumpattamdar, as the case may be, determine the fair rent and confirm or revise the order.

(3) If the order is revised, the cultivating verumpattamdar shall be bound to pay rent according to the revised order from the beginning of the agricultural year next after the date of such revision.

Application to court to fix fair rent in case of kuzhi-kanam.

31. (1) A cultivating kuzhikanamdar shall, when making an application under section 22, or the landlord may, when answering such an application, apply to the court dealing with the application to determine the fair rent payable in respect of the holding to which the application relates, and the court shall make an order determining the same before disposing of the said application, and for the period for which the renewal deed executed on the said application enures, the parties thereto shall be bound to pay and receive rent so determined by the court.

(2) Nothing in this section shall, in respect of the trees which had begun to bear fruits at or before the time of the execution of the deed referred to in clause (i) hereunder,

(i) entitle the landlord to claim or compel the tenant to pay, for a period of twelve years from the commencement of this Act, more than the rent specified in the latest kuzhikanam deed, original or renewed, executed before the commencement of this Act, or

(ii) authorize any claim for an enhancement at the time of each renewal by more than twelve and a half per cent. of such rent.

Invalidity of claim for dues other than fair rent and renewal fee fixed under Act.

32. Notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, express or implied, whether entered into before or after the coming into force of this Act, no cultivating verumpattamdar shall be liable to pay to his landlord anything more or anything else than the fair rent and no tenant who is entitled to claim a renewal under this Act shall for the purpose of obtaining the renewal be liable to pay as renewal fee anything more or anything else than the renewal fee provided by this Act.

CHAPTER VI.—KUDIYIRUPPU.

Tenant's right to offer to purchase landlord's right in kudiyiruppu.

33. In any suit for eviction relating wholly or in part to a kudi yiruppu, which has been in the continuous occupation of a tenant or the members of his family for ten years on the date of the institution of the said suit, such tenant shall be entitled to offer to purchase the rights in the kudi yiruppu, of the landlord who seeks to evict him, at the market price on the said date.

Procedure to enforce the offer.

34. (1) An offer under section 33 shall be in writing and shall contain the particulars prescribed.

(2) Notice of such offer, with a copy thereof, shall be served on the landlord at the expense of the tenant, fixing a date for the landlord to accept or decline the offer.

Points to be determined by court on the offer.

(3) After such notice has been served on the landlord,

(a) if the landlord unconditionally accepts the offer, the court shall record such acceptance and order the tenant to deposit in court the price specified in his offer together with the arrears, if any, of rent, michavaram, the revenue payable to the Government by the tenant and the local cesses payable by the tenant in respect of such kudiyruppu and on such deposit the landlord shall be paid the amount deposited; and the suit, in so far as it relates to the eviction from the kudiyruppu, shall be dismissed; and

(b) if the landlord, for any reason, does not unconditionally accept the offer, the court shall decide whether the kudiyruppu is a separate or separable kudiyruppu.

(4) If the decision under clause (b) of sub-section (3) is that the kudiyruppu is separate or separable, the court shall proceed further and determine the market price of the landlord's rights as it stood on the date fixed for acceptance of the offer by the landlord and shall call upon the tenant to deposit the market price so settled together with the arrears referred to in clause (a) of sub-section (3), if any, on or before a date fixed by it in writing.

(5) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (4), the court, if it is satisfied that the tenant is too poor to pay the market price in a lump sum, may dispense with the deposit of the market price and order that the said price be paid to the landlord, with interest at six per cent. per annum, in as many annual instalments not exceeding twelve as the court may fix having regard to the means of the tenant, on condition that sufficient security is furnished by the tenant, for the regular payment of such instalments.

35. If the decision under sub-section (3) of section 34 is that the kudiyruppu is neither separate nor separable, or if the deposit called for under sub-section (4) of the said section is not made or if the security called for under sub-section (5) of that section is not given on or before the date so fixed, the court shall dispose of the suit for eviction referred to in section 33 as if no such offer had been made.

36. Upon the tenant making such deposit under sub-section (4) of section 34 or on security being given under sub-section (5) of that section together with the deposit of the arrears referred to in clause (a) of sub-section (3) of that section the suit referred to in section 33 in so far as it relates to the kudiyruppu, shall be dismissed.

37. The court in which a deposit is made under this chapter may in its discretion at the instance of any person interested in the sum deposited order that such deposit be invested in the manner referred to in section 32 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894.

38. The order or decree under section 36 shall operate as a sale to the tenant of the landlord's rights in the kudiyruppu subject to the condition that in the event of any sale of the kudiyruppu, subsequent to the said order or decree by the tenant, his heirs, executors, representatives in interest or assigns, or in execution of a decree against them, or by a receiver in insolvency, the person who, but for the provisions of this section, would be entitled to the landlord's rights in the said property at the time of such subsequent sale, shall be entitled to claim pre-emption.

CHAPTER VII.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Tenant's rights to be heritable and alienable.

Tenant's right to avail himself of the provisions of Chapter III or IV in certain cases.

Renewal fees and arrears of michavaram and rent to be a first charge on holding after revenue.

Right of holder of decree for eviction of kuzhikanamdar to apply for sale of holding.

Right of tenant to bid at such sale.

Limitation for suits for restoration under sections 15 and 21.

Persons entitled to restoration.

39. Subject to the provisions of this Act, all rights which a tenant has in his holding shall be heritable and alienable.

40. (1) Any tenant whose holding has been granted on melcharth may when sued for eviction avail himself of the provisions of Chapter III or Chapter IV.

(2) No holder of a melcharth can when suing for eviction claim possession on grounds (5) and (6) of section 14 or on grounds (5) and (6) of section 20 as the case may be.

41. Renewal fees and arrears of michavaram or rent due to the landlord together with interest, if any, payable on the same shall be a charge on the interest of the person from whom they are due in the holding in respect of which they are due as at the time of the creation of such interest, and such charge shall have priority over all other charges on the same except the charge for the revenue and any dues thereon payable to Government or to a local authority and made a charge thereon by any law for the time being in force.

42. (1) A landlord who has obtained a decree for eviction in respect of a kuzhikanam, shall, in execution of such decree, be entitled to apply for the sale of the holding specified therein and of the improvements in respect of which compensation is awarded under the said decree, and for the payment to him of the balance of the sale price after deducting the amount of the said compensation.

(2) In case such an application is made by a landlord and a sale is held in pursuance of such application, the person to whom the said compensation has to be paid, shall be entitled to bid at the sale and set off the said compensation towards the sale price, and no deposit need be made by him at the sale except in so far as the price offered by him exceeds the said compensation.

43. (1) (a) A suit for restoration under sub-section (1) of section 15 or under sub-section (1) of section 21 shall be instituted within one year from the date of the transfer by the landlord.

(b) A suit for restoration under sub-section (2) of section 15 or under sub-section (2) of section 21 shall be instituted within one year from the expiry of the six years after the eviction.

(2) If there are intermediaries between the landlord who has obtained the eviction and the person who cultivates the land, all persons whose interests in the holding are terminated by the eviction, shall be entitled to be restored to the respective interests they had at the time of the eviction as if there had been no eviction, and in case any one of them does not claim restoration the tenant next below him shall be entitled to claim such restoration and hold the land.

(a) on the terms on which the person not claiming the land held it, if he and the claimant belonged to the same class, or

(b) on the terms on which the claimant held it if he and the person who did not claim the land belonged to different classes; provided always that, if the landlord obtaining eviction had paid any value for improvements to any one whose interests were so terminated, the person claiming restoration shall, before such restoration is effected, be bound to return to the landlord the value so paid in respect of the improvements existing at the time of the restoration together with the kanartham, if any, and also the value of the improvements, if any, effected bona fide by the landlord between the date of eviction and the date of suit.

Explanation.—For the purpose of this section, a kanamdar, an intermediary in respect of a kuzhikanam, a cultivating kuzhikanamdar, a verumpattamdar and a customary verumpattamdar belong each to a different class. A cultivating kanamdar, a non-cultivating kanamdar and a kanamdar under a kanamdar belong to the same class; and a cultivating verumpattamdar and a non-cultivating verumpattamdar belong to the same class.

Illustration.—If A is the janmi, B and C are kanamdar and sub-kanamdar and D, verumpattamdar cultivating the land, if A the janmi exercises his power to take the land for his own use and then inducts some other tenant into it within six years, B shall be entitled to claim as against A to be restored to his previous rights. But on B getting such restoration, C shall be entitled to claim as against B to step in as sub-kanamdar, and D shall be entitled to claim the verumpattamdar's rights as against C. If, however, B does not want to claim restoration, C shall be entitled to claim as against A to be put in the position of B the kanamdar, and D shall be entitled to claim as against C to be treated as his cultivating verumpattamdar. If both B and C do not claim restoration, D shall be entitled to claim as against A to be a verumpattamdar on the terms on which he held the land under C.

44. A kanamdar or kuzhikanamdar or customary verumpattamdar who has obtained a renewal or a cultivating verumpattamdar may, at the end of any agricultural year, surrender his holding to his immediate landlord, by a registered document.

Surrender of holdings.

Such a landlord shall not be bound to accept the surrender unless notice has been given in writing to him by the tenant of his intention to do so three months prior to the date of the expiry of the agricultural year, and unless it be in respect of the entire holding, and the whole of the arrears of the michavaram or rent is also tendered at the time of the surrender. Nor shall the landlord be bound to refund the kanartham or to pay the value of the improvements which he would have been otherwise bound to pay under the Improvements Act.

45. If (1) a cultivating kanamdar who consents to be redeemed or (2) a cultivating customary verumpattamdar who gives up his rights as such, desires to continue on the holding as a cultivating verumpattamdar, the provisions of this Act shall apply to him as if he were a cultivating verumpattamdar.

Applicability of Act to redeemed kanamdara, etc.

46. Every deed by which a lease, kanam or kuzhikanam is created or renewed and its counterpart shall contain Contents of lease, kanam or kuzhikanam deeds.

(a) the name, if any, and description and extent of the holding;

(b) the Government revenue and local cesses, if any, payable in respect of the holding;

(c) the amount of rent or michavaram payable in respect of the holding;

(d) the relation that any para or other measure according to which the rent or michavaram has to be paid, bears to the capacity of the Macleod seer;

(e) if it is a kanam deed,

(i) the kanartham; and
 (ii) the rate or the amount of interest payable in respect of the said kanartham; and

(f) the renewal fee, if any, levied, and in case no such fee was levied, a statement to that effect.

Tenant's
obtain receipts and forms of such receipts.

47. (1) Every tenant paying any rent or michavaram shall be entitled to receive and the landlord shall be bound to grant a receipt specifying

- (a) a description of the holding in respect of which it was paid;
- (b) the date of payment;
- (c) the amount paid;
- (d) the period to which the amount paid relates; and
- (e) the arrears, if any, remaining due from the tenant after the said payment.

A reference to the date and registration number of the document under which the holding is held and also the name of the sub-registration district in which the said holding is situate, shall be deemed to be a sufficient description of the holding for the purpose of this sub-section.

(2) In the absence of the particulars specified in clause (e) of sub-section (1), the burden of proving that the tenant is bound to pay any arrears of rent or michavaram which had accrued previous to the date of the receipt, shall be on the person claiming such arrears.

(3) If any landlord fails to grant a receipt as provided under sub-section (1), the tenant shall be entitled to send by money order, after deducting the charges for doing so,

- (i) the money, if the rent or michavaram is payable in money; and
- (ii) the money value of the rent or michavaram, if it is payable in kind.

Stamp and registration fees to be paid by the tenant.

48. The stamp and registration charges for any lease or kanam or kuzhikanam deed and for the counterpart of such lease, kanam or kuzhikanam shall be borne by the tenant.

apply to evictions under Act.

49. The provisions of the Improvements Act shall apply in all cases of eviction to which this Act applies.

Code of Civil Procedure 1908 to apply to proceedings under Act.

50. (1) The procedure provided as regards suits in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, including Orders XXXVIII, XXXIX and XL of the first schedule, shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings relating to applications under this Act.

Appeals.

(2) Appeals shall lie from orders made under sections 12, 23, 25, 30, 31, 34, 35 and 36, as if they were decrees in suits.

Collector to publish list of prices.

51. (1) The Collector of the district shall in the month of April of every year publish in the Malabar District Gazette the average market price of paddy, coconut, arecanut and pepper, at each taluk headquarters, for the twelve complete months preceding the date of publication.

(2) Where any rent, michavaram or renewal fee payable under this Act is paid or is to be paid in money, in whole or in part, paddy, coconuts, arecanuts and pepper, shall be valued, for the purpose of determining the sum due, at the average market price of the previous five years as published under sub-section (1).

52. Where the rent is payable in kind, it shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be delivered at the landlord's granary in the village in which the holding is situated; or at such other granary within three miles of the village as may be provided in that behalf by the landlord.

Place of delivery of
